ABOUT THE REDBOOK

The Redbook of the University of Louisville is the basic governance document of the University. The Redbook covers: Organization and Operation of the Board of Trustees and the Board of Overseers; Organization and Operation of the University Administration; Organization and Governance of the Academic Programs; Faculty Personnel Policies; Staff Organization and Personnel Policies; Student Governance and Student Affairs Administration; and Revision of The Redbook.

Some University-wide policies and procedures are outlined in The Redbook. Other policies and procedures mentioned in The Redbook are not part of The Redbook but must be consistent with The Redbook. An example of this is the "Staff Handbook"; it is not a part of The Redbook, but The Redbook is the controlling document and all portions of the Staff Handbook must be consistent with the provisions of The Redbook. The Redbook also refers to "addenda to The Redbook" which is a part of The Redbook. (See link to "Addenda" below)

For information about any policies, procedures, or documents mentioned in The Redbook, contact the appropriate unit or the Office of University Counsel (852-6981) for assistance.

Note: If the document is a policy of a particular unit, contact the dean's office of that unit.

THE REDBOOK

FOREWORD

Is there anyone who can say it began then and is ended now?

Certainly, it must have begun with the first pupil and the first teacher. Forget, then, any attempt at genesis. For reference, however, one must list the dates of direct Board of Trustees action as 19 July 1976, when the Board directed a complete review and revision of the University of Louisville governance documents by a new Redbook Committee with representative membership from all interests and areas of our diverse university family. Another date of decision, 17 October 1977, was that of Trustee acceptance of the Redbook Committee recommendations and the establishment of a standing Governance Committee with trustee, administration, faculty, staff, and student membership.

Such dates plus the one of publication may be chronological milestones, but the countless meetings, the hundreds of people, and the thousands of hours are the energies that have actually produced this document. There is no author, there are numerous authors. Not one single word, phrase, nor thought herein can correctly be attributed to any individual--for each is attributable to numerous persons.

The governance of a university is a complicated maze of related and unrelated matters, responsibilities, purposes, and services. No mere compendium nor even a compilation can suffice in the outlining and delineation of such an organization with its required rules, regulations, relationships, and restrictions.

From at least the days of Padua in the near anarchy of a university, those responsible have sought for clearer delineation of governance involving the inextricable relationships of administration, faculty, students, and staff--as well as the public to whom we are all responsible.

As for this book and all of its addenda and attachments, or for anything, three years of concerted effort is a long time. Never once during that period did one hear a discordant voice from those involved. Each person from whatever interest remained even-tempered and most cooperative even though never faltering in his or her own responsibility to express different viewpoints. So many people have been involved, how can one express adequate thanks? On the other hand, does it really matter? In reality, isn't it only the University itself that actually counts?

Is then the work ended and the job complete as well as perfect? Hardly! Whatever else the future may hold or lead us to, all involved may be assured that we, while learning more than we have contributed, have indeed come a long way, even though our efforts are not perfect and the changing, restless world will not let them be finished. If this document is to serve the University, it must be a living instrument always subject to change—hopefully for the best.

We then submit our efforts believing we have done the best we could do but knowing full well others to follow will do better.

That is as it should be. That is progress.

Carroll L. Witten, M.D.
Chairman, Governance Committee Member, Board of Trustees

PREFACE
The Redbook is the official statement of the organizational structure, the rules of governance and procedures, and the University-wide policies of the University of Louisville.

It is the final, published authority under the Board of Trustees, and its policies and procedures and those contained in the resolutions of the Board govern all actions of the University and all relations with the University, including administrative and faculty contracts.

The Addenda to The Redbook will be those items cited in The Redbook as requiring additional information or supporting documents. The Addenda will be revised as specified in The Redbook itself or in the supplementary documents themselves. Revisions to the Addenda do not automatically require the approval of the Board of Trustees.

Official copies of The Redbook will be under the control of the University Counsel, who will allocate these copies to appropriate offices and libraries for proper reference, as instructed by the Governance Committee. The University Counsel will take such steps as are necessary to supervise the proper revision of these copies whenever The Redbook is amended as prescribed in Chapter Seven.

Article 1.1 The Board of Trustees

Sec. 1.1.1 Membership of the Board
Per KRS 164.821, the government of the University of Louisville is vested in a Board of Trustees appointed for a term set by law pursuant to Section 23 of the Constitution of Kentucky. The Board shall consist of thirteen total members, as follows: (a) ten (10) members appointed by the Governor, at least one (1) of whom shall be a graduate of the university; (b) one (1) member of the teaching faculty of the university who shall be the chief executive of the ranking unit of faculty government; (c) one (1) member of the permanent staff of the university who shall be chief executive of the staff senate; and (d) one (1) student member who shall be president of the student body during the appropriate academic year.

Sec. 1.1.2 Powers of the Board
In accordance with the statutory authority of the Commonwealth of Kentucky and implemented in the By-Laws of the Board of Trustees and the governmental procedures for the University, the Board of Trustees is the governing body of the University of Louisville. Within the limits set by the Federal and State Constitutions and federal and state law, the Board shall actively engage in policy making, be responsible for aiding the University to perform at a high level of excellence, adopt an annual budget and ensure that the financial resources of the University are sufficient to provide a sound educational program, and periodically evaluate the University’s progress in implementing its missions, goals, and objectives.

The Board of Trustees shall have the powers set forth in KRS 164.830, including the authority (i) to select, hire, regularly evaluate, and, when appropriate, suspend or remove the President of the University; (ii) to receive and administer University revenues; and (iii) to grant degrees to graduates of the University.
Sec. 1.1.3 Voting by the Board/Conflict of Interest

Each member of the Board of Trustees shall have a full and independent right to vote upon matters coming before the Board, pursuant to the procedures set out in the Board’s By-Laws. Per Section 5.1 of the Board’s By-Laws, all trustees shall disclose any known conflict of interest and shall avoid participating in any decision or advocating any subject matter before the Board in which the trustee, a business in which the trustee is an owner or an employee, or a member of the immediate family of a trustee has a conflict of interest. When a trustee learns that a business transaction presents a conflict of interest, that trustee must make an immediate, full disclosure to the Board of his or her interest in the subject and refrain from participating in any discussion of or decision on the issue.

The Chair of the Board of Trustees shall begin each meeting of the Board with the following statement: “As Chair, it is my responsibility to remind all members of the Board of their responsibility to avoid conflicts of interest and appearances of conflict of interest. Each member has received the agenda and related information for this Board of Trustees’ meeting. If any Board member knows of any conflict of interest or appearance of conflict of interest with respect to any matter coming before the Board of Trustees at this meeting, please identify the conflict or appearance of conflict of interest at this time.”

All trustee conflict of interest statements or similar disclosure documents and any conflict of interest or appearance of a conflict of interest identified by a trustee, whether at a meeting or otherwise, shall be referred to the Board’s governance committee for review. If a determination is made that further action is needed, a recommendation for further action will be communicated to the involved trustee(s) and to the Board Chair. If a member of the governance committee has a substantial interest in the matter that has been disclosed, then the matter may instead be referred for review and recommendation to the Board’s Executive Committee or to an ad hoc committee of no less than three members of the Board of Trustees.

Sec. 1.1.4 Meetings of the Board

Regular, special, and emergency meetings of the Board shall be held as specified in the Board’s By-Laws.

Sec. 1.1.5 Officers and Committees of the Board

The officers of the Board of Trustees shall be a Chair, a Vice-Chair, a Secretary, and a Treasurer, and such other officers and assistant officers as the Board may appoint.
The Board shall have an Executive Committee and such other standing and ad hoc committees as established by the Board pursuant to its By-Laws.

Sec. 1.1.6 Suspension or Removal of University Personnel

A. Board action to suspend or remove University personnel is required only in those instances: (a) when the appointment of the person in question was approved by formal Board action – not by delegated authority to the President or others, or (b) when Board action is otherwise required pursuant to the provisions of this Redbook. Any person serving at the formal appointment of the Board in an administrative capacity may be suspended or removed from their administrative responsibilities by the President, except that such action is subject to ratification by the Board.

B. Removal of the President or a faculty member for incompetence, for neglect of or refusal to perform his or her duty, or for immoral conduct shall be taken in accordance with the minimum procedures as set out in KRS 164.360 and KRS 164.830. Additional procedures relating to the termination of faculty members are further set out in this Redbook.

Pursuant to state law and Article 3 of the Board’s By-Laws, individual trustees can be dismissed or, in compelling circumstances, the entire Board of Trustees removed for limited and appropriate reasons and by a fair process that provides for notice and the right to be heard.

The term administrator as used in this document shall refer to the Executive Vice President and University Provost, the Vice Presidents, the Deans, and those persons who are designated by the President as having unit- or university-wide administrative functions of substantial significance to the University. All such administrators shall be appointed by the Board of Trustees on the recommendation of the President and shall serve at the pleasure of the Board.

B. Faculty with Administrative Functions
Those persons with faculty rank, other than deans, who are responsible for the administration of academic units and subunits such as academic departments and divisions shall be classified in this document along with assistant and associate deans as faculty with administrative functions. They are appointed by the Board on the recommendation of the President and serve in their administrative roles at the pleasure of the Board.

C. Staff Officers with Administrative Functions
Those responsible for the administration of any University services who do not have faculty appointments and who do not report directly to the President or a vice president as described above shall be classified as staff officers with administrative functions. Sec. 2.3.2 Grievances of Administrators Administrators are not covered in their administrative roles by the grievance procedures for faculty or staff. If an administrator is aggrieved in his or her administrative role, such administrator is entitled to an informal hearing before his or her immediate superior, and if this is not satisfactory in resolving the grievance, to an informal hearing before the President or a designee. The decision of the President shall be final in all matters except the termination of service of such administrators, which is subject to ratification by the Board of Trustees.

Sec. 2.3.3 Termination of Service of Administrators

In termination of the administrative services of any individual serving at the pleasure of the Board, the following rules apply:

A. Administrators with faculty rank and faculty with administrative functions retain their position in the faculty in whatever rank and tenure status they hold at the time of their termination as administrators.

B. Administrators without faculty rank and with more than fifteen years of service to the University, if terminated in one position, may expect that every effort will be made by the University to provide for their continued service in another position which can make good use of their abilities and previous experience, though not necessarily at the same grade level as they have had in their immediate past position.

C. Administrators without faculty rank and with less than fifteen years of service will normally be separated from the University, but a transfer to another function is possible if a suitable arrangement can be worked out.

D. Nothing in the above provisions restrains the Board of Trustees from terminating the services of any administrator in any and all capacities in the University if such termination is for cause as defined in Section 4.5.3.A.

Sec. 2.3.4 Administrative Leave

It shall be the policy of the University to grant administrative leave to administrators who have served in that capacity for ten years or more. Such leave may be granted for a period of up to three months, no more frequently than every five years, by the President after consultation with the administrator's immediate superior.

Sec. 2.3.5 Retirement of Administrators

The University Congress shall be composed of all the members of the Administrative Council, the Faculty Senate, the Staff Senate, and the Student Senate. It shall meet on the call of the President either on the President's own initiative or upon petition from twenty members of each of at least two of the constituent bodies involved. The Congress shall not be a governing body, but it shall receive the President's Annual Report and it may advise the President informally on matters affecting all segments of the University. It shall not have elected officers or standing committees. The President or a designee shall preside and appoint ad hoc committees.

Article 2.5 University Policies and Procedures

Sec. 2.5.1 Academic Policy-Statement of Academic Freedom
Academic institutions in a democratic society exist for the pursuit of truth, the development and conservation of knowledge, the transmission of learning, and the enhancement of the general well-being of such society. Free inquiry and free expression are indispensable to the attainment of these goals. The University of Louisville is, therefore, committed to protecting the academic freedom of all members of the University community.

Freedom to learn and freedom to teach are inseparable facets of academic freedom. Students have a right to their own views on matters of opinion, rather than fact, and a right to express those views in appropriate ways without fear of arbitrary reaction or improper disclosure of such opinions outside the classroom.

Teachers are entitled to full freedom in research, publication, academic evaluation, and classroom expression. Academic freedom carries the corresponding responsibilities to be thoroughly prepared and well informed in their fields of knowledge and to be scrupulous in distinguishing between personal and professional judgments and between fact and opinion.

Membership in the academic community imposes on students, faculty, staff, administrators, and trustees of the University an obligation to adhere to standards of academic honesty, to respect the dignity of others, to acknowledge their right to express differing opinions, and to foster and defend intellectual honesty, freedom of inquiry and instruction, and free expression both on and off the campus.

Sec. 2.5.2 Administrative Procedure

A. Officers and employees of the University shall send any official recommendations and communications to their administrative superiors, who shall transmit them to the next higher officers with such comments and recommendation as they wish to make thereon.

B. Committees of any unit, division, institute, or department shall report to the official who appointed the committee. Where a committee is elected, the report shall be to the dean, director, or chair of the administrative entity and to the constituency in which the election was held, unless otherwise specified when the committee was established.

C. All recommendations and communications forwarded under this section shall be considered as preliminary and advisory opinions and privileged communications. When final action has been taken on any matter, all information relevant to the decision shall become part of the appropriate record.

Sec. 2.5.3 Intellectual Property Policies

Intellectual property policies of the University shall be those adopted by action of the Board of Trustees. Each person affected by the University's intellectual property policies shall be provided with a copy of these policies at the time of employment or matriculation and shall be bound by them, as they may be subsequently amended, as conditions of employment or enrollment at the University.

Sec. 2.5.4 Equal Opportunity Policy

Commitment to Equal Opportunity and Affirmative Action is the policy of the University of Louisville. To ensure that this policy is effective, personnel decisions must be reviewed by the Affirmative Action Office. All faculty, staff, and student body members who believe that their rights under this policy have been violated are entitled to bring the question of possible violation to the attention of the Affirmative Action Office for investigation and recommendation.
Sec. 2.5.5 Personnel Policies

All appointments to the University shall be made strictly on the basis of appropriate qualifications set forth in an approved job description. Personnel actions following the appropriate procedures set forth in this Redbook shall be final unless and until a procedural challenge has been upheld through the grievance process.

All appointments and personnel actions shall be made in accordance with federal, state, and local fair employment practice laws and in accordance with the University's affirmative action policy. The monitoring of affirmative action procedures pursuant to these policies shall be assigned to the Affirmative Action Office. The work performance of all supervisors will be evaluated on the basis of their equal opportunity efforts and results as well as other criteria. Its function shall be to assure full, good faith compliance with the University's obligations as a federal contractor which shall not discriminate on the basis of any factor forbidden by federal, state, or local fair employment practice laws. Informal overtures to the Affirmative Action Office or to grievance officers or the filing of a formal grievance shall not result in any form of harassment or retaliation.

Sec. 2.5.6 Archives and Records Policy

The University Archives and Records Center is the official repository for all University records and is responsible for the University's compliance with state and federal records laws, including those governing personal privacy; public access; micrographic, photographic, or electronic storage and reproduction; overall disposition; and destruction. The University Archivist shall serve as the official custodian of University records.

The University Archives and Records Center shall preserve proper and adequate documentation of University policies, decisions, procedures, functions, and essential transactions.

Sec. 2.5.7 Athletic Policies

Intercollegiate Athletics shall be under the purview of the Board of Trustees in conformity with the regulations of the athletic organizations with which the University is affiliated.

Sec. 2.5.8 Ethical Considerations

It is expected that every employee, in conducting the affairs of the University of Louisville, will comply with applicable federal, state, and local laws as well as the policies and procedures of the University of Louisville.
All employees of the University of Louisville who are members of occupations or professions having established standards of conduct shall, in addition to any obligations and responsibilities imposed by this document, be bound by the standards of conduct applicable to such occupations or professions. Violations of the above may result in disciplinary action in accordance with the provisions of the Redbook.

- The School of Music
- The Graduate School

With the exception of the University Libraries, the above academic units are authorized to recommend to the Board of Trustees the granting of appropriate degrees.

The University Libraries consist of all libraries located throughout the University except the Law Library, which is administratively responsible to the Dean of the School of Law.

Sec. 3.1.2 Establishment of New Academic Units
The establishment of any new academic unit requires formal consultation with the Faculty Senate and the specified faculties involved. The President will then make the appropriate recommendation to the Board of Trustees for final action.
Sec. 3.1.3 Organizational Outlines and Bylaws of Units

The Executive Vice President and University Provost shall submit each proposed unit bylaw document to the Faculty Senate for confirmation that it is in accordance with this document. It shall then be submitted to the President for review and recommendation to the Board of Trustees for final approval. It shall be included in Addenda to The Redbook. The President may approve amendments to unit bylaws approved by the faculty of the unit and the Faculty Senate which do not change governance or faculty rights. A copy of the approved documents shall be filed in the office of the Executive Vice President and University Provost and shall be given to each member of the unit faculty.

Article 3.2 Deans of Academic Units

Sec. 3.2.1 Appointment of Deans

A. All deans shall be appointed by the Board of Trustees on the recommendation of the President and shall serve at the pleasure of the Board. Deans may be removed at any time upon the recommendation of the President for any reason that is not illegal or arbitrary.

B. Each decanal search committee shall consist of an even number majority of faculty, half of whom shall be elected by the unit faculty, and the other half appointed by the Executive Vice President and University Provost or designee. After consultation with the unit faculty, the Executive Vice President and University Provost or designee shall also appoint non-faculty committee members to assure a broad-based search considering all of the unit's constituencies. A goal in constituting the committee shall be to reflect the diversity of the University community. The committee shall also include the Executive Vice President and University Provost, or designee, as a non-voting ex-officio member.

C. A simple majority of all dean's search committees shall be faculty. Each candidate shall be recommended by a two-thirds majority of all the members of the search committee. No one shall be appointed dean unless he or she qualifies for tenure and is, on appointment as dean, a tenured faculty member whose tenure has been recommended by the appropriate faculty of the University.

Sec. 3.2.2 Duties and Responsibilities of Deans

Deans shall be the educational and administrative heads of their units. They shall report to the Executive Vice President and University Provost, through whom they shall be responsible to the President for the administration of their units.

Specific duties and responsibilities in addition to the items set forth in this section shall be detailed in a job description which shall be approved by the President and the faculty of the unit and shall be attached to the bylaws of such unit. The deans of those units having extensive concurrent jurisdiction with other units involving faculty and curriculum or having as their major functions a service role, such as the University Libraries, must have job descriptions detailing these interrelationships approved by the President and the Faculty Senate and included in Addenda to The Redbook.

Sec. 3.2.3 Review of Service

A. Deans shall receive annual performance reviews from the Executive Vice President and University Provost, with a written summary prepared for both parties. Every five years, or more often if circumstances warrant, the administrative superior of the dean shall conduct a comprehensive review of the performance and overall effectiveness of the unit administration from the point of view of the University, and of the unit, being advised in the latter by a broad-based committee.

B. The decanal review committee shall consist of an even number majority of faculty, half of whom shall be elected by the unit faculty, and the other half appointed by the Executive Vice President and University Provost. After consultation with the unit faculty, the Executive Vice President and University Provost shall also appoint non-faculty committee members to assure a broad-based review considering all of the unit's constituencies. A goal in constituting the committee shall be to reflect the diversity of the University community. The committee shall also include the Executive Vice President and University Provost, or designee, as a non-voting ex-officio member.

C. The review committee shall study the effectiveness of the unit's administration since the original appointment of the dean or since the last review and shall recommend to the Executive Vice President and University Provost, giving the reasons for its conclusions, whether the incumbent shall be continued or be replaced. In reaching its conclusion, the review committee shall solicit the opinions of faculty, students, staff, and administrators and shall examine objective data regarding the progress of the unit. The committee shall maintain confidentiality of its information and minutes and be guided by Board policies related to reviews. The dean shall be provided the opportunity to respond to the draft report and submit additional information before the report and recommendation are made. In consultation with the Executive Vice President and University Provost, the committee shall establish its own objective criteria and procedures for evaluation. The findings of the committee shall be circulated only to the committee itself, the dean involved, and the appropriate University officials. Additional circulation must be authorized by the Board of Trustees. The criteria, procedures, and a substantive summary of the findings shall be circulated to the faculty of the unit involved. The summary shall be written by the committee in consultation with the Executive Vice President and University Provost or designee.

Sec. 3.2.4 Leaves of Absence

When the Executive Vice President and University Provost, vice presidents or deans leave their offices but continue their service in the University as faculty members, provided that the period of service in that position has been for at least five years, they shall be entitled to one full year of leave with full pay. Otherwise, Executive Vice President and University Provost, deans, and other academic administrators are eligible for sabbatical leaves on the same basis as all other faculty members.

Article 3.3 The Faculties of the Major Academic Units

Sec. 3.3.1 Membership and Appointment

All persons with full-time faculty appointments who are appointed for at least one year and a part of whose work for the current year is in a particular academic unit shall be members of its faculty except in the case of those units which define faculty membership differently in their bylaws.

The Board of Trustees shall be responsible for the appointment of all full-time faculty members. It may make these appointments on the recommendation of the President of the University or it may delegate appointing authority to the President. These appointments shall have been recommended to the President or President's designee by the dean of the unit after recommendation by the appropriate faculty or faculty committee, in conformity with Section 2.5.2.A. In departmentalized units, the dean's recommendation shall be made on the initiation of the departmental chair after recommendation by the departmental faculty or faculty committee. [Sentence added 25 June 2001] A majority of full-time faculty in any academic unit shall be probationary or tenured.

Except as otherwise provided, each faculty shall have general legislative powers over all matters pertaining to its own personnel policies, criteria, and procedures, to its own meetings, and to the admission requirements, curricula, instruction, examinations, and recommendations to the Board of Trustees for granting of degrees in its own academic unit. All such actions shall be consistent with enumerated policies of the Board of Trustees. For interdisciplinary degree programs and tracks, academic authority will be shared among the faculties of the participating units as specified in the Bylaws of the School of Interdisciplinary and Graduate Studies.

The Faculty Senate, after proceeding in the manner stated in Section 3.4.2.A may state its disapproval of any action of the faculty that seriously affects the general interest of the University, and may recommend appropriate action to the President as chief educational officer of the University.

Questions of academic jurisdiction between faculties of academic units shall be resolved by the President or President's designee in consultation with the Faculty Senate or affected faculty bodies.
Sec. 3.3.3 Faculty Meetings

The dean of each academic unit may at any time call a meeting of the unit faculty, but the dean shall be required to do so upon the written request of one-fourth of the members of that faculty, unless a lesser number is specified in the bylaws or actions of that faculty.

Minutes of all actions taken by a faculty shall be transmitted to the Office of the President and to the University Archives and shall be available for inspection.

Sec. 3.3.4 Bylaws of the Units

The faculty of each academic unit shall enact a set of bylaws by which the unit shall be governed. Those bylaws and all amendments shall be approved and preserved in the manner indicated in Section 3.1.3 of this Redbook.

Sec. 3.3.5 The Divisional or Departmental Officers

A. Appointment and Tenure

The chair of any division or department and the director of any institute or school within a unit shall be appointed by the Board of Trustees upon the recommendation of the dean after approval of the Executive Vice President and University Provost and President of the University. Such officers serve at the pleasure of the Board of Trustees and may be removed at any time upon the recommendation of the President.

B. Selection

1. Searches for divisional or departmental officers may be limited to internal candidates at the discretion of the dean. In such cases, the departmental faculty shall submit a slate of candidates to the dean, from which the dean may strike any candidates. Before making a recommendation, the dean shall seek the concurrence of the departmental faculty by one of two methods: Method 1: The departmental faculty may vote on all acceptable candidates. Method 2: The departmental faculty may vote on the candidate tentatively selected by the dean. When the dean and a majority of the departmental faculty concur on a candidate, the dean may recommend that person via the Executive Vice President and University Provost for approval by the President and Board of Trustees. If there is an impasse in this process, the dean and departmental faculty shall each submit written reports to the Executive Vice President and University Provost, who shall recommend a departmental officer to the President and Board of Trustees.

2. Searches for divisional or departmental officers open to both internal or external candidates shall be conducted by a search committee, the majority of whose members shall be full-time faculty of the unit involved. The candidate selected by the dean shall be acceptable to a majority of the departmental or divisional faculty. If there is an impasse in this process, the dean and departmental faculty shall each submit written reports to the Executive Vice President and University Provost, who shall recommend a departmental officer to the President and Board of Trustees.

C. Duties and Responsibilities

The officer of a department, division, institute or school within a unit shall be the educational and administrative head of that group. The chair or director of any department, school, institute, or division shall be immediately responsible to the dean of the unit for work and progress of the department or division. The faculty in each department, led by the department chair, shall develop a mission statement and specific goals and objectives for the department's academic mission, which shall be approved by the dean. Such officers shall be responsible for implementing the mission statement and specific goals and objectives through administration of faculty workload plans, space, equipment, staff, budgets, and other resources in the department, consistent with university policy and the law. In units participating in graduate education programs, the chair or director shall be responsible for executing graduate programs in accordance with the Minimum Guidelines for Graduate Education and appropriate unit guidelines. Policy matters relating to graduate student education will be coordinated with the Dean of the School of Interdisciplinary and Graduate Studies.

D. Evaluation and Review

1. The performance of all chairs and directors shall be reviewed annually by the dean with input from appropriate senior administrators and faculty. A written summary shall be prepared of each evaluation indicating compliance with policies and objectives.

2. After every five years of service, the performance and effectiveness of each chair or director shall be reviewed on a cumulative basis by a broad-based committee established with the concurrence of the departmental faculty. The officer under review shall be informed of the basis of all conclusions and offered an opportunity to respond before the report is completed. The chair or director may be retained or removed on the basis of a committee recommendation with which the departmental faculty and dean concur. In the event of an impasse on the outcome of a review, the dean and the departmental faculty shall each submit a report with that of the review committee to the Executive Vice President and University Provost for a final decision. All such reports are preliminary recommendations and shall be kept confidential. The criteria, procedures, and a substantive summary of the findings shall be made available in confidence to the faculty of the department or division involved. The summary shall be written by the committee in consultation with the dean or dean's designee.

3. Deans may conduct special reviews of administrative subordinates at any time as may be necessary to assure effective leadership and may recommend removal of a chair or director at any time for any reason that is not illegal or arbitrary.
A majority of departmental faculty may request a special review of a chair or director at any time. If, after consultation with the departmental faculty, the dean does not support such a request and the faculty do not recede from the request, the matter shall be referred to the Executive Vice President and University Provost for a decision after consultation with all parties.

Sec. 3.3.6 Postdoctoral Fellows and Researchers

Postdoctoral fellows and researchers are recognized as occupying a special category. The Executive Vice President for Research has the function to ensure that these appointments are made in the best academic interest of the fellows and researchers even though the formal appointments are made through the schools or colleges in whose budgets they are carried. Postdoctoral fellows' and researchers' appointments will be coordinated with the Executive Vice President for Research.

Article 3.4 Governing Bodies of the Faculty

Sec. 3.4.1 Assembly of the Faculty

A. Membership

The Assembly of the Faculty shall consist of all members of the faculty who hold full-time appointments at the University of Louisville.

B. Meetings

The Assembly of the Faculty may be convoked by the Office of the President. The Assembly shall also be convoked by the President upon the request of the Faculty Senate, thirty-five or more full-time faculty members, or the Board of Trustees. A quorum of the Assembly of the Faculty shall consist of such number of members as are present at any duly called meeting. The agenda for such an assembly shall be prepared by the Office of the President and shall include those items submitted by the group at whose initiative the assembly may have been called. Except in emergencies, the agenda shall be distributed ten days prior to the assembly. Only items listed on the agenda may be considered for final action.

C. Officers

The presiding officers of the Assembly of the Faculty shall be the President of the University or a designee.
D. Powers

Ultimate faculty authority resides in the Assembly of the Faculty. It is not contemplated that legislation will be initiated in the Assembly. Nor is it expected that decisions of the Faculty Senate will be reviewed routinely by the Assembly. It is understood that extraordinary and University-wide faculty matters may be referred to the Assembly. Such matters may include the establishment of policies relating to academic freedom or tenure, any major decision involving the economic welfare of the faculty, or modification of The Redbook. The approval of the Assembly of any matter passed by the Faculty Senate may be required by action of the Board of Trustees, of the President, or by written petition from thirty-five members of the Assembly to the Secretary of the Senate.

E. Quorum and Voting

A simple majority of those present and voting shall be sufficient to propose a substantive amendment or alternate proposal for any matter recommended by the Faculty Senate. In either case, the Senate may at its option adopt the amendment or alternate proposal or submit both its recommendation and the amendment or alternate proposal by mail ballot for final vote by the members of the Assembly of the Faculty.

1. A substantive amendment is defined as an amendment which changes the meaning of the original proposal.
2. An alternate proposal is defined as a proposal offered as a substitute for the original proposal.

Sec. 3.4.2 The Faculty Senate

A. Composition and Powers of the Faculty Senate

There shall be a University of Louisville Faculty Senate, which shall be the official representative of the faculty of the University and which shall be responsible for eliciting and expressing the opinions, suggestions, and recommendations of the faculty on all matters of concern to the faculty as a whole. The Faculty Senate shall be responsible for a continuing review of University policies and documents affecting the faculty and shall make recommendations concerning these matters, whenever appropriate, to the University administration.

The Faculty Senate shall adopt bylaws providing for such officers, committees, and meetings as are necessary for the performance of its functions.
The Faculty Senate shall have jurisdiction over all matters involving the educational policies of the University insofar as this jurisdiction is not reserved to the faculties of the academic units. The establishment or termination of any degree-granting program shall require action by the Board of Trustees and such proposal shall first be submitted to the Faculty Senate for a recommendation. The Faculty Senate may state its disapproval of any action of a faculty that seriously affects the general interest of the University and recommend appropriate action to the President as chief educational officer of the University. To disapprove any action of the faculty of an academic unit: (1) the action must seriously affect a general faculty interest of the University; (2) such unit faculty must be given an opportunity to be heard before action is taken; and (3) two-thirds of the membership of the Senate present must support the disapproval.

Each year, the Senate shall prepare and adopt a statement reviewing the academic program of the University and other concerns of the faculty and making appropriate recommendations.

B. Membership

The Faculty Senate shall consist of faculty representatives elected by the academic units listed in Section 3.1.1. The number of senators to be elected by the faculty of each unit will be determined by the application of a formula predetermined and established by the Faculty Senate. When the total voting membership of the Faculty Senate exceeds seventy, the Senate shall modify the numerical basis for faculty representatives so as to provide a lesser membership.

C. Rotation of Membership and Ex-officio Membership

Senators shall be elected by their unit faculties for terms of three years. The President, all vice presidents, and all deans of units shall be ex-officio non-voting members of the Senate and shall not be eligible to be elected as faculty representatives.

The Staff Senate and Student Senate shall each select from their respective memberships one ex-officio voting member and one ex-officio alternate member of the Faculty Senate. The alternate member shall have the right of the floor, but shall have no vote unless the voting member from that Senate is absent.

The Faculty Senate shall also include six voting members elected by the "part-time faculty," which for purposes of this provision only is defined as everyone who is under paid contract to teach courses for credit within an academic unit but who is not entitled to elect faculty representatives to the Faculty Senate under Section 3.4.2.B. Elections for these six members shall be conducted at a time and under procedures established by the Faculty Senate. [This paragraph revised by the Board of Trustees 11/25/02.]

Faculty Personnel Policies
Article 4.1 Faculty Appointments and Tenure

Sec. 4.1.1 Full-time Faculty Appointments

A. Nontenurable Full-Time Appointments
   1. Temporary Appointments
      Temporary appointments to the various academic ranks may be made for specifically limited time periods less than one year or for special purposes. In no case shall a temporary appointment or a renewal thereof result in the acquisition of tenure.
   2. Term Appointments
      a. Term faculty may be appointed for a contract period not to exceed 3 years. Such appointments shall not be tenurable. No term contract, continuation, or renewal shall result in the acquisition of tenure or imply renewal for subsequent terms.
      b. Term faculty appointments may be funded through general funds, restricted funds, or clinical revenues. In each unit, term appointments funded through general funds must number less than 50% of the total number of probationary and tenured appointments in that unit. (Please see Sec. 3.3.1)
      c. Unit documents shall specify the maximum term, criteria for appointment, procedures for evaluation and promotion, and governance franchise for nontenurable faculty.
      d. A nontenurable faculty member shall be eligible to apply for and be appointed to a tenurable position. The Executive Vice President and University Provost’s letter of appointment shall state whether and to what extent the new appointment shall consider time served in nontenurable status as prior service (Sec. 4.1.1.C.4).

B. Probationary Appointments
   1. Definition
      Probationary appointments shall be appointments of full-time faculty members without tenure other than those described in Sec. 4.1.2, provided, however, that no probationary appointment to the University shall extend beyond the period when tenure would normally be granted (Sec.
      4.2.2).
   2. Instructors
      Probationary appointments to the rank of instructor shall be for stipulated terms of one year each.
   3. Assistant and Associate Professors Probationary appointments to the rank of Assistant or Associate Professor shall be for stipulated terms not to exceed two years on the initial appointment, nor three years for appointments made thereafter.
4. Professors
Professors shall be awarded tenure if employed subsequent to the initial probationary appointment.

C. Tenure Appointments
1. Definition
Tenure is the right of certain full-time faculty personnel who hold academic rank to continuous full-time employment without reduction in academic rank until retirement or termination as provided in Sec. 4.5.3. Tenure is granted in an academic unit (Sec. 3.1.1) in accordance with the procedures established in Sec. 4.2.2.H.

2. Administrators
Administrative personnel who have acquired tenure are subject to the regulations herein on tenure and the provisions governing termination only in their capacities as faculty members.

3. Tenure Recommendations
Recommendations concerning the award or denial of tenure shall originate in the faculty of the academic unit in which tenure is to be granted.

4. Establishment of Tenure Date
For probationary appointments, the date of mandatory tenure and the number of years of previous full-time service to be counted toward acquisition of tenure shall be stipulated by the Executive Vice President and University Provost and agreed to in writing by the nominee before the appointment is made by the Board of Trustees.

Sec. 4.1.2 Part-time appointments
Part-time faculty shall be appointed by contract to teach specified courses or to engage in specified instruction, research or service less than full time for a designated period. No such appointment, continuation, or renewal thereof shall result in acquisition of tenure or implied renewal for subsequent periods. Part-time faculty may qualify for certain benefits as authorized by the University. Part-time faculty may be elected to the Faculty Senate and may be appointed or elected to University or unit committees as specified by contract, University or unit personnel documents. Such service shall be accounted for and recognized in the individual contract. Part-time faculty shall hold rank according to education and experience. Part-time faculty shall have an appeal process as provided for in the terms of appointment.

Deans may appoint or reappoint part-time faculty for each academic term at the convenience of the University on standard contract terms approved by the Executive Vice President and University Provost. Criteria for appointment and promotion shall be defined in the unit personnel document. Part-time faculty appointments shall not be eligible for tenure or count toward time for acquisition of tenure.
Sec. 4.1.3 Emeritus

Such honorary title may be conferred upon retired faculty if requested by the unit faculty (or, if permitted in unit personnel documents, by department faculty) and dean and approved by the President and Board of Trustees.

Sec. 4.1.4 Other Appointments (See Addenda)

Article 4.2 Faculty Personnel Reviews

In compliance with the Minimum Guidelines (Sec. 4.6.3.), each academic unit shall establish and maintain a system of career reviews of all faculty. The kinds of review are: annual (Sec. 4.2.1); pre-tenure (Sec. 4.2.2.G); tenure (Sec. 4.2.2.H); promotion to associate professor or professor, (Sec. 4.2.3); and periodic career review (Sec. 4.2.4).

Sec. 4.2.1 Annual Reviews

A. Administrative officers and appropriate faculty bodies shall protect faculty members from inequities in salary.
B. All part-time, term, probationary, and tenured faculty must be reviewed in writing annually. Unit personnel documents shall specify the process of annual review, which shall be consistent with The Redbook and the Minimum Guidelines. Copies of the evaluations are maintained in the Office of the Dean in each unit.
C. Unit personnel documents shall also provide an appeal process for annual reviews. This process shall be distinct from the grievance process of Article 4.4.

Sec. 4.2.2 Tenure

A. Length of Probationary Period
   All probationary faculty who have had seven years of full-time service counted as in a tenurable faculty position, if reemployed full-time, shall be granted tenure.
B. Leaves of Absence
   One year spent on an officially approved leave of absence may be counted toward the seven years of full-time service necessary for tenure. Any leave granted during the probationary period must carry with it a stipulation in writing as to whether the leave counts toward tenure.
C. Extension of Probationary Period
   A faculty member who faces extenuating circumstances that do not require a leave of absence but result in a significant reduction in ability to perform normal duties (such as personal illness, the birth or adoption of a child, or care of an ill family member) may request an extension of the probationary period for no less than six months and no more than one year. A second extension may be granted for a second extenuating circumstance. An extension shall not be granted more than two (2) times within the probationary period of a faculty member. Such extensions must be requested and approved before the end of the fifth year of the probationary period and must have documentation satisfactory to the Executive Vice President and University Provost.

D. Prior Service
Previous full-time service with the rank of instructor or higher or comparable status in institutions of higher learning may be counted toward the acquisition of tenure.

E. Early Tenure
1. Tenure may be granted at the time of initial appointment or in less than seven years when such action is warranted.
2. A faculty member may request only one evaluation for early tenure.
3. Evaluation for early tenure, once originated, shall proceed as indicated in Sec. 4.2.2.H. unless the faculty member under review requests its withdrawal.

F. Criteria for Tenure
Criteria for tenure shall be established in, but not limited to, the following areas:
- Teaching
- Research or creative activity
- Service to the profession, the unit, the University or the community

The details of these criteria and of any additional criteria to be considered in making a recommendation concerning tenure shall be specified in the unit's personnel document.

G. Pre-Tenure Review
Each probationary faculty member shall be reviewed at the mid-point of his or her probationary period at the University. The review shall be conducted at the same level of rigor and by the same process as in a tenure review within the unit, except that extramural evaluations shall not be required. The results of the review shall be made available to the faculty member. The purpose of the review is to inform the faculty member of the unit's perception of the faculty member's progress in meeting the standards for tenure. In units without subdivisions, the dean shall conduct the review. In units with departments or divisions, the chair or director may conduct the review but it shall not be final until approved by the dean.

H. Evaluation for Tenure
0. Each faculty member eligible for tenure must be evaluated within twelve months after five years of service applied to tenure according to the following procedures. Evaluation for tenure, once originated, shall proceed as indicated below (4.2.2.E.3.) unless the faculty member under review resigns from the University or is subject to termination by reason of the discontinuation of a unit, department, or program (Sec. 4.5.3.A.2). Completion of the probationary period with satisfactory annual performance evaluations and pre-tenure review shall not constitute sufficient grounds for tenure.
1. Faculty members on probationary status shall be affected by any amendments to or change in the criteria for tenure subsequent to their appointment. In such evaluations, appropriate consideration must be given to the amount of time remaining in their probationary period when the change becomes effective.
2. In units with subdivisions, evaluation for tenure shall originate in the department or division in which the faculty member has primary appointment. The recommendations of the faculty and/or of its designated representatives, of the department or division, and of the chair or director shall be forwarded to the appropriate unit committee for its recommendation to the dean of the unit, who shall make a recommendation. In units without departments or divisions, the recommendation of the appropriate unit committees shall be forwarded to the dean for a recommendation.

3. A file of all information and documents pertinent to the tenure evaluation shall be compiled with the cooperation of the faculty member. Recommendations and any other material added shall become part of the file. The faculty member may examine any substantive material in the tenure file but shall not be informed of the identity of evaluators. The faculty member may add newly available material evidence for reconsideration by the previous evaluators or rebuttals before the file is forwarded to the Executive Vice President and University Provost. The evidence in this file shall be reviewed according to the procedures specified in the Minimum Guidelines and the unit personnel document.

4. The recommendation of the dean shall be the unit recommendation forwarded to all higher levels of review.

5. The completed tenure file shall be forwarded to the Executive Vice President and University Provost for a recommendation, after it has been reviewed by the Affirmative Action Office. If there is any disagreement between the view of the Executive Vice President and University Provost and the recommendation of the unit, the Executive Vice President and University Provost shall send a written statement of the reasons for his or her recommendation to the faculty member and to the unit dean, each of whom shall have the opportunity to comment in writing prior to any recommendation to the President. The file containing all comments and recommendations shall be made available to the President.

   a. If the recommendation of the Executive Vice President and Provost, dean, or department chair is negative, the candidate must be notified by certified mail before it is forwarded to the next level of review.

   b. If the recommendation of the Executive Vice President and Provost, or dean, is negative, the candidate may request a hearing before the University Faculty Grievance Committee. This request must be delivered to the Faculty Grievance Officer on or before the tenth working day following notification by certified mail.

6. The Executive Vice President and University Provost will prepare a recommendation for the President's review, and the President shall make the final recommendation concerning tenure for any faculty member whose status is to be acted upon by the Board of Trustees or shall inform the Board concerning the nonrenewal of contract for any faculty member completing the sixth year of service in a probationary appointment.

7. In any case where the initial recommendation to deny tenure is by the President, the candidate shall first be notified of the reason in writing by the President and may appeal for reconsideration before the Board of Trustees takes action. If requested by the candidate on or before the tenth working day following the President's notice, the University Faculty Grievance Committee shall provide a hearing. The report of the committee, which shall summarize the case and make a recommendation for tenure or denial, shall beforwarded to the Board of Trustees, the President, and the candidate together with the record of the hearing. The President and candidate shall have ten working days to submit written response to the Board of Trustees.

8. The Board of Trustees shall take final action to grant tenure after an affirmative recommendation of the President. In addition, in any case where the initial recommendation to deny tenure is by the President, the Trustees shall decide whether to grant tenure after considering the President's original recommendation, the Report of the Faculty Grievance Committee, and the response of the President and the candidate.

9. Evaluation for tenure, once originated, shall proceed as indicated above (except as noted in 4.4.2.E.3.) unless the faculty member under review resigns from the University. The President may deny tenure after a recommendation of the Executive Vice President and University Provost if the position is eliminated for financial exigency or bona fide discontinuance or reduction of a department, institute or program of instruction. In the event of a tenure denial for such reasons, the faculty member's place will not be filled by a replacement within a period of three years, unless the dismissed faculty member has been offered reappointment and a reasonable time within which to accept or decline it.

10. Faculty members not recommended for tenure shall be informed by the President within seven days after the decision has been reported to the Board of Trustees.

11. If appeal or grievance procedures delay a final tenure recommendation at the time notice of nonrenewal must be given, the President may give notice of nonrenewal of the appointment but such notice shall not prejudice later award of tenure.

Sec. 4.2.3 Promotion in Rank

A. Criteria
Criteria for evaluation for promotion shall be established in, but not limited to, the following areas:
- Teaching
- Research or creative activity
- Service to the profession, the unit, the University or the community.

The details of these criteria and of any additional criteria to be considered in making a recommendation concerning promotion shall be specified in the unit's personnel document.

B. Evaluation for Promotion
Each faculty member shall be reviewed for promotion in rank according to procedures identical to those prescribed in Sec. 4.2.2.H, subsections 1-6. Then the President shall make a recommendation concerning promotion to be acted upon by the Board of Trustees.

Sec. 4.2.4 Periodic Career Reviews
Each academic unit shall have a Periodic Career Review process specified in the unit personnel document.

A. Faculty members with tenure shall undergo a periodic career review after every fifth year of service. When the review period ends in a sabbatical (or other leave), the periodic career review shall be deferred until the next academic year. A promotion shall replace a periodic career review for the period in which the promotion occurs.

B. Within thirty calendar days of a periodic career review that indicates deficient performance, a faculty member, in consultation with the chair (if any) or dean, shall prepare a career development plan, acceptable to the dean, to remedy the deficiency in one year unless the dean approves a longer period. If the faculty member completes the agreed upon professional development plan, the faculty member shall then have one year to demonstrate satisfactory performance. The dean shall then institute another career review as provided in the unit personnel documents. A faculty member whose performance is judged unsatisfactory in this second review shall be subject to appropriate disciplinary action, which may include proceedings for termination (Article 4.5).

Article 4.3 Conditions of Faculty Employment

Sec. 4.3.1 Annual Work Plan and Presence at the University

A. Annual Work Plan
Each faculty member shall collaborate with the departmental chair, or the appropriate supervisor as designated by the dean in units without departments, to develop an annual work plan which they shall submit to the dean for approval. The work plan shall specify the responsibilities of the faculty member for teaching, research, service, other institutional obligations, and other activities or requirements for the faculty member's presence on campus. When circumstances require changes in the work plan, the faculty member and chair shall file an amended plan (including an explanation of the necessary changes) for the dean's approval.

B. Presence at the University
Each dean may require the unit faculty to report two weeks before classes begin in Fall and to continue in actual attendance until two weeks after the end of the final examination period in Spring except when an approved faculty work plan provides otherwise. Temporary absence from residency for faculty members during the period when their contract requires them to be in residence shall be arranged in accordance with regulations of the unit. Each faculty member is responsible for the conduct of assigned courses and is required to meet such classes and make such assignments as will fulfill the intent of the courses.

Sec. 4.3.2 Compensation
Each faculty member’s base salary, exclusive of supplemental pay, once established for tenured faculty or during a contract period at the University of Louisville shall not be reduced except in a fiscal emergency or under the most extreme circumstances.

Sec. 4.3.3 Work Outside the University

Full-time faculty of the University may carry out professional work outside the University, with or without pay, usually for not more than the equivalent of one work day a week, averaged throughout the number of weeks of their employment in a given year, provided that such work is previously approved by the dean as appropriate to the faculty member's expertise and the mission of the university and provided that such work does not conflict or interfere with the faculty member's schedule of assignments and responsibilities at the University. As part of the documentation for annual review, full-time faculty shall submit a report of this professional work outside the University under the provisions of this section. If a unit has a Professional Practice Plan that has been reviewed by the faculty of the Unit and approved by the Board of Trustees, then that Professional Practice Plan supersedes this section.

Sec. 4.3.4 Paid Tutoring

No one shall receive any compensation for tutoring students in a course in which that person is empowered to grant the student credit or over which any direct authority may be exercised.

Sec. 4.3.5 Sabbatical Leave

The sabbatical leave is recognized as a serious professional responsibility and shall be utilized for activities that will improve the faculty member's contribution to the University's missions. A tenured faculty member who has six contract years of full-time service at the University of Louisville may petition for a sabbatical leave of absence for one-half contract year on full pay or for one contract year on one-half pay. Faculty members on twelve-month appointments may receive six months of leave with full pay or twelve months' leave with one-half pay. No more than one year of leave, as defined in Sec. 4.3.6 and 4.3.7, may be counted as years of service toward sabbatical leave. The University shall make every effort to approve all appropriate applications. Sabbatical leave shall be granted only upon the approval of the dean (and the Executive Vice President for Health Affairs, where appropriate), the Executive Vice President and University Provost, and the President. No leave will be granted without the guarantee of at least one year of continued full-time service after return from the sabbatical leave.

Sec. 4.3.6 Leave of Absence Without Pay

A faculty member may request a leave of absence without pay at any time. The dean of the unit, the Executive Vice President and University Provost, and the President must approve such leaves.
Disciplinary leaves of absence without pay may be imposed by deans with the approval of the Executive Vice President and University Provost and the President.

Sec. 4.3.7 Leave of Absence With Pay

A faculty member may request a leave of absence with pay at any time. The dean of the unit, the Executive Vice President and University Provost and the President must approve such leaves. Disciplinary leaves of absence with pay may be imposed by deans with the approval of the Executive Vice President and University Provost and the President.

Sec. 4.3.8 Retirement

The Board of Trustees shall make available a retirement plan for full-time faculty members, after a stated minimum period of service in such capacity. Each retirement contract shall be vested in the individual participant. Faculty members will retire under the provisions and conditions set out in the retirement plan adopted by the Board of Trustees.

Article 4.4 Resolution of Faculty Disputes

The university seeks to create and preserve mutual respect and trust among its various constituencies, and to promote the prompt review and correction of actions and policies that undermine those values. It does that by developing and promoting a culture that supports and affirms members of the university community working together as partners to address the sometimes contentious issues faced in a dynamic academic environment.

This article addresses the resolution of disputes regarding the fairness or propriety of particular procedural actions or the implementation of policy, and provides processes designed to resolve the dispute, achieve justice and restore trust. Matters covered in the article are about departure from stated policies or established procedures of the university.

Disagreements about the content of a policy or established procedure, rather than with their application or enforcement, shall be addressed through policy-making bodies, including the unit faculties, the Faculty Assembly, the Faculty Senate, and the Board of Trustees.

Sec. 4.4.1 Guiding Principles of Dispute Resolution

These dispute resolution procedures are based on the following tenets:

A. Respect for Difference of Opinion
   All members of the university community must respect diversity of opinion and no one should fear retaliation for expressing dissent. When differences occur, all parties are expected to adhere to the university’s Code of Conduct (The Board of Trustees 1.0 Policy Statement,) and maintain professional standards.

B. Confidentiality

The persons involved in the dispute resolution process will maintain the confidentiality of the participants to the extent permissible by law.

C. Prompt Resolution

Resolution of disagreements must receive prompt attention. All parties to a dispute shall ensure against unnecessary delay in all proceedings related to the dispute resolution process.

D. Non-Retaliation

Faculty members shall not be subject to reprisals, coercion or restraint for using or participating in any of the university’s dispute resolution processes. Any retaliatory actions against a faculty member seeking to resolve a dispute through these channels is subject to disciplinary action up to termination from the university. This provision does not, however, limit the administrator’s ability to pursue disciplinary or separate actions where appropriate. Additionally, faculty members shall not make frivolous or vindictive use of the dispute resolution procedures.

E. Resolution at Lowest Level

Disputes vary in their complexity and impact on the faculty member’s career. For that reason, the university provides a range of dispute resolution procedures with the intent of resolving issues at the most informal level possible. When informal processes do not provide a satisfactory result, more formal grievance processes may be used to resolve differences.

F. Legal Status of Dispute Resolution

The university’s dispute resolution processes are not legal proceedings and hearings do not follow the rules of the courts.

Sec. 4.4.2 The Administration of Faculty Disputes

This section identifies the individuals who manage the dispute resolution processes when faculty members are unable to resolve the issue through direct, informal discussion. These offices provide assistance to faculty who are seeking to resolve a dispute, although none functions as an advocate for individual faculty members or on specific issues. Consultation with the Ombuds Office or the Faculty Grievance Officer does not constitute notice of claims against the university or any of its administrators.

A. Ombuds Office

The Ombuds Office provides information about a range of neutral and informal dispute resolution services to all faculty and staff at the university, including on matters not covered in this article. Use of the services of this office is required for faculty members with Type 1 disputes before participating in more formal dispute resolution services.

B. Faculty Grievance Officer

The Faculty Grievance Officer (FGO) is available to advise faculty on the procedural options available to them when issues cannot be resolved through informal means. The Faculty Grievance Officer also provides assistance to the Chair of the Grievance Committee in the administration of the grievance procedures. Appendix A contains the duties, appointment process and reporting requirements for the Faculty Grievance Officer.

C. University Faculty Grievance Chair

The Chair of the Faculty Grievance Committee is charged with the administration of the grievance process once a formal grievance has been filed. The chair oversees the processes for establishing jurisdictional and hearing panels, and ensures appropriate communication among the parties to the dispute and other appropriate university officers. The chair is also responsible for oversight of grievance records retention. Appendix A contains the duties, appointment process and reporting requirements for the Faculty Grievance Committee.

Sec. 4.4.3 Scope of these Procedures

Term, probationary and tenured faculty members of the University of Louisville are covered by the provisions of this article. Administrators, faculty with administrative appointments, professional and administrative staff, classified staff, students, and trainees are covered in other articles of the Redbook. Part-time faculty members with an appointment may seek resolution to their disputes through their unit administrators or through the university’s Ombuds Office.

Sec. 4.4.4 Types of Disputes Covered

This section describes the specific matters that are covered under Article 4.4. In all instances, the faculty member must initiate use of the dispute resolution procedures, usually by contacting the Ombuds or the Faculty Grievance Officer. The procedures for pursuing a Type 1 Dispute are found in Section 4.4.4.A. and the procedures for Type 2 Disputes are found in Section 4.4.4.B.

A. Type 1 Disputes

A Type 1 dispute arises when a faculty member believes that decisions or actions taken by an administrator or others have caused material disadvantage to the faculty member. For this type of dispute, the faculty member must be able to demonstrate that he or she has experienced professional damage, loss of resources or significant changes in work assignment as a result of decisions or actions as specified below.

1. The circumstances covered under this type of dispute are allegations of:

   a. Violation of a university rule or policy;
   b. Misapplication of a university rule or policy;
   c. Differential application of a university rule, policy, procedure or usual unit practice or custom;
   d. Discrimination or improper bias in the application of a university rule, policy or procedure; (improper bias may include inappropriate considerations in addition to the legally impermissible use of race, gender, sexual orientation, age, religion, national origin, or disability of an otherwise qualified individual);
   e. Denial of promotion resulting from improper process;
f. Retaliation;
g. Decisions based on misrepresentation of material facts;
h. Decisions that are arbitrary or capricious as defined in guidelines approved by the Board of Trustees (January 26, 1987); (added directly below for this pdf version of The Redbook)

GUIDELINES: THE REDBOOK, 4.4.11 B.2.

Guidelines for summary screening of claims of arbitrary or capricious decision making by the academic units grievance committees.

Invoking Appellate Jurisdiction

A. The grievant shall file with the Chair of the University Faculty Grievance Committee a written statement setting forth the facts and circumstances upon which the grievant relies to show that the decision of the academic unit grievance committee was arbitrary or capricious.

B. When an academic unit grievance committee denies a grievant a hearing, the unit committee, at the request of the Chair of the University Faculty Grievance Committee, shall provide such University Committee with a written statement setting forth the facts and circumstances as to why their action or inaction was not arbitrary or capricious. Additionally, said unit grievance committee shall provide the University Faculty Grievance Committee with all documents which it considered in arriving at its decision.

C. In all other cases wherein a final decision of an academic unit grievance committee is appealed pursuant to Section 4.4.11. B.2. of the The Redbook, the unit committee, at the request of the Chair of the University Faculty Grievance Committee, shall provide such University Committee with all documents and testimonial evidence upon which it based the decision being appealed.

D. The academic unit grievance committee shall have ten days to respond to the request for information as set forth in Sections B. and C. The unit committee may ask the University Faculty Grievance Committee for an enlargement of time to respond based on good cause.

E. For the purposes of Section 4.4.11. B.2. of The Redbook

1. arbitrary is defined as willful or unreasoning action, without consideration and regard for the facts and circumstances presented (6 Corpus Juris Secundum 144); and
2. capricious is defined as an act done without reason, in a whimsical manner, implying either a lack of understanding or a disregard for the surrounding facts and settled controlling principles (12A Corpus Juris Secundum 917).

F. Upon receipt of all of the evidence requested, the Chair of the University Faculty Grievance Committee shall appoint three members of the University Grievance Committee to act as a screening subcommittee. It will be the responsibility of this subcommittee to review the evidence to determine if the grievant has a right to appeal. The right to appeal by the grievant shall be established with a finding of such right by two members of the subcommittee.

G. If the grievant is found to have a right to appeal pursuant to this Section, then the grievant shall proceed with the appeal in the manner provided in The Redbook.

(14 November 86)

i. Infringement of academic freedom as set forth in the AAUP Statement of Principles (1940), and described in Redbook Sec. 2.5.1.

2. This category does not cover
   a. Dissatisfaction with university rules, policies or procedures that apply to all faculty;
   b. Dissatisfaction with compensation, or university benefits;
   c. Dissatisfaction with annual performance reviews, unless the outcome is the result of circumstances covered in 4.4.4.A.1 and the unit appeals process has been exhausted;
   d. Disputes with individuals outside the university;
   e. Disputes resulting from participation in the conflict resolution process (including the F.G.O., Ombuds, Faculty Grievance Committee or its members;)
   f. Procedures governed by state or federal law.
   g. The professional judgments of faculty or administrators.

B. Type 2 Disputes
   A Type 2 dispute is used for a decision that results in the termination of an appointment.
   1. The circumstances covered under this type of dispute are allegations of
      a. Denial of tenure resulting from improper process;
      b. Non-renewal of a probationary appointment resulting from improper process.
      c. Non-renewal of other faculty appointments resulting from improper process, except as described elsewhere in this document.
   2. This category does not cover:
      1. Non-renewal of a term contract at the end of the contract, unless the outcome is a result of circumstances covered in 4.4.4.A.1.
      2. Termination for cause of an appointment with tenure, or of a special or probationary appointment before the end of a specified term. This is described by Article 4.5.3.
3. Termination for financial exigency or bona fide discontinuance of a unit, department, program or service of an appointment with tenure, or of a special or probationary appointment before the end of a specified term. This is described by Article 4.5.3.

Sec. 4.4.5 Procedures for Dispute Resolution

For this article, a dispute is a difference of opinion between a faculty member and another faculty member or administrator that has led to a perceived material disadvantage by the faculty member. If the faculty member is unable to resolve the dispute personally and formally contacts either the University Ombuds or Faculty Grievance Officer, the dispute becomes a complaint. If the complaint is accepted for review by the Faculty Grievance Committee, it becomes a grievance.

All parties to the dispute resolution process may deliver “written” notification and documents either on paper or by the University’s e-mail system, unless specified otherwise in this document. The date on the written notification determines timeframes and deadlines. Oral communications are not adequate notification.

A. Procedures for Type 1 Disputes

For Type 1 disputes, the faculty member must seek informal remedies before filing a grievance. As a first step, the faculty member should seek direct communication with the respondent in the dispute to find a mutual understanding and resolution of the issue. However if this informal discussion among the parties to the dispute is unsuccessful or if the faculty member would prefer assistance with informal dispute resolution, the procedures described in the following section must be used.

1. Ombuds Consultation

Within sixty (60) calendar days of the disputed condition or action or within sixty (60) calendar days of the date the faculty member reasonably should have learned of the condition or action, the faculty member must request an appointment with the Faculty/Staff Ombuds in writing.

a. If the faculty member does not inform the Ombuds within the stated timeframes, the faculty member may not pursue or request a formal grievance hearing through the university’s dispute resolution process related to the specific issue under dispute.
b. Consultation with the Ombuds does not constitute notice of claims against the university.
c. Following the consultation, the Ombuds has thirty (30) calendar days to advise the faculty member in writing of options for resolving the complaint. These options may include mediation services, facilitated discussion, referral to other offices on campus, etc.
d. If the faculty member decides not to participate in any of the options proposed by the Ombuds within thirty (30) calendar days after the Ombuds written statement of options, the Ombuds will document the results of the resolution attempts and provide a copy to the faculty member, the Faculty Grievance Officer, and the Dean. The Executive Vice President and Provost will also be notified if the Dean is a respondent. The faculty member may pursue a formal grievance process by filing a written statement with the e. If the faculty member’s preferred option(s) include mediation or some other form of facilitated discussion with the respondent, the Ombuds will contact the respondent(s) to inform him or her of the complaint and to discuss the preferred option for resolution.

i. If the complaint is resolved through informal means (such as mediation or some other form of facilitated discussion), the Ombuds will document the conclusions reached through this process and provide copies for each of the parties, the Dean of the faculty member’s unit, and the Faculty Grievance Officer. If the respondent is a Dean, the Executive Vice President and Provost will also receive a copy.

ii. If the complaint is not resolved through informal means (such as mediation or some other form of facilitated discussion), the Ombuds will document the results of the resolution attempts. If the administrator or respondent has refused to participate in the process, then the Ombuds will document this and provide copies of all documents to for each of the parties, the Dean of the faculty member’s unit, the Faculty Grievance Officer and the Executive Vice President and Provost (if the respondent is a Dean). If the complaint is not resolved to the faculty member’s satisfaction, he or she may file a formal grievance.

f. The faculty member may then decide to pursue a formal grievance process by filing a written statement with the Faculty Grievance Officer within thirty (30) calendar days from receipt of the Ombuds’ written statement of options.

g. The Ombuds will send a copy of all reports that result from informal complaint resolution to the University Archives and Records Center for permanent retention.

2. Filing a Type 1 Grievance

a. When the informal process is not successful, the faculty member has thirty (30) calendar days from receipt of the Ombuds report to file a written complaint with the Faculty Grievance Officer. The written complaint shall contain the following information:

i. A brief narrative statement (no more than five pages) of the immediate circumstances leading to the complaint;

ii. The date(s) the alleged problem occurred;

iii. How the action allegedly violated an existing rule, policy, or procedure;

iv. A designation of the respondents (i.e., any person whose acts are alleged to meet the conditions of a Type 1 dispute upon which the complaint is based) and the specific actions that the respondent was alleged to have taken which resulted in the grievance;

v. Documentary evidence of the actions taken by the respondent leading to the grievance.

vi. A statement of the informal steps taken to resolve the matter; and

vii. A statement of the remedy requested.

b. The FGO will review the documents provided by the grievant and request missing items. Once the FGO has received complete documentation from the grievant, the FGO has seven (7) calendar days to forward the information to the Chair of the Faculty Grievance Committee.

c. The chair of the Faculty Grievance Committee will then convene a panel of five committee members within thirty (30) calendar days to determine whether or not to accept jurisdiction for the alleged grievance and to clarify the specific issues or questions to be addressed by the hearing panel. Rules for convening the panel are found in Appendix A. The decision to accept jurisdiction will be based on the documentation filed by the faculty member, the respondent, and any additional documentary evidence the panel requests. The panel will decide not to hear a grievance if it determines that the complaint does not meet the standards for a Type 1 Dispute described in Section 4.4.4.A.1., or that it should be handled through a different university procedure.

d. If the Faculty Grievance Committee panel decides not to accept the complaint for a hearing, the panel chair will notify the Faculty Grievance Committee Chair in writing within seven (7) calendar days of their decision. The statement should document the reasons for the refusal to accept jurisdiction.

e. Within seven (7) calendar days of receiving the panel’s decision to deny a hearing, the Chair of the Grievance Committee will provide written notification to all parties in the dispute, the FGO and the Executive Vice President and Provost. This decision is final and may not be appealed.

3. Hearing for a Type 1 Grievance

a. If the panel’s decision is to accept jurisdiction for the complaint, the Chair of the Faculty Grievance Committee selects a new, three-person panel within fourteen (14) calendar days of receiving the decision to accept. The new panel is charged with conducting a hearing of the grievance.

b. The hearing panel must conduct a pre-hearing meeting with the grievant and respondent(s) within thirty (30) calendar days of receiving the grievance from the Chair of the Grievance Committee. At this meeting, the grievant and respondent must present a preliminary list of witnesses and any other documents not already in the record to be used as evidence during the hearing. A date for the hearing will be established at the pre-hearing. The date of the hearing must be no later than sixty (60) calendar days following the pre-hearing.

c. The parties to the dispute shall exchange a list of materials to be presented and a list of witnesses annotated to indicate the purpose and general content of anticipated testimony, and notification of whether the witness will be present at the hearing or will provide a written statement. This exchange will take place at least twenty (20) calendar days prior to the hearing. At least seven (7) calendar days before the hearing, parties must provide a final list of materials and witnesses. Nothing in this requirement, however, shall limit the parties to the grievance from being afforded full opportunity to present written and oral evidence, to produce witnesses, and to cross-examine witnesses.

d. Respondent(s) and witnesses who are not able to attend may supply written statements. Those witnesses may be questioned by the panel by telephone or other electronic means. The hearing panel may use, at their discretion, a mediator or meeting facilitator to conduct the hearing. Attorneys for the grievant or respondent may not be present during the hearing.

4. Grievance Resolution

a. The panel will have twenty-one (21) calendar days following the end of the hearing to prepare a written grievance resolution plan for the dispute that will recommend actions that any or all parties to the grievance must undertake in order to resolve the dispute. The recommendation of the panel shall be based on evidence presented in the hearing and communications to which the adversely affected party had the opportunity to respond.
The plan will be distributed in writing to the parties, the respective deans of the faculty members’ units, the FGO, and the Executive Vice President and Provost.

b. The parties to the grievance have thirty (30) calendar days to respond in writing to the Grievance Committee’s resolution plan.
   i. If both the parties to the grievance agree or if either does not respond within thirty (30) calendar days to the proposed remedies, the conclusions are final contingent on agreement of the Dean or next highest level of administration if the dispute directly involves the Dean.
   ii. If either party does not agree with the grievance resolution plan, then the plan is sent to the next level of authority who shall implement the plan.

   c. The final outcome is reported to the parties in the dispute. The Ombuds, FGO, the respective deans of the faculty members’ units, and the Executive Vice President and Provost are also notified in writing to ensure adherence to the resolution plan.

5. Procedures for a Type One Grievance Appeal

a. Either party to the grievance may appeal the proposed remedies in the grievance resolution plan, if:
   i. the decision of the hearing panel was arbitrary or capricious as defined in guidelines approved by the Board of Trustees for the summary screening of all such claims of arbitrary or capricious action;
   ii. they are based on material misrepresentation of the facts; or
   iii. they were made in the absence of newly discovered evidence clearly not available at the original hearing.

b. Written notice of appeal to the Executive Vice President and Provost must be made within twenty-one (21) calendar days of receipt of the plan. If the disagreement is with the Executive Vice President and Provost, the appeal will be made to the President with written notice within twenty-one (21) calendar days. If the disagreement is with the President, the appeal will be made to the Board of Trustees with written notice within twenty-one (21) calendar days.

c. The written notice of appeal shall contain the following information:
   i. a brief narrative stating the basis of the disagreement with the proposed remedies;
   ii. suggested amendments to the grievance resolution plan.
d. The Executive Vice President and Provost (or President) will make a final determination on the grievance resolution plan within fifteen (15) calendar days. If the President is the respondent, then the Board of Trustees will decide at its next regular meeting.

e. The final decision is reported to all parties in the dispute by certified mail. The Ombuds, FGO, the Chair of the Faculty Grievance Committee, the respective deans of the faculty members’ units, and the Executive Vice President and Provost will also be notified in writing to ensure adherence to the decision. A copy of the decision will also be sent to the University Archives and Records Center for retention.

f. There is no further appeal within the university for Type 1 disputes.

B. Procedures for Type 2 Disputes

Type 2 Disputes shall not be resolved through informal means.

1. Filing a Type 2 Grievance

   a. A faculty member wishing to file a complaint related to a Type 2 Dispute must send a written request for a hearing to the Faculty Grievance Officer within thirty (30) calendar days of receiving notification of non-renewal, or denial of tenure. The written complaint shall contain the following information:

      i. A brief narrative statement (no more than five pages) of the immediate circumstances leading to the complaint;

      ii. The date(s) of the alleged actions taken against the faculty member;

      iii. How the action allegedly violated an existing rule, policy, procedure or established custom;

      iv. Designation of the respondent(s) and the specific actions that each respondent was alleged to have taken which resulted in the grievance;

      v. Documentary evidence of the actions taken against the faculty member; and

      vi. A statement of the remedy requested.

   b. The FGO will review the documents provided by the grievant and request missing items. When once the FGO has received complete documentation from the grievant, the FGO has seven (7) calendar days to forward the formal hearing request to the Chair of the Faculty Grievance Committee.

   c. The chair of the Faculty Grievance Committee will convene a panel of five committee members within thirty (30) calendar days to determine whether or not to accept jurisdiction for the complaint. This determination will be based on the written complaint and documentation filed by the faculty member and any additional documentary evidence the panel requests.

      i. If a panel does not accept a complaint for a hearing

         The panel chair will notify the Chair of the University Faculty Grievance Committee in writing within seven (7) calendar days of the decision. The statement must clearly document the reason for the refusal to accept jurisdiction. This decision is final and may not be appealed.
The panel will decide not to hear a grievance if it determines that the complaint does not meet the standards for a Type 2 Dispute described in Section 4.4.4.B., or that it should be handled through a different university procedure.

The Chair of the University Faculty Grievance Committee will notify all parties involved in writing within seven (7) calendar days of receiving the panel’s statement. The statement must include the reason for the panel’s denial to hear the complaint.

ii. If a panel accepts a complaint for a hearing

The panel chair will notify the Chair of the University Faculty Grievance Committee in writing within seven (7) calendar days of the decision. The statement must clearly state the reason to accept jurisdiction and the rule or policy that they believe may have been violated. This decision is final and may not be appealed.

The Chair of the University Faculty Grievance Committee will notify all parties involved in writing within seven (7) calendar days of receiving the panel’s statement. The statement must clearly state the reason the panel accepted jurisdiction and the rule or policy that they believe may have been violated.

The Chair of the Faculty Grievance Committee will select a new, five-person panel within fourteen (14) calendar days of receiving the panel’s statement. The new panel is charged with conducting a hearing for the grievance.

2. Hearing for a Type Two Grievance

a. The hearing panel must conduct a pre-hearing meeting with the grievant and respondent(s) within thirty (30) calendar days of receiving the grievance from the Chair of the Grievance Committee. At this meeting, the grievant and respondent(s) must present a preliminary list of witnesses and evidence to be presented during the hearing. A date for the hearing will be established at the pre-hearing. The hearing date must be no later than sixty (60) calendar days following the pre-hearing. For Type 2 Disputes, a hearing officer may be appointed by the President at the request of a panel to assist with conduct of the hearings, however this is not required. A hearing officer conducts the meeting but does not decide the grievance, admissibility of evidence or other substantive issues related to the grievance.

b. Attorneys are permitted as advisors, but are not required, to attend the hearings in a Type 2 Dispute. If the faculty member chooses not to be accompanied by an attorney at the hearing, the respondent(s) must also not be accompanied by counsel.
c. The parties to the dispute shall exchange a list of materials to be presented and a list of witnesses annotated to indicate the purpose and general content of anticipated testimony, and notification of whether the witness will be present at the hearing or will provide a written statement. This exchange will take place at least twenty (20) calendar days prior to the hearing. At least seven (7) calendar days before the hearing, parties must provide a final list of materials and witnesses. Nothing in this requirement, however, shall limit the parties to the grievance from being afforded full opportunity to present written and oral evidence, to produce witnesses, and to cross-examine witnesses.

d. The panel will have fourteen (14) calendar days following the hearing to prepare a written recommendation either affirming the action or decision originally grieved or directing the respondent to reconsider the action or decision. The recommendation must indicate findings and supporting evidence. The panel’s written recommendation is sent to the faculty member, the faculty member’s Dean, any other respondents, the FGO and the Executive Vice President and Provost.

e. The respondent(s) to the grievance will reply in writing to the Faculty Grievance Committee’s recommendation within fourteen (14) calendar days. This statement either accepting or rejecting the recommendation from the Faculty Grievance Committee is distributed to all parties in the grievance, the Executive Vice President and Provost, the FGO and the Faculty Grievance Committee Chair.

f. The Executive Vice President and Provost shall render a decision on the matter within twenty-one (21) calendar days of receipt of written notice from the Faculty Grievance Committee that the matter is ready for decision. If the Executive Vice President and Provost is a respondent to the grievance, the President shall render a decision on the matter within twenty-one (21) calendar days of receipt of written notice from the Faculty Grievance Committee that the matter is ready for decision. If the President is a respondent to the grievance, the Board of Trustees shall render a decision on the matter at its next regular meeting which is at least twenty-one (21) calendar days after its receipt of written notice from the Faculty Grievance Committee that the matter is ready for decision. The decision rendered pursuant to this section will be distributed to all parties to the grievance, the Dean, the FGO and the Faculty Grievance Committee Chair.

3. Procedures for a Type 2 Grievance Appeal

a. The grievant or any party directly involved may appeal the Executive Vice President and Provost’s decision to the Chair, University Faculty Grievance Committee within fourteen (14) calendar days from the receipt of the final decision of the Executive Vice President and Provost. The reasons for appeal are:

i. The Executive Vice President and Provost’s decision does not concur with the recommendation of the hearing panel; or

ii. The decision of the hearing panel was arbitrary or capricious as defined in guidelines approved by the Board of Trustees for the summary screening of all such claims of arbitrary or capricious action; or

iii. The final decision was based upon misrepresentation of material facts; or
iv. The final decision was made in the absence of newly discovered evidence clearly not available at the original hearing.

b. Notice of any appeal must be delivered in writing to all parties within seven (7) calendar days of receipt of the Executive Vice President and Provost’s written decision.

c. The request for appeal shall contain the following information.

i. All correspondence from the Faculty Grievance Committee and the Executive Vice President and Provost concerning decisions in the case.

ii. A one page letter stating why the faculty member believes the Executive Vice President and Provost’s decision is in error.

iii. Material submitted to the Faculty Grievance Committee during the grievance process will be submitted as supporting material.

iv. The Executive Vice President and Provost will submit a one page letter stating the rationale for the decision.

d. The Chair of the Faculty Grievance Committee will select and convene a five (5) member appeals panel to consider the appeal. The panel will must include one representative of the grievant’s unit and of other parties directly involved in the original grievance. Panel members who participated on the original hearing panel may not serve on the appeals panel.

e. An appeal shall be based on the record established in the original action, provided the appeals panel may secure additional information if needed. All parties will be given timely opportunity to review and comment on newly added information. The appeals panel shall decide if there are grounds for an appeal within fourteen (14) calendar days and shall conduct any hearing on an appeal with thirty (30) calendar days of the date it is filed. Reports of the appeals panel shall be made within fourteen (14) calendar days following a hearing or within forty-five (45) calendar days following the filing of an appeal if there is not a hearing to supplement the original record. The report of the appeals panel is made to the President and is distributed to all persons directly involved in the grievance, the Executive Vice President and Provost, the FGO and the Faculty Grievance Committee Chair.

f. The President may accept and implement the remedy recommended by the appeals panel within thirty (30) calendar days.

g. If the President believes a policy question is involved or additional consideration of the facts is warranted, the case may be remanded within twenty-one (21) calendar days to the Faculty Grievance Committee with a statement of the reasons therefore, and the Committee shall reconsider the appeal. The President shall also provide a copy of the statement to all persons involved and they shall have seven (7) calendar days to comment on the President’s report. The Committee shall report its reconsideration to the President within twenty-one (21) working days of the remand.

h. The President may disagree with the Committee’s recommendation in whole or in part within thirty (30) calendar days and shall recommend a remedy in writing to the Faculty Grievance Committee Chair, to all persons directly involved in the grievance, the FGO, the Dean, and the Executive Vice President and Provost. The President’s proposed remedy will be presented to the Board of Trustees for final action. The Board of Trustees shall have access to the record of the proceedings or a summary of the record prepared by the Faculty Grievance Committee Chair or the chair’s designee.

i. All parties directly involved in the matter shall have the right to attend any meeting of the President or President’s representative with the Faculty Grievance Committee if that matter is discussed.

Sec. 4.4.6 Records of Dispute Resolution Processes

A record of hearings shall be kept which will include a record of oral testimony. All recorded evidence, exhibits, correspondence, recommendations and any other written documents associated with Type 1 and Type 2 grievance proceedings shall be retained by the grievance committee during the time in which an appeal of the committee decision may be made. Thereafter, all records will be transferred to the University Archives and Records Center for retention in a restricted file as an official university record.

Article 4.5 Termination of Service

Sec. 4.5.1. Termination of Appointment by a Faculty Member

A faculty member may terminate an appointment effective at the end of a contract year, provided that notice is given to the dean in writing at the earliest possible opportunity, and in no event less than thirty days before the end of the current contract year. The faculty member may properly request from the dean a waiver of the requirement of notice in the case of hardship.

Sec. 4.5.2 Probationary Academic Appointments

When a decision not to renew an appointment has been reached, the faculty member involved will be informed of that decision in writing by the dean and, if he/she so requests, will be advised orally of circumstances that contributed to that decision. If the faculty member so requests, the professional, academic, budgetary, management, planning, or other factors given in explanation of the nonrenewal will be confirmed in writing. The faculty member may request a review under provisions of the grievance procedure as stipulated in Article 4.4. Written notice that a probationary appointment is not to be renewed shall be given to a faculty member in advance of the expiration of the appointment, according to the following minimum periods of notice.

A. First Year of Probationary Service
   In the first year of probationary service at the University of Louisville, not less than ninety days before the expiration of the contract.
B. Second Year of Service
   Not later than six months before the end of the second contract year at the University of Louisville.
C. Service of More Than Two Years
After two or more years of service at the University of Louisville, notice of termination shall be given at least twelve months before the expiration of the appointment.

Sec. 4.5.3 Termination of Academic Employment Before the End of a Specified Term or for Persons with Tenure

A. Causes
1. Termination of an appointment with tenure, or of a special or probationary appointment before the end of the specified term, may be effected by the institution for any of the following causes only if the cause substantially impairs effectiveness as a faculty member:
   a. Incompetence,
   b. Neglect of or refusal to perform one's duty,
   c. Immoral conduct.
2. Termination of an appointment with tenure, or of a special or probationary appointment before the end of the specified term, may be effected by the institution for financial exigency or bona fide discontinuance or reduction of a unit, a department, a program or a service. In such case the affected faculty member shall have the right to have the issues reviewed by the University Faculty Grievance Committee, with ultimate review of all controverted issues by the Board of Trustees after recommendation by the Office of the President. This review will include consideration of the range of course offerings of the institution, the importance of the program to the academic objectives of the unit, faculty status, affirmative action, and the prospects for future funding from all possible sources.

In every case of financial exigency or discontinuance or reduction of a unit, a department, or program of instruction, the faculty member concerned will be given appropriate notice as specified in Sec. 4.5.2 after recommendation by the President. Before terminating an appointment because of the discontinuance of a department, institute, program or service, every effort will be made to place affected faculty members in other suitable positions. If an appointment is terminated before the end of a period of appointment because of financial exigency, or because of the discontinuance or reduction of a program of instruction, the released faculty member's place will not be filled by a replacement within a period of three years, unless the released faculty member has been offered reappointment and a reasonable period of time within which to accept or decline it.

B. Procedures
The procedures for termination of academic employment before the end of a specified term or for persons with tenure are specified in an Appendix: Termination Procedures to this Article.

Sec. 4.5.4 Action by the Board of Trustees
If dismissal or other penalty is to be recommended by the President, the President will, on request of the faculty member submitted ten (10) calendar days prior to the next regularly scheduled meeting of the Board of Trustees, transmit the record of the case to the Board of Trustees. The Board's review will be based on the record of the hearings and findings of the University Faculty Grievance Committee and it will provide opportunity for argument, oral or written or both, by the faculty member and the University or by their representatives. The Board of Trustees will then exercise its final authority and take appropriate action.

Sec. 4.5.5 Suspensions

Until the decision upon termination of an appointment has been reached, the faculty member may be suspended or assigned to other duties by the dean of the unit with the approval of the President. Suspension is appropriate only pending a hearing, and if harm to the faculty member or to others is threatened by continuance in the appointment. Salary will continue during the period of suspension.

Article 4.6 Personnel Documents

The Redbook, approved unit documents, and any departmental documents approved as provided in this article shall establish procedures and the only criteria for appointment, tenure, promotion, career reviews and annual reviews.

Sec. 4.6.1 Minimum Guidelines

The Faculty Senate shall adopt Minimum Guidelines for unit policies regarding faculty tenure, promotion, periodic career reviews and salary increases based upon merit. These Guidelines shall be approved by the President and Board of Trustees and shall become an Addendum to The Redbook. All unit and departmental personnel requirements shall meet or exceed the standards set forth in the Minimum Guidelines.

Sec. 4.6.2 Unit Documents

A. Each academic unit shall have a comprehensive academic personnel document, prepared with full participation of the faculty, that shall contain these elements:

1. types of personnel appointments;
2. details of personnel criteria specified in Articles 4.1 and 4.2 and any additional criteria to be considered in faculty appointments, tenure, promotions, periodic career reviews, or salary increases;
3. specification of the type of evidence to be considered in determining whether the criteria have been met, together with customary procedures; and
4. any provisions needed to evaluate faculty who serve in specialized roles created to meet the needs of the unit.

B. Units that include temporary or other nontenurable faculty must specify in unit documents the extent of franchise in unit governance and personnel matters, and any special provisions for temporary or other nontenurable full-time faculty access to the grievance process, as well as a policy on their sabbatical or other leave after extended service.

C. Units that include part-time faculty must specify in unit documents the extent of the franchise in unit governance and personnel matters.

Sec. 4.6.3 Approval of Unit Personnel Documents

The Executive Vice President and University Provost shall submit each proposed unit personnel document to the Faculty Senate for confirmation that it is in accordance with The Redbook and the Minimum Guidelines. It shall then be submitted to the President for review and recommendation to the Board of Trustees for final approval. The Board of Trustees may delegate approval of various parts of the unit personnel documents to the President. A copy of the approved documents shall be filed in the office of the Executive Vice President and University Provost and shall be given to each member of the unit faculty.

Sec. 4.6.4 Departmental personnel documents

Departmental personnel documents that specify additional requirements and procedures for personnel actions may be established within an academic unit according to a process defined in the unit personnel documents or bylaws. Departmental requirements and procedures shall not disrupt due process nor set performance requirements lower than those established in the unit documents. The dean of the unit shall forward a copy of approved departmental documents to the office of the Executive Vice President and University Provost.

Appendix: Termination Procedures

Dismissal will be pursuant to the procedures specified below:

I. Recommendations for Dismissal

Dismissal of a faculty member with tenure, or with a special or probationary appointment before the end of the specified term, will be preceded by:

A. Discussions between the faculty member and appropriate administrative officers looking toward a settlement;
B. A written recommendation for dismissal, together with a statement of charges framed with reasonable particularity, to be forwarded by the dean to the President and the faculty member. The statement of charges shall notify the faculty member of the right of appeal to the University Faculty Grievance Committee and the right to a hearing before the Board of Trustees according to Chapter 164 of the Kentucky Revised Statutes. In the event the faculty member chooses to have the appeal held before the University Faculty Grievance Committee in accordance with this section, the faculty member shall so notify the chair of said committee and the President of the University and agree in writing that any further appeal or defense within the University made from the decision of the University Faculty Grievance Committee shall be made and conducted on the record made before the University Faculty Grievance Committee with this being in lieu of a de novo hearing. In the event of a subsequent appeal, the faculty member's right to make a defense before the Board by way of oral argument personally or by counsel shall be unimpaired, but the testimony considered by the Board shall consist of the record made before the University Faculty Grievance Committee and transmitted to the Board of Trustees.

II. Hearing before the University Faculty Grievance Committee
   A. The University Faculty Grievance Committee shall have exclusive jurisdiction to hear appeals from recommendations for dismissal.
   B. If the aggrieved is to have a hearing, it must be requested in writing to the chair of the Committee within fifteen working days after receipt of notification that the dismissal is to be recommended. Before the hearing begins either party may request that any member of the Committee be disqualified for bias or interest. Requests for disqualification shall be honored if the Committee approves except that Committee approval shall not be required for the first request by either party for one disqualification.
   C. Membership in a faculty from which the appeal originates shall not be automatic grounds for disqualification. In the case of disqualification of a majority of Committee members, alternates shall serve where possible; otherwise replacements for the particular hearing involved shall be drawn by lot from the list of those faculty members who have served on the Committee in the previous five years.

III. Waiver of Hearing
   The faculty member whose dismissal has been recommended may waive a hearing while still retaining the right to respond to the charges by addressing an appeal in writing to the University Faculty Grievance Committee within fifteen working days after receipt of written notification. In such case, the Committee will evaluate all the evidence available to it and rest its recommendation upon the evidence in the record.

IV. Rules for the Hearing
   a. The University Faculty Grievance Committee, in consultation with the President and the faculty member involved, will exercise its judgment as to whether the hearing should be public or private.
   b. During the proceedings, the faculty member will be permitted to have an advisor and counsel of the faculty member's own choosing.

   e. The burden of proof that there is adequate cause for dismissal rests with the University and shall be satisfied only by clear and convincing evidence in the record considered as a whole.
f. The University Faculty Grievance Committee will grant reasonable adjournments to enable either party to investigate evidence as to which a valid claim of surprise is made.

g. The faculty member will be afforded an opportunity to obtain necessary witnesses and documentary or other evidence, and the administration of the University will, insofar as it is possible for it to do so, secure the cooperation of such witnesses and make available necessary documents and other evidence within its control.

h. The faculty member and the University will have the right to confront and cross-examine all witnesses. All witnesses shall be sworn. When a witness cannot or will not appear, but the Committee determines that the interest of justice requires admission of the witness' statement, the Committee will identify the witness, disclose the statement, and if possible, provide for interrogatories.

i. The Committee may select a nonmember to preside over a hearing but such a person shall have no vote in the final deliberations.

j. The Committee will not be bound by strict rules of evidence, and may admit any evidence of probative value in determining the issues involved. Every possible effort will be made to obtain the most reliable evidence available.

k. The Committee shall make its findings of fact and decision in executive session based solely on the hearing record.

l. Except for such simple announcements as may be required governing the time of the hearing and similar matters, public statements and publicity about the case by either the faculty member or the University will be avoided so far as possible until the proceedings have been completed, including consideration by the Board of Trustees of the University. The President and the faculty member will be notified in writing of the Committee's decision.

m. If the Committee concludes that the evidence has not established adequate cause for dismissal in the record, it will so report to the Office of the President. If the Office of the President disagrees with the conclusion of the report, the reasons for doing so will be stated in writing to the committee and to the faculty member, and an opportunity for response will be provided before the President submits any recommendation for dismissal to the Board of Trustees. Any response will be presented with the President's recommendation to the Board.

UNIVERSITY OF LOUISVILLE

Minimum Guidelines for Faculty Personnel Reviews

SEC. I: PRINCIPLES

A. Only by encouraging the development of a faculty of high quality can a university expect excellence. Appropriate criteria for personnel reviews are essential for the recruitment and retention of quality faculty. Other important factors include criteria for hiring; support from the staff and administration; appropriate standards for admission, retention, and graduation of students; and funds adequate to attract and retain outstanding faculty members and to provide for essential professional development. It should also be clear that unrealistic standards, high or low, for promotion, tenure, and periodic career reviews are counterproductive.

B. This document provides general University-wide guidelines for criteria and procedures for personnel reviews. The Redbook requires units to adopt policy and procedure documents consistent with these guidelines. The Redbook, Sec. 2.5.5, 2.5.8 and 4.2 should be considered in the development of unit documents.

C. The faculty of each unit shall develop a mission statement that must be approved by the dean for submission to the Executive Vice President and University Provost, who may recommend changes to assure consistency with the university mission statement before the unit statement is approved. Departments shall develop a mission statement and specific goals and objectives, approved by the dean, to assist in the systematic accomplishment of the unit mission. Deans shall hold the chair accountable for assuring that the department achieves its mission and contributes to the accomplishment of the unit mission. The Executive Vice President and University Provost shall hold the dean accountable for assuring that the unit achieves its mission and contributes to the accomplishment of the university mission.

D. Annual faculty work plans, as defined in The Redbook, Sec. 4.3.1.A., and a detailed summary of the year's professional effort shall be presented in all personnel reviews under these guidelines. Annual reviews may take into account multi-year performance.

E. All personnel review actions shall follow criteria and procedures consistent with The Redbook and stated in a unit personnel document formally adopted by the unit faculty and approved as provided by The Redbook, Sec. 4.6.3. While unit personnel documents may incorporate by reference other unit documents, those incorporated documents shall be attached as appendices to the main document, and adopted and approved in the same manner as is the unit personnel document. No unincorporated documents shall be considered in faculty personnel reviews.

F. Annual review shall be mandatory for all faculty members. A performance evaluation shall be communicated annually in writing by the chairperson or dean to each faculty member.

SEC. II: STANDARDS AND CRITERIA

A. Personnel reviews shall be based upon peer evaluation of a documentary record that includes qualitative and quantitative evidence (as described in sections following) of performance.

B. Unit personnel documents shall specify the unit officer(s) or committees(s) responsible for evaluating the record submitted. Evaluations shall be in the form of a written statement that will include discursive analysis of performance as substantiated in the documentary record.

C. The faculty of the units shall specify standards and criteria in teaching, research or creative activity, and service. The unit faculty may weight the relative significance of each area to accomplish the goals and requirements of the unit. The unit faculty shall establish minimum levels of satisfactory performance in each area. Proficiency in all three areas shall normally be required of all faculty members, unless responsibility for some area or areas is excepted in the unit document or specified in writing at the time of the initial appointment, or within ninety days of the effective date of these guidelines. Evaluations must consider only those areas of activity for which the approved annual work plan indicates a faculty member's responsibility.

SEC. III: ANNUAL REVIEWS

A. Annual reviews aim to enhance the quality of the faculty by recognizing and rewarding performance in terms of the department's and the unit's goals and objectives. Annual reviews shall become part of the record to be used in the reviews specified in the preamble to The Redbook Article 4.2.

B. Each academic unit shall award salary increases based upon performance as documented in annual reviews. Unit documents establishing the process for awarding such increases shall be consistent with The Redbook and with these Minimum Guidelines.

1. All decisions concerning salary increases shall be made in accordance with criteria and procedures contained in the unit document adopted by the unit faculty. To assure compliance with these Minimum Guidelines, the unit documents shall be reviewed by the Executive Vice President and University Provost who, after consulting with the Faculty Senate, shall advise the President on a recommendation to the Board of Trustees concerning the approval of the document.

2. Based on the approved criteria of the unit, only the faculty whose overall performance is judged to be satisfactory or above will receive a salary increase. These increases shall not be across-the-board, and should reflect an award structure that is based on performance. The amount of the increase will be appropriate to the performance and the size of the pool for salary increases in a given year. A recommendation by the dean for a zero salary increase must be submitted for approval of the Executive Vice President and University Provost. This recommendation shall include the reasons for the zero salary increase and specific suggestions for improving any performance considered to be unsatisfactory. Simultaneously, a copy of the recommendation shall be given to the faculty member involved.

3. Units, in accordance with criteria and procedures contained in the approved unit document may use up to 5% of the funds allocated to the unit for salary increases for a particular year to award special, one-time payments to faculty members for exceptional effort or achievement beyond that rewarded in the regular salary increase process. In subsequent years these monies shall be carried forward in the unit's salary base for distribution for regular salary increases.

4. The unit document shall specify criteria and procedures by which annual reviews are related to salary decisions made by the dean of the unit. The unit document shall include each of the following provisions:

    a. a provision guaranteeing the opportunity of each faculty member to present documentation of performance and effort relative to his or her work plan;
    b. a provision for the announcement each year of the date by which such documentation shall be received;
    c. a provision for identification of the faculty person(s) or committee(s) that will make decisions, based upon the results of the annual review, concerning salary increases within the unit;
d. a statement of the period of performance to be covered in the review for salary increases (e.g., the preceding year, the preceding three years, the period since the last review) so that units may elect to specify a longer period of review in order to avoid penalizing faculty members in years in which there is little or no money available for salary increases.

e. a provision that faculty members be informed in writing by the chair and/or the dean of the performance evaluations, recommendations for improvement if necessary, and recommendations, if any, for salary increases; each faculty member shall be given opportunity to respond to these recommendations and his or her performance evaluation so that timely adjustments may be made before the dean’s final recommendation;

f. a provision for a specific process, outside of the formal grievance procedure, to reconsider the performance evaluation and/or salary decision;

g. a provision that the dean shall report annually to the faculty and to the Executive Vice President and University Provost the frequency distribution of the percentage salary increases received by all faculty members in the unit and a description of the evaluation system used to arrive at such salary increases.

h. The unit must preserve the annual reviews. Individual faculty members shall be responsible for maintaining the documentary evidence supporting each annual review through the next tenure, promotion or periodic career review.

5. Unit policies for salary increases may be amended following the same process by which they were adopted.

SEC. IV: TENURE AND PROMOTION REVIEWS

A. Tenure and promotion reviews must be based upon the annual reviews and the documentary evidence compiled therefore but may include additional material as stated in these Guidelines and in approved unit documents. These reviews shall evaluate faculty performance under the distribution of effort indicated in the approved annual work plans (The Redbook Sec. 4.3.1.A).

B. Probationary faculty may receive informal evaluations at any time, and shall receive a formal evaluation no later than the midpoint of the probationary period. The record compiled for pre-tenure review shall be maintained intact as part of the evidence to be considered in tenure review.

C. Promotion reviews shall consider annual reviews and other evidence compiled since the last review for promotion.

D. The unit document must specify standards and procedures for review under the criteria listed in The Redbook Sec. 4.2.2.F. and 4.2.3.A. and any other criteria established in the unit document and approved under these Minimum Guidelines. It is imperative that the quality as well as the quantity of performance be considered in each area under evaluation.

1. The unit document shall specify the standards, procedures and evidence for evaluation of teaching. Evaluations of teaching may also include aspects of instruction other than classroom performance (e.g., advising, counseling, clinical and practicum supervision, textbook writing, and development of distance learning and instructional technology). The unit document shall provide for consideration of self-evaluation, collegial assessment, and student opinion of... teaching effectiveness. Teaching load may be a factor in evaluating teaching effectiveness, but it may not be the primary factor.

2. The unit document shall specify various forms of acceptable research (whether theoretical or applied) and creative activity. They should make provisions for the evaluation of research and creative activity in progress and of those forms of activity that do not result in traditional documentary evidence. All tenure and promotion reviews shall evaluate the research or creative activity in the context of these criteria.

3. The unit document shall specify the various forms of acceptable service activity. Such service is defined as sharing one's expertise with the University, profession, or community, regardless of the method of compensation, if any. All tenure and promotion reviews shall evaluate the service in the context of these criteria.

4. The unit document shall specify standards and procedures for any additional criteria established by the unit.

5. External evaluation is required for research and creative activity in tenure and promotion review. These evaluations shall be conducted under standards and procedures specified in the unit document under these Minimum Guidelines:

   a. Each unit document must specify the process by which external evaluators shall be solicited. This process shall be designed to certify the professional expertise and objectivity of the evaluators, whose comments regarding the quality of the work under review shall be solicited along with justification of those comments.

   b. The person being reviewed shall have the opportunity to respond in writing to extramural evaluations. This response must be included in the review materials prior to consideration of the evaluation by any reviewing person or body. Each unit shall establish appropriate procedures for the accomplishment of these ends.

   c. The opinions of extramural evaluators shall be given due weight, but external evaluators' recommendations as to the award of tenure or promotion shall not be solicited nor considered if offered. The unit personnel committee shall provide a written analysis of the validity and significance of the evaluations received.

E. Candidates for promotion to associate professor shall demonstrate proficiency in teaching, research, or creative activity and service as defined in Sec. II (Standards and Criteria) of this document. Candidates are required to exhibit broad proficiency in all areas, so as to show continuing promise to develop their individual strengths. Units will establish the criteria and standards for teaching, research or creative activity, and service.

F. Candidates for promotion to professor must be evaluated in the areas and by the distribution of effort specified in their approved annual work plans for the period under review.

G. Units may specify additional criteria for promotion to associate or full professor.

H. Each unit shall specify the level of performance required for tenure or promotion, but no unit document approved under these Guidelines shall specify levels of performance below those specified in this document for promotion to associate professor.

SEC. V: PERIODIC CAREER REVIEWS
A. Each unit document shall specify standards and procedures for periodic career review of faculty to promote the continued professional development of the faculty. The evaluation report shall characterize the member's contribution as "satisfactory: meeting unit criteria" or "unsatisfactory: not meeting unit criteria" in teaching, research and service with due regard for the faculty member's annual work plans during the period under review.

B. Faculty members with tenure shall undergo periodic review under the requirements of The Redbook Sec. 4.2.4. This review shall be conducted under the criteria for the faculty member's current rank with due regard for the faculty member's annual work plans during the period under review. The review process shall not extend beyond the unit (or units) of the faculty member's appointment, but the results of such reviews shall be reported annually to the Executive Vice President and University Provost.

C. Tenured faculty members evaluated as "satisfactory: meeting unit criteria" in the appropriate area or areas of faculty activity shall begin the next review cycle in the following academic year. Tenured faculty members evaluated as "unsatisfactory: not meeting unit criteria" shall follow the remediation plan defined in The Redbook Sec. 4.2.4.A.2. and detailed in the unit document.

D. Faculty members with nontenurable appointments may be reappointed for the benefit of the university after a career review under the criteria for appointment to the faculty member's current rank with due regard for the faculty member's annual work plans during the period under review (The Redbook Sec. 4.2.4.B).

E. Because periodic reviews assess performance over a longer period than annual reviews permit, reviewing bodies may recommend a supplementary salary increase to reward demonstrations of professional excellence where evidence of outstanding performance over a long period warrants.

F. All Redbook rights of due process and appeal shall obtain in these reviews.

SEC. VI. SCHEDULE

A. The annual timeline for personnel actions shall observe the requirements for due notice of non-renewal (The Redbook Sec. 4.5.2.). The timeline shall also recognize and accommodate the rights of persons under review to have sufficient time to prepare the materials; the needs of units to solicit extramural reviews, and to receive and evaluate all appropriate evidence; and the interest of the university in maintaining an orderly, clear, and deliberate process for personnel evaluation and action.

B. As early as possible in the year preceding but in no case later than the end of May, the Executive Vice President and University Provost shall announce the dates of Board actions on personnel cases for the Board year beginning in September. The Executive Vice President and University Provost shall also indicate the latest date by which any case must be submitted to the Office of the University Provost in order to be docketed for action on any one of the Board dates so specified. After the Executive Vice President and University Provost’s announcement of the annual schedule, each unit shall be responsible for establishing and publishing its schedule of actions to bring cases to readiness in due time for presentation to the provost.

Article 5.6 Work Outside the University
Staff members may perform work outside the University at any time except during their scheduled working hours at the University, provided that such work does not interfere with the staff members' responsibility to the University or violate state regulations.

Article 5.7 University of Louisville Staff Senate

Sec. 5.7.1 Composition and Powers of Staff Senate
There shall be a University of Louisville Staff Senate which shall be the official representative of the staff of the University, and which shall be responsible for eliciting and expressing the opinions, suggestions, and recommendations of the staff on all matters of concern to the staff as a whole. Sec. 5.8.2 Staff Grievance Officer
There shall be a Staff Grievance Officer appointed by the President from a list of three or more individuals nominated by the Staff Senate. The Staff Grievance Officer shall be available to consult with staff members in each step of the grievance or appeal process, including initial formulation of the

At no time shall the Staff Grievance Officer become an advocate for or representative of the aggrieved staff member, but rather the Staff Grievance Officer's primary responsibility shall be to seek equitable resolution of the grievance. Sect. 5.8.3 Staff Senate Grievance Review Committee

Student Governance and Student Affairs Administration

Article 6.1 The Students of the University

A "student" is any person taking courses at the University, either full time or part time, pursuing undergraduate, graduate, or extension studies on a regular quarter, semester, or summer-term basis, or a person in a residency program of the School of Medicine or the School of Dentistry.

Article 6.2 Admission of Students

The faculty of each academic unit shall establish admission requirements based on the objectives of the unit and the course of study offered. For interdisciplinary degree programs and tracks, this academic authority will be shared among the faculties of the participating units as specified in the Bylaws of the School of Interdisciplinary and Graduate Studies. The selection of students shall be made in accordance with University regulations and also in conformity with federal, state, and local laws.

Article 6.3 Rights and Responsibilities of Students

A. Each student has the responsibility to become acquainted with and shall follow all rules and regulations of the University and of the academic unit in which the student is enrolled. The official publications outlining the University rules applicable to students shall be accessible to all students, and the provisions therein shall be uniformly applied to the students affected.

The Office of the President in consultation with the Student, Staff, and Faculty Senates shall establish a Code of Student Rights and Responsibilities, which shall be transmitted to the Board of Trustees for its approval.

B. Except as otherwise provided in this Chapter, all students enrolled in Master’s and Doctoral Programs shall have the rights and privileges of students enrolled in The School of Interdisciplinary and Graduate Studies.

Article 6.4 Access to Documents

Students shall have access to their own student records in accordance with federal, state, and University regulations. Other access to student records shall be limited in accordance with University regulations and with federal and state laws.

Article 6.5 University of Louisville Student Government

A. The Student Government Association through the Student Senate is responsible for eliciting and expressing the opinions, suggestions, and recommendations of the student body of the University of Louisville. The Student Senate shall be responsible for continuing review of University policies and documents affecting students and shall make recommendations concerning these matters. The Student Senate shall determine the rules and procedures of the Student Government Association. The Student Government Association and the Student Senate shall operate under a written constitution and bylaws, as adopted by the Student Senate and subject to approval by the President of the University. These documents shall be available for inspection upon request in the Offices of the Student Government Association and the Vice President for Student Affairs.

B. The President of the Student Government Association is the President of the Student Body by virtue of a University-wide election.

C. The Faculty Senate and Staff Senate shall select from their respective memberships one ex officio member and one ex officio alternate member of the Student Senate. The alternate member shall have the right of the floor, but shall have no vote unless the voting member from that Senate is absent.

Article 6.6 Academic Review, Advancement, Probation, and Dismissal of Students

Sec. 6.6.1 Academic Authority
The academic authority of the University in all matters involving academic status of each student shall be vested in the academic unit in which the student is enrolled. The authority over an individual course rests with the academic unit in which it is offered.

Sec. 6.6.2 Course Grading

The authority for the determination of grades in any course shall rest with the faculty of the academic unit offering the course. Each student shall have the right to discuss any grade with the appropriate faculty member or academic dean in accordance with the procedure of the academic unit.

Sec. 6.6.3 Degree Status

Each academic unit shall be charged with the responsibility and authority to make academic determinations as to continuation in a degree or other program, probation, or permanent or temporary dismissal of students. Such determination shall be made upon evaluation of the student's academic performance and demonstrated fitness to continue in the program in accordance with promulgated standards established by the unit. Academic dishonesty in any form, including plagiarism, forgery, or cheating, reflects detrimentally upon the fitness of a student to continue in a program.

When an academic unit makes a decision recommending action which results in a change of a student's academic status, the appropriate dean shall notify the student. The student shall have the right to discuss this matter with the proper person from that academic unit and follow such procedures as may have been established by that unit. A representative of the unit shall meet informally with the student and shall explain the basis of the academic decision. The academic unit shall keep as a part of the student's record a notation of any academic determination other than promotion or unqualified continuation in a program, with such record to contain a brief statement of the reasons for such action as discussed with the student and a statement of the date of the informal meeting as well as a list of the names of the persons attending that meeting.

Article 6.7 Nonacademic Disciplinary Procedures

Sec. 6.7.1 General Responsibility, Procedures and Types of Discipline

The general responsibility for nonacademic discipline of all students at the University of Louisville shall be vested in the Office of the Vice President for Student Affairs. The Office will promulgate and administer the Code of Student Conduct approved by the President or designee.

If the student is found to have committed conduct prohibited by the Code of Student Conduct, an appropriate sanction(s) shall be imposed by the Office of the Vice President for Student Affairs.

Sec. 6.7.2 Procedure
In each case where the decision results in separation from the University, or a recommendation to withhold or revoke a degree, the Office of the Vice President for Student Affairs shall so notify the dean of the academic unit in which the student has been enrolled.

When the Office of the Vice President for Student Affairs initially assumes jurisdiction of an alleged offense, that office may deem it necessary to exclude the student from the University campuses immediately while an initial investigation is made. This action shall be taken to: ensure the safety and wellbeing of members of the University community; to preserve University property; to ensure a student’s own physical or emotional wellbeing; or if the student poses an ongoing threat of disruption to the normal operations of the University.

Sec. 6.7.3 Appeals

The Code of Student Conduct will provide an appeal process when the decision results in separation from the University, withholding a degree, or revoking a degree.

Article 6.8 Student Complaint and Grievance Procedures

Sec. 6.8.1 Individual Recourse

Any student who believes they have been treated unfairly, discriminated against, or have had their rights abridged may initiate a complaint or grievance within one year from the event. The student will first seek to have the matter resolved through informal discussion and through administrative channels.

Definitions:

1. A complaint is defined as a written expression of an academic or non-academic issue that a student has with a faculty member/instructor, staff member, administrator, department, program, or contracted agent regarding a decision made, service provided, or process applied. For complaints against another student, refer to the University of Louisville Code of Conduct. Academic matters are defined as those concerning instructional activities, research activities, activities closely related to either of these functions, or decisions involving instruction or affecting academic freedom. All other matters are non-academic.

2. A grievance is defined as a student initiated formal escalation of an unresolved academic complaint.

3. In grievance matters, the student filing the grievance is referred to as the grievant. The phrase "persons directly involved" means the grievant and those who are alleged to have brought about the condition upon which the grievance is based.

Sec. 6.8.2 Student Grievance Officer
There will be a Student Grievance Officer appointed by the President from a list of three faculty/staff members nominated by the Student Government Association. The representatives of the Student Government Association will meet with the Office of the President to establish and review the duties and functions, the term and structure of the office, and budgetary arrangements necessary for the effective functioning of the Student Grievance Officer.

The Student Grievance Officer is responsible for informing students of their rights and obligations under the grievance procedure and especially the deadlines that have been established. The Student Grievance Officer will seek to resolve informally as many grievances as possible.

Sec. 6.8.3 Student Advocate

The Student Advocate is a staff member in the Dean of Students Office. The Student Advocate manages the student complaint process and will assist students in resolving individual complaints or forwarding complaints to the appropriate unit, department or program contact.

Sec. 6.8.4 Student Complaints

The student complaint process is the initiating step for both academic and non-academic related matters. For academic matters, the student complaint process serves as an informal resolution process through which the Student Advocate pursues a mediated resolution with the student and the Unit person, department, or program involved, prior to the initiation of the Grievance Hearing process. For non-academic matters, where the final appeals decision rests with the Dean of Students, the student complaint is the initiating step in the determination process.

Sec. 6.8.4.1 Initiating a Complaint

A complaint must be submitted in writing to the Office of the Dean of Students. Upon receipt of a written complaint, the Student Advocate or designee will contact the student within 3 (three) business days. For purposes of Section 6.8, “business days” shall exclude all University-observed holidays. The Student Advocate will notify the student as to whether the matter is academic or non-academic based upon the issues identified by the student. The Student Advocate or designee may assist the student in resolving the complaint, or forward the complaint to the appropriate division, unit, or department contact. In all cases, the student should first attempt to discuss the matter at issue with the person, department, or program directly involved.

In all cases, the Student Advocate and the appropriate contact will attempt to resolve the complaint within 21 (twenty-one) business days.

Sec. 6.8.4.2 Academic Matters
If the complaint involves an academic matter, and a satisfactory resolution cannot be reached, the student will be referred to the Student Grievance Officer. The student may then initiate the Academic Grievance Procedure.

Sec. 6.8.4.3 Non-Academic Matters

If the complaint involves a non-academic matter, and informal means or mediation has not resulted in a resolution of the complaint, the unit, department, or program head (or designee) will issue a written determination on the underlying issue in dispute no later than 21 (twenty-one) business days following initiation of the complaint, unless a reasonable extension of time is required.

If the student is not satisfied with the written determination of the non-academic complaint, the student may submit a written appeal to the Dean of Students or designee within 10 (ten) business days. The appeal may be for one or more of the following reasons:

1. The information presented during the review was not sufficient to justify the decision reached.
2. The review of the complaint was conducted in a way that did not permit the student the opportunity to present the relevant facts.
3. Additional information was not presented that would likely change the outcome.

The appeal must be in writing and contain:

1. Student name and student identification number, and contact information, including email address.
2. A detailed description of the nature of the appeal.
3. A copy of the original complaint, the written determination which the appeal seeks to overturn/reverse, and supporting documents including any materials regarding the findings or proposed resolution from the initial case.
4. The specific grounds supporting the appeal. This documentation must meet at least one of the reasons for appeal listed above.
5. A statement of the remedy requested.

Within 21 (twenty-one) business days, the Dean of Students or designee will render a final decision on behalf of the University.

Sec. 6.8.4.4 Record-Keeping

In all cases, a record of the complaint and steps taken in the complaint process will be documented and a copy maintained by the Student Advocate. The document will be maintained in accordance with applicable University recordkeeping policies.

Sec. 6.8.5 Academic Grievance Procedure
With the exception of the School of Interdisciplinary and Graduate Studies, the faculty of each academic unit specified in The Redbook will, in consultation with the Student Council of that unit, establish a unit Academic Grievance Committee and procedures for processing student grievances concerning academic matters. Each unit's academic grievance committee will receive and make recommendations on formal grievances to its dean.

The Graduate Student Academic Grievance Committee will be considered the unit academic grievance committee for students enrolled in the School of Interdisciplinary and Graduate Studies (SIGS). The Graduate Student Academic Grievance Committee will have original jurisdiction over grievances brought forth by students enrolled in SIGS. The composition of the Graduate Student Academic Grievance Committee will be defined within the Bylaws of the School of Interdisciplinary and Graduate Studies.

Sec. 6.8.6 Hearing Procedures in Original Jurisdiction

Only after attempting a resolution of the issue(s) in dispute through the Student Complaint process, a student may request a grievance hearing by providing a written statement to the unit grievance committee that includes the following:

1. A brief narrative of the condition giving rise to the grievance.
2. A designation of the parties involved.
3. A statement of the remedy requested.

The Student Grievance Officer will provide contact information for the specific unit grievance committee.

Each grievance committee will recommend to the dean of the unit, within 21 (twenty-one) business days of receipt of a written statement of grievance, whether there are sufficient grounds to accept a case for hearing. If the grievance directly involves the dean, the recommendation as to whether there are sufficient grounds to accept a case for hearing will be referred for decision to the University Provost or designee.

The dean will agree or disagree with the committee’s recommendation within ten (10) business days. The dean will notify all persons directly involved of the committee’s recommendation, whether the dean agrees or disagrees, the reason(s) supporting his or her decision, and the appropriate course of action as detailed below:

1. If the committee recommends a hearing and the dean agrees, the case will be heard.
2. If the committee does not recommend a hearing and the dean agrees, the case will not be heard.
3. If the committee does not recommend a hearing and the dean disagrees, the case will be heard.
4. If the committee recommends a hearing and the dean disagrees, the case will not be heard. However, the student will have 21 (twenty-one) business days to submit to the dean a written petition that outlines reasons why the dean should reconsider. The dean shall render his or her decision within ten (10) business days of receipt of the petition.

If a case is to be heard, such hearing will be granted within 21 (twenty-one) business days the dean’s response, although such hearing may be subject to reasonable delay caused by availability of parties unless the grievance committee determines that delay would cause hardship to one or more of the parties to the grievance. The hearing shall follow the rules and procedures outlined by each Unit’s Academic Grievance Procedure.

The grievant or any person directly involved will have the right to challenge any individual member of the committee for cause. In the event of challenge, the committee shall consider and rule on the challenge. The challenged member shall not vote on the challenge. In the case of disqualification, absence, or other inability to serve, alternates shall serve when possible.

Sec. 6.8.7 Unit Academic Grievance Committee Report

Each Unit Academic Grievance Committee will make its report, with recommendations for settlement of the case, to the dean of the unit with copies to the persons directly involved in the grievance within five (5) business days of the hearing. The dean shall render his or her final decision on the matter within five (5) business days of receipt of the report. In the event that the final decision of the dean is not in accord with the grievance committee's recommendation, the reasons for that decision will be stated in writing to all persons directly involved and to the grievance committee.

If the grievance directly involves the dean, the report of the grievance committee will be referred for decision to the University Provost or designee. The dean will also receive a copy of the report.

Sec. 6.8.8 Appeals

After a final decision has been rendered by the dean of the academic unit, any party directly involved has the right to file an appeal with the University Student Grievance Committee in accordance with section 6.8.10.

Sec. 6.8.9 University Student Grievance Committee

The University Student Grievance Committee will have original but not exclusive jurisdiction over grievances which involve two or more academic units or involve issues which the Unit Academic Grievance Committee can show that it is unable to consider, or are outside its jurisdiction.

The University Student Grievance Committee will consist of four faculty members and three student members. The President or designee will select one of the committee's faculty members to serve as chair of the committee. The chair will vote only in the case of a tie in the voting by the other members of the committee. The committee will also have three alternate faculty members and three alternate student members. The faculty members will be elected for staggered three-year terms by the Faculty Senate. The student members will be selected for one-year terms by the Student Government Association. Insofar as possible, the faculty and student members will be selected in such a manner as to be representative of the broad range of academic units at the University of Louisville.

Sec. 6.8.10 Appellate Jurisdiction of the University Student Grievance Committee and the Graduate Student Academic Grievance Committee

Any party directly involved in a grievance hearing has the right to appeal the final decision of a grievance under one or more of the following conditions:

1. If the final decision of the dean or provost is not in concurrence with the recommendation of the unit academic grievance committee.
2. There was misrepresentation of material facts at the original hearing.
3. There is newly discovered information not available at the time of the original hearing that, if presented at the hearing, may have altered the hearing decision.

The appeal will be made within 21 (twenty-one) business days from the date of the final decision of the responsible administrator.

In an academic grievance in post-baccalaureate programs, other than J.D., M.D., D.M.D. programs and School of Medicine and School of Dentistry residency programs, the appeal should be directed to the Graduate Student Academic Grievance Committee. In any other academic grievance considered by a Unit Academic Grievance Committee, the appeal should be directed to the University Student Grievance Committee.

An appeal to or a hearing by the University Student Grievance Committee or to the Graduate Student Academic Grievance Committee will be based upon the record established by the Unit Academic Grievance Committee. The committee then may request additional information.

Sec. 6.8.11 Formal Procedure

Both the appellate and the original jurisdiction of the University Student Grievance Committee will be initiated through a written grievance document sent to the chair of the University Student Grievance Committee with a copy sent to the Office of the President. The University Student Grievance Committee will decide whether there are sufficient grounds for a hearing and in doing so it will consult with the Student Grievance Officer.

Sec. 6.8.12 Hearing Procedure
If a grievance is to be heard involving original jurisdiction, the University Student Grievance Committee will first hear information presented by the grievant. The committee will not be bound by strict rules of evidence and may admit any information of probative value in determining the issues involved. Every possible effort will be made to obtain the most reliable information available. All parties in a grievance will have the opportunity to make of one (1) peremptory challenge with reference to the membership of the committee.

Sec. 6.8.13 Remedies

In a case involving original jurisdiction, the University Student Grievance Committee will render a finding of fact and, where appropriate, recommend a remedy after hearing all of the evidence.

In a case involving appellate jurisdiction, the University Student Grievance Committee or the Graduate Student Academic Grievance Committee must not substitute its judgment on the merits for that of any faculty body or administrator whose decision is being considered. The committee may affirm the decision of a faculty body or administrator whose decision is the subject of the grievance, but should the committee find that the decision being appealed was not based on proper consideration of the evidence, it may direct that a reconsideration be made, indicating specifically the errors it believes have been committed. After such reconsideration, the committee will recommend affirmation, modification, or reversal of the decision as reconsidered, and will submit same as the committee report.

Reports of the University Student Grievance Committee and reports of the Graduate Student Academic Grievance Committee in cases of appeal will be sent to the University Provost. Reports of the University Student Grievance Committee involving a grievance against the University Provost will be sent to the Office of the President. The University Provost or the Office of the President will act upon the committee's report in the following manner:

1. The University Provost or President may accept the remedy recommended by the University Student Grievance Committee or the Graduate Student Academic Grievance Committee within 28 business days, in which case the University Provost or the President will take action to implement the remedy.

2. The University Provost or the President may remand the case once if in its judgment the finding of facts was clearly contrary to the weight of the credible evidence.

3. The University Provost or the President may disagree with the recommendation in whole or in part, and in so doing it will state recommendations and reasons therefore, in writing, to the University Student Grievance Committee or the Graduate Student Academic Grievance Committee and to all persons directly involved, and will provide an opportunity for response before taking final action. The University Provost or the President is responsible for taking final action.

Cardinal Principles

The university follows a set of guiding principles that shape our community and our actions. Every member of the University of Louisville family is expected to follow these Cardinal Principles.

Community of Care
Care for self, care for one another as the Cardinal family and cares for the community beyond. We are a community—not just a collection of individuals. We are a community—not just buildings connected by an HVAC system.

Accountability
Accountability. We keep our promises. We own our mistakes. We are accountable to the team.

Respect
Respect. Regardless of position, we respect each other’s humanity and dignity, no matter what our positions or the organization are. We also respect our right to differing and conflicting positions on issues, and we will be a place that prepares students for ideas, not products students for ideas.

Diversity and Inclusion
Diversity and Inclusion. We celebrate diversity of thought, perspectives and life experiences. As our state motto declares, United We Stand, Divided We Fall. We want everyone, in the richness of all of their many unique and intersecting identities to feel included in the Cardinal fold.

Integrity and Transparency
Integrity and Transparency. We will be true to our mission of an urban research university to create, disseminate and apply knowledge. Integrity is our collective commitment to make decisions with the best interests of our university in mind and to share the decision making rationale and the outcomes.

Noble Purpose
Noble Purpose. Each of us will identify for ourselves the way in which we make a difference. We know we must solve the problems of access and affordability to give everyone the opportunity to find and pursue their own noble purposes.

Agility
Agility. We will recognize that things change and when they do, we must change things. We know that when adaptation in an organization does not keep pace with adaptation in the environment, the organization will not survive.

Leadership
Leadership. We recognize that management is a position but leadership is an activity. We will all behave as owners of the University of Louisville because we are. "We are LOUISVILLE," is not just a hashtag or a slogan. It is our declaration of leadership and ownership.

Article 1     Faculty Appointments

Section 1.1   Types of Appointments

Faculty appointments are "Full-time", "Part-time", "Emeritus", or "Other Appointments", as described in The Redbook, Article 4.1.

Section 1.2   Non-Tenurable Appointments

Part 1.2.1 Full-Time Appointments

Non-tenurable, full-time appointments with the university may be for lengths of time in accordance with The Redbook policies. Generally, temporary appointments are for short-term appointments commonly associated with visiting professors.

1. Temporary Appointments
   Temporary appointments to the various academic ranks (Instructor, Assistant Professor, Associate Professor, Professor) may be made for specifically limited time periods less than one year or for special purposes. In no case shall a temporary appointment or a renewal thereof result in the acquisition of tenure. (See The Redbook 4.1.1.A.1)

2. Term Appointments: Teaching-Track, Research-Track, and Instructor
   a. Teaching-track and Research-track appointments at the various ranks (Assistant Professor, Associate Professor, Professor) and Instructors are subject to policies for Term Appointments in The Redbook 4.1.1.A.2. The Track designation should be specified in the contract based on the primary responsibility of the faculty member (teaching or research). The greatest workload percentages for Teaching-track and Research-track appointments will be in teaching or research, respectively.
   b. Teaching-track and Research-track faculty shall meet the same criteria for appointment at a designated rank as specified in Section 1.3 (for Probationary appointments), although specific variation in assignments may be designated in the contract and specified in the Annual Work Plan. In normal circumstances, persons appointed as Instructor shall hold a Masters or PhD in their field of specialization, or shall present evidence of having completed a body of research, scholarship or other creative activity equivalent in scope and quality to the similar component of such degree.
   c. Teaching-Track, Research-Track, and Instructor appointments are subject to annual review as described in Section 2.4.
   d. Teaching-track and Research-track faculty may apply for promotion in rank according to the criteria of the J.B. Speed School of Engineering defined in Section 2.7. Promotion in rank may be considered after the faculty member has served five consecutive years in rank. Procedures for the promotion of teaching and research track faculty shall be the same as for probationary or tenured faculty. Criteria shall include proficiency in teaching, research and creative activity, and service, but only the areas included in the contract or in the Annual Work Plan. Proficiency in teaching or proficiency in research will not be required if it is not specified in the contract or Annual Work Plan.

e. Teaching-track, Research-track, and Instructor faculty appointments may be renewed by recommendation by the Dean to the President or President’s designee, upon initiation of the department chair and recommendation by the department faculty or faculty committee, subject to satisfactory annual and career reviews.

f. Contract duration for initial appointments for Instructors, Teaching-track and Research-track faculty may be for 1 - 3 years. Follow-on appointments may be 1 to 3 years for Instructors, Assistant and Associate Professors and 3 years minimum for Full Professors. For faculty at the rank of Associate Professor and Professor, rolling contracts will be available after five years of service at the University of Louisville. Rolling contracts are renewable every year for a duration up to 3 years for Associate Professor and up to the maximum duration allowed by The Redbook for Full Professor. Appointment and duration of such contracts are at the discretion of the Chair and must be approved by the Dean. Renewal of multi-year contracts should generally be considered one full year prior to the end date of the contract.

Part 1.2.2 Part-Time Appointments

Part-time faculty shall be appointed by contract to teach specified courses or to engage in specified instruction, research or service less than full time for a designated period. No such appointment, continuation, or renewal thereof shall result in acquisition of tenure or implied renewal for subsequent periods as specified in The Redbook, Section 4.1.2. Requirements for appointment at the various ranks for part-time faculty shall be the same as those for full-time faculty. The Dean or Dean’s designee may appoint or reappoint part-time faculty for each academic term at the convenience of the University on standard contract terms approved by the Executive Vice President and University Provost.

Section 1.3 Probationary (Tenure-track) Appointments

Probationary appointments shall be appointments of full-time faculty members without tenure other than those described in Section 1.2, provided that such appointment shall not extend beyond the period when tenure is normally granted. Probationary appointments are subject to policies defined in The Redbook Section 4.1.1.B.

1. Assistant Professor

Probationary appointments to the rank of Assistant Professor shall be for stipulated terms up to two years on the initial appointment, and up to three years for appointments made thereafter, provided that they do not extend beyond the period when tenure would normally be granted (The Redbook 4.1.1.B.1). In normal circumstances, persons appointed as Assistant Professors shall hold the recognized terminal degree in their field of specialization, or shall present evidence of having completed a body of research, scholarship or other creative activity equivalent in scope and quality to the similar component of such degree. They shall, in any event, give promise of proficiency in all areas of activity listed in Article 2.
2. Associate Professor
Probationary appointments to the rank of Associate Professor shall be for stipulated terms up to two years on the initial appointment, and up to three years for appointments made thereafter. In normal circumstances, persons appointed as Associate Professors shall hold the recognized terminal degree in their field of specialization, or shall present evidence of having completed a body of research or other creative activity equivalent in scope and quality to the similar component of such degree. Additional criteria for appointment (or promotion) to Associate Professor can be found in Section 2.7.

3. Professor
Probationary appointments initially at the rank of Professor shall be for stipulated terms up to two years. Professors shall be awarded tenure if employed subsequent to an initial probationary appointment. In normal circumstances, persons appointed or promoted to the rank of Professor shall hold the recognized terminal degree in their field of specialization, or shall present evidence of having demonstrated a level of research and/or service equivalent in scope and quality to the similar component of such degree. Additional criteria for appointment (or promotion) to Professor can be found in Section 2.7.

Section 1.4 Tenure Appointments

Personnel who have acquired tenure are subject to the regulations in The Redbook (Section 4.1.1.C) and in this document (Section 2.7) and the provisions governing termination of faculty members (The Redbook Section 4.5.3).

Section 1.5 Graduate Faculty Membership

The Graduate Faculty of the J.B. Speed School of Engineering will be responsible for the teaching, training, and mentoring of graduate students and postdoctoral students within the Speed School. Further description of the responsibilities, qualifications, ad hoc appointments and review of Graduate faculty are defined in the Minimum Guidelines for Graduate Education in the J.B. Speed School of Engineering that are part of the Guidelines for Graduate study at the University of Louisville.

Graduate Faculty Membership will be granted to any tenured or probationary (tenure-track) faculty in the J.B. Speed School of Engineering at initial appointment. Teaching-track and Research-track faculty are eligible for ad hoc Graduate Faculty Membership.
Article 2  Faculty Personnel Reviews

Section 2.1  General Criteria

The Redbook requires unit documents to classify faculty activities into the areas of teaching, research or creative activity, and service to the profession, the unit, the University or the community. Performance in each of these 3 areas (teaching, research, and service) is the basis for annual reviews, tenure and promotion reviews, and periodic career reviews.

Guidelines regarding J.B. Speed School of Engineering criteria for promotion and tenure reviews are provided in Appendices 5 and 6. Departmental criteria for performance reviews are developed by individual departments as described in Section 2.2.

Section 2.2  Departmental Criteria

Each department will develop a statement of expectations that describes proficient faculty performance. This statement will serve as the department’s criteria for promotion, tenure and periodic career reviews, consistent with The Redbook 4.2.2.H.2. Statements should be reviewed annually by department faculty and maintained by the department chair. At least once a year, the department chair shall provide a copy of its approved statement of expectations to each faculty member (commonly during the annual review).

Revisions to a department’s statement of expectations must be approved by a majority of its eligible voting faculty. Statements will also be reviewed and approved by the Dean to ensure consistency with the mission of the Speed School.

Section 2.3  Responsibilities and Authority

One of the objectives of shared-governance is to review, recommend, and mitigate issues at levels closely associated with the individual faculty. As such, the Departmental Faculty Affairs Committee (DFAC) and the Faculty Affairs Committee (FAC) have been created within these documents and by-laws. The DFAC is composed of faculty members from within a department and thus can provide counsel and guidance specific to a discipline. The FAC is composed of faculty members from various departments within the JB Speed School of Engineering. In this manner, the FAC can provide counsel and guidance relative to the school as a whole.

Part 2.3.1  Departmental Faculty Affairs Committee (DFAC)

The DFAC shall serve as the representative of departmental faculty body on all matters pertaining to promotion, tenure, and career reviews. When appropriate, the DFAC will advise the chair, Dean and the faculty and recommend courses of action. The DFAC will function in an advisory capacity and none of its recommendations for promotion, tenure, or career review will be considered binding on the Dean.
Departmental faculties may develop individual procedures for selection of DFAC and for processing promotion, tenure, and career review materials within their departments. If they do not, the general procedure in this section will be used.

In tenure review cases, the DFAC will consist of those voting faculty in the department who have tenure. In promotion review cases, the DFAC will consist of the voting faculty in the department of higher rank than the individual under consideration. In career reviews, the DFAC will consist of voting faculty in the department with the same and higher rank as the individual under consideration (excluding the individual under review). For dispute resolution regarding annual reviews and workplans, the DFAC will be composed of members of equal or higher rank than the faculty member under consideration (excluding the faculty member of concern).

When a faculty member holds a position on the DFAC and FAC, the conventions of shared governance are such that individual faculty members should vote on personnel decisions only once. A member of the FAC shall vote in the DFAC consideration of a candidate. In the FAC’s vote tally, the FAC member’s recorded vote shall be consistent with the DFAC recommendation.

Part 2.3.2 JB Speed School Faculty Affairs Committee (FAC)

The FAC shall serve as the representative faculty body on all matters pertaining to promotion, tenure, and, when necessary, career reviews. The charge, composition, and selection of the FAC are defined in the Speed School Bylaws. When appropriate, it will advise the Dean and the faculty and prepare courses of action. The FAC will function in an advisory capacity and none of its recommendations for promotion, tenure, or career review will be considered binding on the Dean. The committee members have the right to bring and discuss any matter relating to promotion, tenure, and career review before the FAC. The committee has the right to obtain information as complete as possible on any matter brought before it. The committee shall endeavor to obtain all relevant information required by The Redbook about a candidate for promotion, tenure, or career review.

The FAC shall base its recommendations on a comparison of the record of accomplishment in the evaluation file to the criteria which appear in The Redbook, this document, and their addenda. Members should not act as advocates for any person or constituency, but rather as judges of the meeting of criteria.

The FAC meetings shall be held strictly confidential and the committee’s recommendations will be given only to the Dean, the individual affected by the recommendation, and the individual’s department chair. The recommendation will also become a part of the promotion, tenure, and career review file.

The FAC shall act on any claim for promotion, tenure, or career review brought before it by a faculty member, DFAC or department chair. Self-initiation of the claim shall not work to the detriment of the candidate. However, the FAC will not act upon a request for promotion, tenure, or a career review evaluation without prior referral to the appropriate departmental faculty committee and department chair for recommendations. Such recommendations must be made in a timely manner (see Appendix 2).

As per the Speed School Bylaws, whenever a promotion, tenure, or career review evaluation must be made for a member of the FAC, that member shall recuse from the committee discussion of the case.
The relevant academic department will provide a substitute selected by vote of the eligible department faculty to provide representation only for this case.

When a faculty member holds a position on the DFAC and FAC, the conventions of shared governance are such that individual faculty members should vote on personnel decisions only once. A member of the FAC shall vote in the DFAC consideration of a candidate. In the FAC vote tally, the FAC member’s recorded vote shall be concurrent with the DFAC recommendation. The FAC member may fully participate in the FAC discussions regarding the candidate.

Candidates for promotion and tenure may challenge the participation of no more than two members of the FAC committee. If a majority of the remaining FAC members agree that the challenged members are prejudiced against the candidate, the challenged members shall not participate in the recommendation. In this case, the relevant academic department will provide a substitute selected by vote of the eligible department faculty to provide representation only for this case.

Section 2.4 Annual Reviews

Part 2.4.1 Overview

All full-time faculty (tenured and non-tenured) will develop an annual work plan, annual faculty activity report, and be provided with an annual review by their supervisor. The purpose of the annual review is to provide feedback to the faculty regarding the prior year’s work performance. The purpose of the annual work plan is to define specific activities that will mutually benefit the faculty member, department, and school.

Work plan and review are normally considered in tandem. The annual reviews shall become part of the record for tenure and promotion files as well as periodic career reviews.

Part 2.4.2 Schedule

The specific dates associated with milestones throughout the development of the annual work plan and the annual review process are identified in Appendix 4.

Part 2.4.3 Process

Faculty members will complete and submit their annual work plan and faculty activity report to the department chair according to the schedule in Appendix 4. The form of the work plan and activity report will be as directed by Dean of the J. B. Speed School of Engineering along with any additional guidance adopted by departments for these submissions.

After receiving the faculty activity reports, the department chair shall evaluate each faculty member’s performance for the period. This evaluation will be based on the annual faculty activity report, merit, and contributions to the missions of the department, the J.B. Speed School of Engineering, the University, the profession and the community. The department chair will make every effort to ensure uniform, objective and professional standards in assessing the submitted documentation.
The chair will evaluate the faculty member’s performance in a range of effort categories based on a 0 to 6 rating scale system that defines performance as “none (rating of 0)”, not proficient (rating of 1 or 2”), “proficient (rating of 3 or 4)”, or “exceptional (rating of 5 or 6)”. The overall annual performance score is calculated as the sum of the percentage weight in each effort category multiplied by the performance score within the associated effort category. The overall annual performance review will be rated based on the weighted score as “not proficient” (a rating of less than 2.5), “proficient” (a rating of 2.5 to less than 4.5) and “exceptional” (a rating of 4.5 or greater).

Performance ratings of “not proficient” or "exceptional" must be explained. Performance ratings of “proficient” require no justification. When the annual review identifies weaknesses and/or deficiencies, the department chair’s summary should include specific recommendations for improvement or for possible adjustments in workload concentration.

Each faculty member will meet with the department chair to review the evaluation and proposed annual work plan. It is anticipated that the chair will discuss the evaluation process and work with the faculty member to define a mutually agreeable annual work plan. These meetings will be held by the date specified in Appendix 4.

Once the faculty reviews are complete, the chair will forward the following information for each faculty member to the Dean 1) the department chair’s evaluation 2) the annual faculty work plan, 3) relevant letters or supporting materials. Each faculty member will also receive a copy of their own evaluation and annual work plan. This information may be transmitted electronically using the format adopted by the J. B. Speed School of Engineering for these submissions.

The performance of department chairs will be evaluated as described above, but with the following differences:

- The Dean will play the role of the department chair.
- Department chairs' workloads and evaluations for a given year will center on the accomplishments of their administrative unit’s mission and goals for the year. An annual review of the department chair using faculty member metrics shall be used as part of the evaluation.
- Disagreements between the Dean and a department chair regarding the department chair's workload or evaluation will be resolved by the University Provost, if necessary.

Part 2.4.4 Appeal Procedure

In the event a faculty member disagrees with either the evaluation or the annual work plan, the faculty member may 1) provide a letter of rebuttal to the chair, and/or 2) involve the DFAC. If the faculty member chooses to provide a letter of rebuttal, the chair will provide a copy to the Dean. The letter will be maintained within the faculty member’s personnel file and provided as a supplemental document for periodic career reviews.

A faculty member may also request the involvement of the DFAC in the evaluation process. At the faculty member’s request, the department chair will forward all departmental faculty evaluations, activity reports, annual work plans, relevant letters, and other requested supplemental information to the DFAC. This committee will look for serious disparities in evaluations, workloads and examine any letters of rebuttal. The DFAC will discuss its findings with the department chair within two weeks of receipt of the materials. If concerns remain after this discussion, the committee and department chair will write separate letters to the Dean, who shall assist in resolving the committee's concerns before receiving the evaluations. Whatever the committee's concerns and whatever their state of resolution when presented, the Dean has disposition authority for the matters under discussion. The committee will then notify the faculty member and the department chair of the final disposition.

Section 2.5   Periodic Career Review

Part 2.5.1 Overview
All tenured faculty shall undergo a periodic career review (PCR) to evaluate their contribution to the department, the J.B. Speed School of Engineering, the University, the profession and the community. Teaching-track and Research-track faculty shall also undergo PCR (The Redbook Minimum Guidelines Section V.D).

The J.B. Speed School of Engineering assumes that faculty will ordinarily discharge their professional responsibilities by proficient performance in all areas of scholarship as specified in General Criteria (Section 2.1) and in accordance with their annual work plans. Such holistic judgments should be made in the context of departmental mission. In those unusual cases where this assumption is shown to be mistaken, the review process provides a mechanism to support the faculty member by returning performance to or above the level of proficiency specified in the departmental guidelines as required by the J.B. Speed School of Engineering.

Part 2.5.2 Schedule
All tenured faculty shall undergo a periodic career review in every fifth year of service, in accordance with The Redbook 4.2.4. Teaching-track and research track faculty should also undergo a PCR after every 5 years of continuous service.

When the review period ends in a sabbatical or other leave, the career review shall be deferred until the next academic year. A promotion shall replace a career review for the period in which the promotion occurs. The specific dates associated with milestones throughout the periodic review process are identified in Appendix 3.

Part 2.5.3 Process
The PCR begins with an initial review of faculty performance. The objective of this review is to identify faculty who are or are not performing at a “satisfactory” level. If the initial review determines that faculty are performing at a “satisfactory” level, the PCR evaluation is complete. If the initial review determines that faculty are performing at an “unsatisfactory: not meeting department criteria” level, then remediation plan is developed.
Copies of all evaluations, including any forms used, and all letters written by department chairs, committees, individual faculty, or the Dean as described in this document shall be maintained by the Office of the Dean of the J.B. Speed School of Engineering.

A. Periodic Career Review:
Both the chair and the DFAC will provide independent assessments of the faculty member. These assessments will be based on annual reviews and the documentation supporting them (including a current curriculum vita, faculty activity reports and annual workplans for the 5-year period). The DFAC and the chair will render opinions regarding whether the faculty member’s performance over the 5-year period is satisfactory or unsatisfactory. Per The Redbook (Minimum Guidelines Section V.A), each evaluation report shall characterize the member’s contribution as "satisfactory: meeting unit criteria" or "unsatisfactory: not meeting unit criteria" in teaching, research and service with due regard for the faculty member’s annual work plans during the period under review.

Under ordinary circumstances, proficient performance in teaching, research and scholarly activity, and service, in areas specified in the annual work plans, will be deemed satisfactory. However, a satisfactory rating does not necessarily require proficient performance in all areas in each year of the review period. Some variation in satisfactory performance may be acceptable, arising from new teaching assignments, administrative assignments, the initial development and preliminary stages of research, projects, unusual service obligations, or other relevant and documented situations.

The DFAC will forward their recommendation and evaluation summary to the department chair. The department chair will then send the chair’s report and DFAC report to the Dean of the J.B. Speed School of Engineering; copies will also be provided to the reviewed faculty member.

If both the department chair’s evaluation and the DFAC’s evaluation are positive, the review will be complete, and the next five-year cycle will begin.

If either the chair’s or the DFAC’s evaluation is unsatisfactory, the faculty member may write a letter of rebuttal and provide additional documentation to the Dean. The Dean will then review the chair and DFAC evaluations and letters provided by the faculty member and make the final determination whether evaluation is satisfactory or unsatisfactory. If the Dean determines that the faculty member’s performance to be satisfactory, the PCR will be considered complete. If the Dean agrees with either the DFAC or Chair that the faculty member’s performance is unsatisfactory, the Dean will write a letter to the chair indicating that the faculty member will need to complete a remediation plan to address the unsatisfactory evaluation. A copy will be sent to the faculty member under review and the DFAC chair.

B. Periodic Career Review: remediation plan
In general, the purpose of the remediation plan is to provide useful feedback and appropriate intervention and assistance to those faculty members whose periodic career review was unsatisfactory.

The chair will work with the faculty member to develop a specific, written plan to overcome the identified deficiencies. This plan will identify the specific weaknesses, define specific expected outcomes, outline the activities that will be taken to correct deficiencies, set timelines for accomplishing this work, and specify how the new activities will be monitored and assessed. The remediation plan must not conflict with The Redbook (Section 4.2.4.B); that section also states that the plan is for one year unless the Dean approves a longer period.
The chair will forward the written plan to the DFAC for review. The DFAC will then provide a recommendation to the chair that the plan be accepted, modified, or rejected. The chair may modify the plan based on the DFAC recommendations and in consultation with the faculty member, and will forward the written plan to the Dean.

The Dean will give final approval to the plan by responding to the faculty member and department chair in writing. Once the Dean approves the plan, the timeline associated with the corrective actions is deemed to have started.

Part 2.5.4 Consequences

The faculty member’s plan will be monitored as part of the annual review. If the faculty member has not achieved the stated goals of the plan within one year (or other timeline specified), and is again evaluated as “unsatisfactory: not meeting unit criteria,” the documentation will be sent to the Dean for further action.

Part 2.5.5 Appeal Procedure

A faculty member can appeal the results of a PCR, if and only if the disagreement meets at least one of the causes stated in The Redbook (Section 4.4).

Section 2.6 Pre-tenure reviews

Part 2.6.1 Overview

Pre-tenure review, described in Section 4.2.2.G of The Redbook, is a procedure whose purpose is to determine whether or not a faculty member is making satisfactory progress toward achieving tenure. A positive pre-tenure review is not a promise of eventually granting tenure.

Part 2.6.2 Schedule

The pre-tenure review will take place prior to the end of the third year of service counted towards tenure. No later than two months following completion of the 2nd year of service counted towards tenure, the department chair shall inform the faculty member, in writing, that the pre-tenure review is to take place. In the event that an individual’s career pattern does not fit the normal progression that case shall be treated on its own merits. For example, in the case of an individual coming to the University with three or more years of credit toward tenure), a pre-tenure review may not be necessary.

Part 2.6.3 Process

The department chair is responsible for the review. All such correspondence shall become a part of the faculty member’s documentation.
The standard for a positive pre-tenure review shall be a determination that continuation of activity, as documented, is expected to fulfill the stated tenure criteria as presumed by the department chair and DFAC. In the event that the departmental evaluation is negative, the written evaluation must include recommendations to the faculty member for changing the situation documented in the course of the review. In accordance with The Redbook, Section 4.2.2.G, the pre-tenure review is not final until approved by the Dean of the J.B. Speed School of Engineering.

Pre-tenure review shall involve an evaluation of activity in the areas outlined in General Criteria (Section 2.1). Standards of judgment for the areas of activity shall be the same as those outlined in Section 2.6, and in departmental statements of criteria for tenure. For the purpose of pre-tenure review, extramural review is optional. This option may be exercised by either the faculty member or the departmental faculty activity committee. If pursued, the department chair shall specify the number of external reviewers and the manner of their solicitation; the procedures specified in Appendix 5 may be used but are not required. The record compiled for pre-tenure review shall be maintained intact as part of the evidence to be considered in tenure review.

Part 2.6.4 Consequences

Pre-tenure review is a procedure whose purpose is to determine whether or not a faculty member is making satisfactory progress toward achieving tenure. Thus, the pre-tenure review is informative only and not binding on any aspect of the subsequent tenure evaluation.

Part 2.6.5 Appeal Procedure

A faculty member can appeal the results of the pre-tenure review, if and only if the disagreement meets at least one of the causes stated in The Redbook (Section 4.4).

Section 2.7 Promotion and Tenure

Part 2.7.1 Overview

The process for assessing promotion and for assessing tenure are very similar and thus are presented together within this section.

Faculty who have joint appointments in more than one department shall be evaluated by each department.

The general process for promotion and/or tenure is that an evaluation file representing the candidate’s body of work will be assembled. The evaluation file will be forwarded to the DFAC for review, and the DFAC will provide a written recommendation to be included in the evaluation file. After the DFAC have made their recommendation, the chair will review the evaluation file and also provide a written recommendation for the evaluation file. The FAC will then review the evaluation file and also provide a written recommendation. The evaluation file, which includes the DFAC, Chair, and FAC recommendations, will be forwarded to the Office of the Dean. The Dean of the J.B. Speed School of Engineering will compile the unit recommendation and will forward the file to the Executive Vice President and University Provost. The Provost will recommend appropriate action on the promotion and/or tenure to the University President. The Board of Trustees (BOT) shall take final action to grant promotion and/or tenure after an affirmative recommendation of the President.

Specific guidance information regarding promotion and tenure will be provided by the Provost and Dean each year.

Part 2.7.2 Schedule for Tenure

Each faculty member eligible for tenure must be evaluated within twelve months after five years of service applied to tenure. This process is described in Section 4.2.2.H of The Redbook. The five years of service may extend longer than five calendar years in cases where extensions were granted as specified in Section 4.2.2.C of The Redbook.

Completion of the probationary period with proficient annual performance evaluations and pre-tenure review shall not, in and of itself, constitute sufficient grounds for tenure. Faculty members on probationary status shall be affected by any amendments to or changes in the criteria for tenure subsequent to their appointment. In such evaluations, appropriate consideration will be given to the amount of time remaining in their probationary period when the change becomes effective.

Tenure may be recommended for persons whose initial appointment with the JB Speed School of Engineering is at the rank of Associate Professor or Professor.

Part 2.7.3 Schedule for Promotion in Rank

For faculty members eligible for tenure, promotion to the rank of Associate Professor normally occurs concurrently with the award of tenure, although these may take effect in different years. For Associate Professor’s, promotion to Full Professor can occur at any time when performance objectives have been met.

For other faculty not eligible for tenure, promotion (if applicable) to subsequent rank can occur when performance objectives have been met.

Part 2.7.4 Criteria for Tenure

Criteria for tenure in the J.B. Speed School of Engineering are based on the following areas (The Redbook, 4.2.3.A and 4.2.2.F, respectively):

- Teaching
- Research or creative activity
- Service to the department, the J.B. Speed School of Engineering, the University, the profession and the community.
For the award of tenure, materials representative of the faculty’s work must be deemed proficient in each category. Appendices V and VI provide guidance information regarding letters and materials. The Dean may provide additional guidance information. If the Dean provides additional guidance information, this information must be provided to the candidates within 14 days of the initiation date of the promotion and tenure review as identified in Appendix 2. The Dean’s guideline information shall be made available to all JB Speed School of Engineering faculty.

Part 2.7.5 Criteria for Promotion in Rank

The General Criteria (Section 2.1) and the following specific criteria represent the minimum levels of achievement for promotion to the following ranks:

Associate Professor - In order to be promoted to the rank of Associate Professor, the candidate shall have shown evidence of having attained proficiency in teaching, research, and service, as defined in their workplan. The evidence of proficiency must include extramural evaluation as specified in the The Redbook Minimum Guidelines (Section IV.D.5).

Professor - In order to be promoted to the rank of Professor, the candidate shall have shown evidence of (a) having maintained proficiency in teaching, research, and service, as defined in their workplan; (b) superior achievement in at least one of the three areas, consisting of teaching, research, and service; and (c) having achieved professional recognition. The evidence of achievement in research, teaching, service, and the evidence of professional recognition, must include extramural evaluation as specified in the Minimum Guidelines (Section IV.D.5).

The level of performance above that specified in the Minimum Guidelines must be considered as well as the general criteria listed above. Candidates should be considered individually and not in competition with others. Seniority (normally six years in rank) is a consideration for all promotions, but lack of seniority alone shall not be grounds for a negative recommendation.

Teaching-track or Research-track faculty may apply for promotion in rank according to the criteria of the J.B. Speed School of Engineering. The resulting promotion reviews will be based upon the same documentation, standards, and schedule used for probationary or tenured faculty at the same rank. Promotion assessment will be based upon work effort and performance in the areas (i.e., teaching, research/creative activity, and/or service) established in their annual work plans in effect during the review period.

Part 2.7.6 Materials for Promotion and Tenure

The Chair is responsible for initiating the promotion and tenure review process. However, the DFAC or faculty member may also initiate the process. The entity who initiated the review for promotion or tenure (faculty member, department chair, or DFAC) shall be responsible for compiling the evaluation file.

It is the responsibility of the individual under review to provide review materials that will create a compelling promotion or tenure case. At a minimum, the tenure and promotion evaluation files should contain relevant information in a format as requested by the Provost and Dean. Individuals under review may include any material they wish in their file. The department chair and other reviewers may also include other materials as long as they are made available to the individual and previous reviewers within the J.B. Speed School of Engineering so that prior recommendations may be reconsidered.

Tenure and promotion files must be compiled with the cooperation of the faculty member under review. A faculty member must be permitted to see, copy, and respond to the material in his or her promotion and/or tenure file with the names and affiliations of the evaluators masked. Additionally, the faculty member may add newly available material evidence for reconsideration by the previous evaluators or rebuttals at any time before the file is advanced to the Executive Vice President and University Provost (The Redbook 4.2.2.H.4).

Part 2.7.7 Process for Promotion and Tenure

Steps in the promotion and tenure evaluation procedure are described below. The schedule of dates for the Promotion and Tenure process are provided in Appendix 2; these dates should normally be followed unless otherwise agreed upon by the Dean and faculty member. Each year, after the Executive Vice President and Provost has notified the Dean of the final date for receiving the files of nominees from J.B. Speed School of Engineering, a schedule (consistent with Appendix 2) will be set for the remaining evaluation steps. The Dean shall formulate the schedule, and it shall be disseminated in a timely manner.

Promotion cases and early reviews for tenure may not be stopped except with the permission of the faculty member involved per The Redbook 4.2.2.E.3.

Promotion and/or tenure review cases are generally initiated by department chairs. The department chair will send memoranda to the DFAC chair, Dean, and the FAC chair indicating the names of departmental faculty members who are under consideration for promotion and/or tenure review. A copy will also be sent to each faculty member under consideration. The department chair will compile the evaluation file (dossier) in cooperation with the faculty member. Guidelines for evaluation letters and solicitation of extramural review letters are in Appendix 5. The evaluation file will be sent to the DFAC for review.

Alternatively, the faculty member may work with the DFAC or the FAC to initiate a review, subject to The Redbook Section 4.2.2.H.3. In this case, memoranda should be sent to the department chair, DFAC chair, Dean, and the FAC chair indicating that the review has been initiated. The faculty member may compile the evaluation file in cooperation with the DFAC or FAC (i.e., to solicit extramural review letters). The evaluation file should then be submitted to the DFAC for review.

If the DFAC has not received a complete evaluation file prior to the cutoff date, the committee will transmit a memorandum to that effect to the appropriate department chair, to the Dean, and to the individual faculty member concerned. The faculty member will have 7 days to provide the missing materials or provide a written response to be included in the evaluation file.
The DFAC will review the evaluation file and write a recommendation letter (Appendix 5) to be included in the evaluation file. The DFAC will send the evaluation file to the department chair. The chair will review the materials and also write a letter of recommendation to be included in the evaluation file.

The department chair will then forward the evaluation file to the FAC. A separate confidential copy of both the recommendations of the DFAC, and of the chair will be forwarded to the individual faculty member. The Dean will not be informed of either the DFAC’s or chair's recommendations at this juncture but shall receive a copy of the letter of transmittal.

The FAC will review the evaluation file and make its recommendations for promotion and/or tenure. The FAC will include its recommendation in the evaluation file and then forward the file to the Dean. A confidential copy of their recommendation will be forwarded to the faculty member under consideration and to the appropriate department chair.

The Dean will review the evaluation file and make a recommendation for promotion and/or tenure. The FAC will be advised of the Dean’s recommendations on all promotion and tenure cases, and will be given an opportunity to provide written responses to be included in the evaluation files before they are sent to the Executive Vice President and University Provost.

Each individual being considered for promotion or tenure will receive a confidential copy of the Dean’s recommendation to the Executive Vice President and University Provost, and if applicable, a copy of the FAC’s response. The department chair will also receive copies.

The Dean will forward all evaluation files for promotion and tenure candidates to the Executive Vice President and University Provost. Evaluation documents should be either paper or electronic as specified by university or unit guidelines.

Part 2.7.8 Appeal Procedure

A faculty member can appeal the results of this process according to procedures stated in The Redbook (Section 4.4).
Article 3  Conditions of Faculty Employment

The performance of each faculty member shall be evaluated in accordance with the annual review (see Section 2.4). The goals of these reviews are to reward performance in the short term, to reinforce desirable patterns of career advancement, and to foster the development of excellence in J.B. Speed School of Engineering. Performance evaluations shall be based on merit, including contributions to the missions of the department, J.B. Speed School of Engineering, and the University.

Evaluations of performance will be based on the annual work plans.

Section 3.1  Annual Work Plan

During the spring semester of each calendar year, each full-time faculty member shall develop an annual work plan that describes the distribution of effort planned for the calendar year. The steps to be used in the annual work plan development are described below; the dates for each step are specified in Appendix 4. The department chair will provide his or her faculty with a list of proposed instruction and other duties for the upcoming calendar year. Each faculty member then drafts an annual work plan agreement and submits it to the department chair. This plan shall define faculty activity based on teaching, research, and service.

Each faculty member in full-time status for the year must account for 100% of a full work load by allocation of effort. Justification for allocations of effort shall take the form of listing the activities (e.g., courses to be taught, committee assignments, etc.).

Annual work plans shall be initiated in the department where the faculty member holds primary appointment. For faculty appointed to administrative positions, annual work plans will be negotiated with the Dean or his/her representative and the individual.

The department chair shall evaluate the annual work plans and meet with each faculty member to negotiate a mutually agreeable plan. The plan should describe the faculty member's role in carrying out the mission and goals of the department while seeking to accommodate the individual's professional goals. If the department chair and faculty member cannot agree on an annual work plan, each shall submit a proposed plan and explanation to the DFAC for review. The DFAC may request copies of other approved departmental work plans in order to evaluate consistency and fairness. The DFAC will make a recommendation regarding a suitable faculty work plan and forward their recommendation to the chair. If the chair and faculty member still disagree, the proposed plans and explanations from the chair, faculty member, and DFAC will be forwarded to the Dean. The Dean will approve or modify the faculty member's workplan and distribute it to the chair and faculty member for implementation.

Annual work plans should be revised if a significant change in a faculty member's situation occurs. Annual work plans may be revised during the year only by mutual agreement.

In every personnel action, the accomplishments of the faculty member shall be reviewed against the background of the distribution of effort identified in the annual work plan for the period under review. Accomplishments in proportion to the allocation of effort to each area of activity shall be required.
All approved annual work plans shall respect both the individual faculty member's need to shape his or her own career and the School's various needs. Annual work also must respect the limitations imposed by budgets, specific department needs, and may require the faculty member to perform various functions at different stages in his or her career.

Section 3.2 Code of Conduct

Part 3.2.1 General Criteria
As per the Board of Trustees policy regarding governance of the university, every employee, in conducting the affairs of the University of Louisville, is expected to comply with applicable federal, state, and local laws as well as the policies and procedures of the University of Louisville.

The standards of conduct at the University of Louisville are identified in the University's Code of Conduct and supported through policies, procedures, and workplace rules. Additional guidelines for Speed faculty are described in Appendix 7. These documents provide guidance for making decisions and memorialize the institution's commitment to responsible behavior.

Additionally, all faculty are expected to be guided by and comply with all principles and canons of their particular professions and disciplines, and to adhere to their professional code of conduct and ethics. As such, all J.B. Speed School of Engineering faculty are expected to act and behave appropriately, and in a professional manner as they perform their university functions both on and off campus.

Part 3.2.2 Process
Failure to act in a professional, acceptable, or appropriate manner may embody many forms and adversely affect the individual, department, school and/or university with varying levels of severity. The purpose of this section is not only to provide a guide to resolve inappropriate conduct, but also to allow adaptability for each unique situation.

File a complaint
Any J.B. Speed School of Engineering faculty, department chair, or Dean may initiate a code of conduct complaint against any other faculty, department chair, or Dean within the school. (Grievances involving staff and students must follow associated Redbook procedures.) Code of conduct complaints must be submitted to the Dean in writing, signed, and dated. The complaints must identify the individuals involved and the alleged inappropriate conduct, along with any evidence to support the claim and any history of actions previously taken to attempt to resolve the misconduct.

Once the Dean receives a code of conduct complaint, the Dean must work to resolve the issue through an informal or formal resolution process. The Dean is expected to work to resolve the code of conduct complaint expeditiously. However, once a code of conduct complaint is filed with the Dean, the time for resolution will depend on the specific details concerning each case.

If the Dean is the individual identified in the code of conduct complaint as having committed the alleged inappropriate conduct, the complaint should be delivered to the Provost.
Informal resolution

If reasonable and possible, the Dean will work to resolve any code of conduct complaint through informal means. This may involve discussions or facilitated dialogue between affected parties, or other actions deemed appropriate. Any informal resolution to a code of conduct complaint must be documented by the Dean, distributed to all affected parties, and maintained in records kept by the Dean’s office.

Formal resolution

If an informal resolution to a code of conduct complaint cannot be achieved, the Dean will work to resolve the issue through a more formal means. A formal resolution process is generally appropriate for more complex, or severe cases. The Dean may implement procedures and resources as necessary to render a judgement and resolve the case. To formally conclude the code of conduct complaint, the Dean must prepare a letter that addresses the following:

- Summarize the case including events, conduct and/or actions under review
- Summarize the resources utilized to assemble information relevant to the case (committees formed, who was interviewed, etc.)
- Summarize the key information relating to the case (what are the critical components that must be addressed)
- Identify metrics used to assess faculty behavior (whose code of conduct, which ethical standard or canon).
- Render a clear opinion on whether the case violated the identified code(s) of conduct or other metric.
- Identify sanctions, consequences or other remedial actions to be imposed

The Dean’s letter resolving the code of conduct complaint must be provided to the complainant, all affected parties, and maintained in records kept by the Dean’s office.

Part 3.2.3 Consequences

Faculty who fail to adhere to the code of conduct may be subject to the following:

- Complete education or training.
- Receive a reprimand from the Dean into their personnel file.
- Liability for loss, damage or injury to the University or University property. This may take the form of appropriate service and/or monetary or material replacement.
- Separation from the University for a definite period of time, after which the offending faculty member is eligible to return. Conditions for return should be clearly specified by the Dean. Suspension may be with or without salary (full or partial). Suspension without pay is subject to approval of the Executive Vice President and University Provost as well as the President.
- Referral to the President of the university to consider/initiate dismissal for cause as specified in Section 4.5.3 of The Redbook.
Part 3.2.4 Appeal Procedure

The Dean’s decision may be appealed to the University-wide grievance committee as specified in Article 4.4 of The Redbook.

Section 3.3 Compensation

If there are funds for merit-based salary increments in a given year, increments for all faculty shall be subject to the following guidelines and in accordance with The Redbook Minimum Guidelines Sec III.B.

After distribution of salary increment funds to departments, the department chair will determine how to allocate salary increments appropriate to faculty member performance and the size of the salary pool. The chair will send a description and explanation of the policy for salary increments to the Dean for approval. Only faculty whose overall performance is proficient are eligible for a salary increment. No departmental policy shall be implemented until approved by the Dean.

The Dean will inform each faculty member in writing of his or her salary increment. In the event a faculty member is dissatisfied with his/her salary increment, the faculty member may submit a letter of appeal to the chair who must forward this to the Dean. The Dean has dispositional authority.

Per The Redbook Minimum Guidelines Sec. III.B.4.G, the dean shall report annually to the faculty and to the Executive Vice President and University Provost the frequency distribution of the percentage salary increases received by all faculty members in the unit and a description of the evaluation system used to arrive at such salary increases.
Article 4 Amendments

Amendments to this document must be approved by the J.B. Speed School of Engineering faculty. The vote will be made by electronic ballot after discussion at a faculty meeting. Approval requires two-thirds of those voting but no less than a simple majority of all the faculty. Amendments receiving sufficiently many votes will be forwarded, as necessary, through appropriate channels to the Board of Trustees for approval.

Appendix 1 Scope and Definitions

Section App-1.1 Purpose

The Redbook requires units to adopt policy and procedure documents on faculty appointment, promotion, tenure, as consistent with its Minimum Guidelines for Faculty Personnel Reviews (Addenda to Chapter 4 of The Redbook). This document and the appendices are intended to fulfill the requirements.

Section App-1.2 Scope

The criteria and procedures in this document apply on a school-wide basis, except that established departments may adopt procedures compatible with this document for processing their evaluations and recommendations. When, and if, such departmental procedures are developed, they should be made an addition to this document.

Part App-1.3.1 Teaching

Teaching includes all work that involves the use of the faculty’s expertise to communicate subject matter and research expertise to students. Typically, teaching takes place in the classroom or through mentoring individual or small groups of students. Good teaching involves the ability to interact effectively with students. When teaching both undergraduate and graduate classes, pedagogical procedures must be carefully planned, continuously examined, and directly related to the subject taught. Good teachers stimulate active, not passive, learning, and encourage students to be critical, creative thinkers with the capacity to go on learning after their college days are over.

As a scholarly enterprise, teaching begins with what the teacher knows. Those who teach must be, above all, well informed, and steeped in the knowledge of their instructional and research fields. Hard work and serious study underpin good teaching. Good teaching means that faculty, as scholars, are also learners.

Part App-1.3.2 Research and Creative Activity

For most faculty, research, basic or applied, is delving into some question in that faculty member’s field and seeking to add to the reservoir of knowledge. Such endeavors not only result in the creation of knowledge, but also invigorate student-faculty relationships inside the classroom and out. Research includes the act of knowledge creation through the publication or dissemination of original or innovative theoretical, empirical, or creative work. The intellectual excitement and progress that are generated by research are vital to a university such as ours.

Research also means making connections across the disciplines, placing the specialties in a larger context, illuminating data in a revealing way, and/or educating non-specialists. There is a need for scholars who give meaning to isolated facts by putting them in perspective. Research is also serious, disciplined work that seeks to draw together, interpret, and bring insight to bear on new developments.

Research also occurs when one applies information, interpretation, or techniques characteristic of one’s discipline to consequential problems in the real world. The key to defining application is that the activity must be tied directly to one’s special field of knowledge and relate to one’s professional activity.

Research and creative activities aimed at teaching involve not only transmitting knowledge, but transforming and extending it as well. This is an important area of research that can lead to better pedagogical practices.

Part App-1.3.3 Service

Service is the application of general academic expertise that results from experience as a university educator, as when one participates in faculty governance within the university or when service activities outside the university are linked to one’s general academic expertise. Service is distinguished from research in that service does not require that the activity be related to one’s area of professional expertise. Additionally, service does not include activities that one might engage in as a citizen of a civic community, but is restricted to those activities required by the students, department, college, university or profession.

Part App-1.3.4 Tenure

Tenure is the right of certain full-time faculty personnel who hold academic rank to continuous full-time employment without reduction in academic rank until retirement or termination as provided in Section 4.5.3 of The Redbook. Tenure is granted in an academic unit in accordance with the procedures established in Section 4.2.2.8 of The Redbook.

Part App-1.3.5 Proficiency

Whenever used in this document, the word “proficient” shall be understood to mean “to satisfy capably all the special demands or requirements of a particular situation, craft, or profession.”

The DFAC in this usage is to be interpreted as the subset of members comprising either the department tenure committee or department promotion committee depending on the type of review (see Article 2). The Speed School Faculty Affairs Committee is referred to below as the FAC.

Appendix 5  Guidelines for Review and Evaluation Letters

Section App-5.1  Purpose

The following describes the procedures for solicitation of extramural review letters and guidelines for evaluation letters by the department chair (DC), and department faculty activity committee (DFAC), and Faculty Affairs Committee (FAC) in promotion and tenure cases.

Section App-5.2  Extramural Review Letters

The faculty member (FM), DC, and DFAC chair each have a role in completing this process. This appendix does not provide a schedule but the steps below should be undertaken after careful consideration of the dates outlined in Appendix 2 (Promotion and Tenure Review Schedules).

This procedure satisfies Section IV.D.5(a) of the Minimum Guidelines for Faculty Personnel Reviews (Addenda to Chapter 4 of The Redbook, henceforth referred to as the Minimum Guidelines), which states: “Each unit document must specify the process by which extramural evaluators shall be solicited. This process shall be designed to certify the professional expertise and objectivity of the evaluators, whose comments regarding the quality of the work under review shall be solicited along with justification of those comments.” The promotion and tenure process determines what constitutes objectivity; however, it is stipulated that close colleagues, close collaborators, former mentors, co-authors, and so on, are not generally considered objective evaluators. The FM and DC statements regarding the suitability of potential reviewers may be used by the Speed School Faculty Affairs Committee (FAC) to satisfy Section IV.D.5(c) of the Minimum Guidelines which states, in part, that “The unit personnel committee shall provide a written analysis of the validity and significance of the evaluations received.” The FAC may choose, at its discretion, to create its own written analysis of the extramural evaluators in place of the FM and DC suitability statements.

The steps for the extramural review letters are listed below. However, it is understood that individual circumstances may require alteration of these steps; in such cases, the Department Chair (DC) should discuss the matter with the Faculty Member (FM) and the DFAC chair, outline the proposed changes in writing, and forward to the Dean for approval (with a copy to the FM, DFAC chair and FAC chair). If possible, preference should be given to reviewers who are tenured (in tenure review cases), full professors, and familiar with the candidate’s research (if applicable).

- FM shall provide to the Department Chair (DC) a list of 4-6 potential reviewers, along with a brief statement for each one as to why they are suitable to serve as extramural reviewers.
- DC shall provide to the FM a list of 4-6 potential reviewers, different from those suggested by the FM, along with a brief statement for each one as to why they are suitable to serve as extramural reviewers.
- DC and FM will review the combined lists and come to consensus regarding a list of 8-12 potential reviewers, eliminating and/or adding additional potential reviewers if necessary.
- DC requests about 6 extramural letters, selecting from the candidate’s list and from the chair’s list in a manner of his/her choosing. The DC should prepare a list of names and affiliations of all reviewers and a brief statement regarding their suitability and objectivity to be included in the dossier. Solicitation letter(s) sent to reviewers should also be included in the dossier.
• If a potential reviewer declines, an additional review request should be sent, with the chair selecting from the remaining potential reviewers by alternating between the FM and DC lists.
• The dossier must contain a minimum of 4 extramural review letters. The department chair and the DFAC chair will determine when the period to receive extramural review letters has closed. All letters received by this date will be included in the dossier, while any received after this date may be discarded without consideration.
• The DFAC chair is responsible for adding the extramural review letters to the dossier; the associated statement written about the reviewer’s suitability also becomes part of the record. If the candidate wishes to review the dossier at any point, the names and affiliations of the reviewers must be redacted from the candidate to ensure the confidentiality of the reviewers.
• Once the letter receipt period has closed, the DFAC chair will provide the candidate with a redacted document containing the external review letters. This will include a cover letter indicating that the FM has 7 days to respond, in writing, to the extramural review letters. If desired; the DFAC chair has the discretion to grant additional time if requested by the candidate. The FM’s written response to the extramural letters received in the allowed timeframe must be added to the dossier prior to consideration by the DFAC. The FM has the right to add a response at a later time but this will not alter any discussions or decisions that have preceded it.
• Upon conclusion of the 7 day (or longer if agreed) extramural reviewer letter response period, the DFAC chair calls a meeting of the DFAC to consider the FM candidate further.

Section App-5.3 DFAC Evaluation Letter

After the DFAC meets to discuss the FM candidate, the DFAC chair writes a letter to be included in the evaluation file. The letter should include:

- Names of committee members
- Committee recommendation regarding promotion and/or tenure along with vote count.
- Summary of discussion and justification of committee vote regarding FM member performance in departmental criteria for teaching, research or creative activity, and service (Section 2.2). If any votes are negative, the letter should clearly state why the committee member(s) felt the candidate did not sufficiently meet criteria. Dissenting members may write a separate letter if desired to be included in evaluation file.
- Comment on the suitability and objectivity of extramural reviewers

Section App-5.4 Department Chair (DC) Evaluation Letter

The Department Chair must also provide a letter that evaluates the candidates promotion and/or tenure materials. The chair’s letter should include:

- Provide a summary regarding suitability of external reviewers
- Provide a summary discussion of the external reviewer’s evaluations
• Overall recommendation of candidate for promotion or tenure
• Discussion of research activities (as appropriate) including focus area, suitability for continued development, discussion of publications and suitability of journals, discussion of proposal and funding efforts, and other significant factors
• Discussion of teaching activities (as appropriate) including teaching loads, effort, improvement, quality of instruction, and other significant factors
• Discussion of service activities (as appropriate) including university, school, department activities, and other significant factors
• Discuss any other relevant strengths and weaknesses of the candidate as appropriate

Section App-5.5  FAC Evaluation Letter

After the FAC meets to discuss the FM candidate, the FAC chair writes a letter to be included in the evaluation file. The letter should include:

• Names of committee members
• Committee recommendation regarding promotion and/or tenure along with vote count
• Summary of discussion and justification of committee vote. If any votes are negative, the letter should clearly state why the committee member(s) felt the candidate did not sufficiently meet criteria. Dissenting members may write a separate letter if desired to be included in evaluation file.
• Comment on fairness and objectivity of reviews by extramural evaluators, DFAC, and DC.
Appendix 6 Guidelines for Promotion and Tenure Materials

Section App-6.1  Purpose

The criteria for tenure reviews and reviews for promotion in rank are specified in The Redbook Section 4.2.2.F and Section 4.2.3.A, respectively, as Teaching, Research or Creative Activity, and Service to the department, the J.B. Speed School of Engineering, the University, the profession and the community. The Minimum Guidelines for Faculty Personnel Reviews which is an addendum within Chapter 4 of The Redbook provides standards for the evaluation and review of the criteria.

In addition to the university criteria, The J.B. Speed School of Engineering may also consider

- Registration / licensure as a Professional Engineer or other forms of certification where appropriate
- Overall professional development, including education and experience prior to University employment, and subsequent efforts to maintain and advance professional competency
- University leadership capability and experience
- Administrative assignments

Ultimately, however, it is the responsibility of the individual faculty member to organize and present the most compelling evidence of their proficiency in each of the criteria. The following information is meant to provide additional guidance in this regard.

Section App-6.2  Evidence for Proficiency in Teaching

Providing evidence for proficiency in teaching should begin with student evaluations in each course taught. This should include both detailed evaluations as well as a summary of the evaluations. The size for each course should also be given as part of this section. Student evaluations should not provide the sole criterion for evaluation of teaching. Other forms of evidence can include, but are not limited to,

- Publications in peer reviewed journals, monographs, textbooks, conference proceedings, etc., on teaching pedagogy;
- Evaluation of teaching based upon student questionnaires or mid-semester reviews, letters from current or former students, classroom visitations by chairs, colleagues, or other forms of peer review, or comments spontaneously received by the chair;
- Syllabi and course material;
- The submission of proposals and success in obtaining funding of research directed toward improved teaching methods and/or the acquisition of equipment and instrumentation to enhance teaching effectiveness.
- Curriculum development,
- Participation in faculty learning communities and other professional development opportunities,
• Thesis and dissertation supervision, as well as mentoring students, part-time faculty, and junior faculty.

Section App-6.3   Evidence for Proficiency in Research and Creative Activity

A significant source of evidence for proficiency in research and creative activity should come in the form of publications in peer reviewed journals, monographs, edited books, textbooks, conference proceedings, and technical reports. Discussion of papers should begin with a description of authorship ordering that is utilized in the faculty member’s field. It should also include a discussion of the key journals within the field of interest and a general range of impact factors for those journals. The letter from the DFAC or the Department Chair should corroborate these statements. A brief description and a highlight of each of the faculty member’s students in the author list should accompany each paper. Papers under review at the time should also be listed.

Another significant source of evidence for proficiency in research is the submission of proposals and success in obtaining funding of research directed toward the discovery of new knowledge. Both single investigator and multi-investigator efforts can be used as evidence of these activities, especially in multi-disciplinary efforts where principal investigators on multiple-principal-investigator grants should be rewarded commensurately to those on single-principal-investigator grants. Discussion of proposals and grants should include the faculty member’s role and the percentage of the project ascribed to the individual.

Proficiency in research also may be evidenced by any forum that demonstrates effectiveness in linking knowledge across fields of specialization. These would include but are not limited to presentations; computer courseware; public speeches, and television and radio presentations.

Proficiency in research or creative activity may also be evidenced by: publications in peer reviewed journals, monographs, textbooks, conference proceedings, etc., on teaching methodology; and the submission of proposals and success in obtaining funding of research directed toward improved teaching methods and/or the acquisition of equipment and instrumentation to enhance teaching effectiveness.

Additionally, proficiency in research or creative activity can be demonstrated through entrepreneurial activities directed at the discovery and commercialization of new knowledge. These activities can be demonstrated through technology disclosures and patents, licensing agreements, and the formation of start-up companies.

Section App-6.4   Evidence for Proficiency in Service

Evaluations of service should be done in a manner similar to that for teaching and research to the extent possible. Most commonly, service does not automatically produce documentary results. Thus, written statements by witnesses, the people or organizations benefiting from the service, or colleagues evaluating such service may be obtained. Also included would be any products resulting from service activities along with evidence regarding the nature of the candidate’s contribution. Minor activities, such as committee work of short duration, should have a less formal, aggregate evaluation.

Evaluation of service should also incorporate work that the university or unit has asked faculty to perform but that is not necessarily rewarded within individual unit cultures; specific examples may include, but are not limited to, work on the University’s and the unit’s strategic goals, work on signature partnerships and other forms of community engagement.
Appendix 7 Guidelines for Code of Conduct

Where there is no law, but every man does what is right in his own eyes, there is the least of real liberty.

It is difficult to find another branch of knowledge where a small amount of study produces such great results in increased efficiency in a country where the people rule, as in parliamentary law.

This Twelfth Edition supersedes all previous editions and is intended automatically to become the parliamentary authority in organizations whose bylaws prescribe “Robert’s Rules of Order,” “Robert’s Rules of Order Revised,” “Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised,” or “the current edition of” any of these titles, or the like, without specifying a particular edition. If the bylaws specifically identify one of the eleven previous editions of the work as parliamentary authority, the bylaws should be amended to prescribe “the current edition of ‘Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised’” (see 56:66).

This Twelfth Edition of Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised (RONR) is issued one hundred forty-four years after the 1876 publication, by then-Major (later Brigadier General) Henry M. Robert, of the first in the series of books familiarly known as “Robert’s Rules of Order.” A complete list of the editions is shown on page vi, and their history is told in the Introduction.

This Twelfth Edition in the entire series is the sixth edition of the second complete reworking of the subject matter first published in 1970. It is the only book in print containing the completely developed body of rules understood as “Robert’s Rules of Order.”

Users of this work should be aware of three important resources that supplement RONR.

First, for some time there had been a felt tension between the need for a parliamentary manual lengthy enough to provide rules as comprehensive and unambiguous as possible so as to cover the great number and variety of parliamentary issues that may arise in a deliberative assembly, on the one hand, and the desirability of a book simple and straightforward enough to allow the ordinary meeting-goer easily to learn and use the basic rules that are sufficient for most meetings, on the other hand.

When this book last underwent complete revision in 1970, a concerted effort was made to enhance the value of the work for the study of parliamentary law—to the extent consistent with its primary purpose as a reference manual. For those who will brave it, it is written to serve as a self-explanatory text that can be read through, with topics presented in an order that will best convey an overall understanding of the subject matter. Nevertheless, it is recognized that this project may be a bigger challenge than many newcomers to parliamentary procedure will find themselves at first able or willing to take on.

In 2005, to meet the need for a simple and short book, Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised In Brief was first published. A new edition of In Brief, updated and revised so as to mesh with this Twelfth Edition, has now been published. This Twelfth Edition of RONR, the complete rule book, now contains 633 pages of text, plus tables and charts. All of its content has to be included because it may be needed and has at some time come up as a question of procedure somewhere. This book is designed as a reference providing, as nearly as possible, an answer to any question of parliamentary procedure that may arise.

To gain an introductory familiarity with meeting rules, however, many people will find it useful to start with the In Brief book. In only thirty minutes, the average reader can learn the bare essentials, and with about ninety minutes’ reading can cover all the basics. Additional chapters give suggestions on how most efficiently to use this Twelfth Edition of RONR as a reference manual and guidance to those chosen as convention delegates or alternates, or as president, vice-president, secretary, or treasurer of an organization. Helpful tables at the end give both the chair and the ordinary member the proper wording to use in handling the most common motions and conducting a meeting.

It cannot be stressed too strongly, however, that In Brief is an introductory supplement to, not a replacement for, this book. Only this book is comprehensive enough to be suitable for adoption as the rule book governing an assembly, and it covers many essential matters—from the content of bylaws to disciplinary procedures—that are hardly touched on in the shorter work.

Second, the current edition is, for the first time, being published as an e-book as well as in the traditional print format. Rapid search ability and hyperlinked cross-references are particularly useful features of the e-book. Several previous editions had been formatted to facilitate citations to the rules in them by page and line number. Largely motivated by an attempt to maximize the utility of the e-book, this edition inaugurates a system of reference by paragraph number, with consecutive numbers within each section shown in the margins. Users are encouraged to cite rules in this edition by these numbers, as shown in the “Cite This Book” box on page vii.

In addition, the new editions of both RONR and In Brief are again being made available through American Legal Publishing as a PC-based software application with powerfully sophisticated search and browsing features as well as helpful bonus material, such as instructions for tellers and timekeepers, sample forms, and step-by-step explanations of secondary amendments.

Third, the Robert’s Rules Association—the organization of the original author’s descendants that oversees the management and regular updating of the work—sponsors a website at www.robertsrules.com. On its “Question and Answer Forum,” one may post queries and conduct discussion about any aspect of parliamentary procedure.

Since the publication of the first edition of Robert’s Rules in 1876, General Robert and, since his death, his successors have been receiving and replying to questions of parliamentary law. As the Introduction notes concerning the 1915 revision, “The reorganization, expansion, and clarification represented by Robert’s Rules of Order Revised was largely the outgrowth of hundreds of letters received by the author over the years, submitting questions of parliamentary law arising in organizations and not covered in the earlier editions.” Questions asked on the Question and Answer Forum have made an integral contribution to the authors’ continuing task of identifying matters in need of clarification while preparing this new edition.

The website also includes “RONR Official Interpretations” on issues of parliamentary law arising between editions that RONR’s authors deem useful to address. These interpretations are not technically binding on an organization that has adopted Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised as its parliamentary authority, but they are nonetheless definitive interpretations of the work by the current authors and should therefore be treated as highly persuasive. It is thus advisable for presiding officers, or the parliamentarians who advise them, to consult them for guidance on matters they address.
This Twelfth Edition of RONR clarifies, modifies, and expands upon the rules in previous editions, as situations occurring in assemblies point to a need for more fully developed rules to go by in particular cases.

In this edition, a number of sections or subsections have been substantially revised, most notably in the following respects:

1. Section 14 covering Postpone to a Certain Time, to have this motion’s Standard Descriptive Characteristics 1 and 2 more closely comport with the rules relating to Point of Order and Appeal; to avoid unnecessary repetition of the rules found in section 41 dealing with procedures to be followed when postponed items are taken up again; and to clarify the rules concerning the effect of postponement on motions adhering to the motion postponed and on subsequent debate and methods of voting.

2. Section 15 covering Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, to clarify the varying effects that adoption of the different forms of this motion will have on the making of subsidiary motions, and to eliminate the distinction between motions that provide only for closing debate and those that also specify when the vote shall be taken.

3. Section 17 covering Lay on the Table, to rearrange these rules into a more orderly and logical sequence.

4. Section 23 covering Point of Order, to clarify and expand upon the rules setting forth remedies for violations that have given rise to a continuing breach.

5. Section 34 covering Take from the Table, to clarify the rules that impose time limits on taking questions from the table and the rules setting forth the status of motions taken from the table.

6. Section 37 covering Reconsider, by the insertion at the beginning of the section of a summary of the rules relating to reconsideration of votes, followed by a substantial rearrangement of the order in which the rules in this section are discussed.

7. The rules relating to the device of filling blanks (12:92–113), to provide substantially greater guidance concerning the proper procedure to be followed in making, debating, and voting on suggestions.

8. The rules relating to the office of vice-president (47:23–31), for purposes of clarification and in order to incorporate relevant provisions previously found only scattered elsewhere throughout the book.

9. That portion of section 48 which deals with minutes (48:1–15), to more clearly present the various procedures for their approval; to state how an assembly may specify the inclusion of different information than that prescribed by this book, either for a particular meeting or on a regular basis; to more clearly identify those occasions when the number of votes on each side of a question is to be recorded; to provide that the secretary may include as an attachment committee reports that the assembly has ordered to be entered in; and to describe how corrections made to previously adopted minutes are recorded.

Some of the other more important points of revision include the following:

10. Refinement of the rules governing the sending of notice (the “call”) of regular meetings, including the conditions under which notice is required to be sent (9:2–4).

11. Clarification of what the obligation of secrecy of an executive session does and does not entail, and how the secrecy may be lifted (9:26–27).

12. Clarification of the circumstances in which the assembly may adopt an incidental main motion that conflicts with a provision of the bylaws in the nature of a rule of order (10:26(1)n1).
13. Clarification that the prohibition against making a motion to Amend that raises a question already decided applies only during the session at which the decision was made (12:13, 12:25, 12:28, 12:48, 12:63, 12:65, 12:74, 12:90).
14. Recognition of circumstances in which use of electronic devices such as voting keypads can fulfill a requirement that voting be by ballot (45:42).
17. Clarification of procedures for making minutes of a board available to others who are not board members (49:17–19).
18. Recognition that, when the bylaws specify the number of years in a term of office, the actual term of office may be more or less than a whole number of calendar years (56:27).
19. Requirement that a bylaws revision is in order only when prepared by a committee authorized to draft it (57:5).
20. Clarification of the procedure to be followed for presentation and adoption of convention standing rules (59:30–34).
21. Expanded explanation of the procedure for making and enforcing points of order and appeals in the subsection Remedies for Abuse of Authority by the Chair in a Meeting (62:2–7).
22. Inclusion of an appendix containing sample rules for electronic meetings.

This book embodies a codification of the present-day general parliamentary law (omitting provisions having no application outside legislative bodies). The book is also designed as a manual to be adopted by organizations or assemblies as their parliamentary authority. When the manual has been thus adopted, the rules within it, together with any special rules of procedure that may also be adopted, are binding upon the body and constitute that body's rules of order.

Parliamentary law originally was the name given to the rules and customs for carrying on business in the English Parliament that were developed through a continuing process of decisions and precedents somewhat like the growth of the common law. These rules and customs, as brought to America with the settling of the New World, became the basic substance from which the practice of legislative bodies in the United States evolved. Out of early American legislative procedure and paralleling it in further development has come the general parliamentary law, or common parliamentary law, of today, which is adapted to the needs of organizations and assemblies of widely differing purposes and conditions. In legislative bodies, there is often recourse to the general parliamentary law in situations not covered by the rules or precedents of the particular body—although some of the necessary procedure in such a case must be proper to that type of assembly alone.

The kind of gathering in which parliamentary law is applicable is known as a deliberative assembly. This expression was used by Edmund Burke to describe the English Parliament, in a speech to the electorate at Bristol in 1774; and it became the basic term for a body of persons meeting (under conditions detailed in 1:1) to discuss and Acting under the general parliamentary law, any deliberative assembly can formally adopt written rules of procedure which, as fully explained in 2:14–22, can confirm, add to, or deviate from parliamentary law itself. As indicated above, the term rules of order, in its proper sense, refers to any written parliamentary rules so adopted, whether they are contained in a manual or have been specially composed by the adopting body. The term parliamentary procedure, although frequently used synonymously with parliamentary law, refers in this book to parliamentary law as it is followed in any given assembly or organization, together with whatever rules of order the body may have adopted.

Thomas Jefferson speaks of “the Parliamentary branch of the law.” From this country’s beginning, it has been an underlying assumption of our culture that what has been authoritatively established as parliamentary law is in the nature of a body of law—in the sense of being binding within all assemblies except as they may adopt special rules varying from the general parliamentary law. But since there has not always been complete agreement as to what constitutes parliamentary law, no society or assembly should attempt to transact business without having adopted some standard manual on the subject as its authority in all cases not covered by its own special rules.
Early Origins of the English Parliament

The holding of assemblies of the elders, fighting men, or people of a tribe, community, or city to make decisions or render opinions on important matters is doubtless a custom older than history. The ancient Athenian historian Thucydides (c. 460–400 B.C.), in his History of the Peloponnesian War (between Athens and Sparta), cites numerous cases of determinations by the peoples of cities being decided in assembly by vote. In one passage (Book I, 86–87), describing the assembly at Sparta in which, in the beginning, the Peloponnesian alliance reached the decision to declare war on Athens, he records a specific instance of what we now know as a voice vote (referred to, however, as a decision “by acclamation”), where the device that developed in modern parliamentary times as a Division of the Assembly (see 29:1–8) was resorted to, in its original form. His account of the incident reads, in part, as follows:

Sthenelaïdas, one of the ephors at this time, came forward last and spoke to the Lacedaemonians in the following way:… [delivering a brief indictment summarizing a pattern of conduct by the Athenians that, he argued, constituted a breach of a thirty year treaty of truce which he found totally unacceptable].

After making this sort of speech, he himself as ephor put the question to the assembly of the Lacedaemonians. And he stated that he could not distinguish which shout was the louder (for they decide by acclamation, not by vote) but said, because he wanted them to become more eager for war by revealing their opinions openly, “Lacedaemonians, those of you who think that the treaty has been broken, and the Athenians are aggressors, stand over there,” pointing out the place to them, “and those who do not think so, on the other side.” They stood up and separated, and there were many more who thought the treaty had been broken.

According to a widely held view, our own tradition of parliamentary process may be traced to ways of life in Anglo-Saxon tribes before their migration to the island of Britain starting in the fifth century A.D. Among these peoples on the continent of Europe, the tribe was the largest regularly existing political unit. From analogy with the customs of other Germanic tribes, it is supposed that freemen were accustomed to come together in the “Village-moot,” to make “bye-laws” for their village and to administer justice. These groups also chose men to represent them at the “Hundred-moot,” of the district, which acted as a court of appeal and arbitrated intervillage disputes. Still higher in authority, and similarly constituted, was the “Folk-moot,” which was also the citizen army of the tribe.

The same institutions, it is believed, were carried into Anglo-Saxon England, where the Folk-moot became the “Shire-moot.” There is little historical knowledge of events in the island of Britain during the two hundred years after the first Anglo-Saxon invasions early in the fifth century. When a picture of Anglo-Saxon England in its formative stages does emerge, the Shire-moot—later called the “Shire Court”—is found to be an instrument of local government subject to crown supervision, under a king advised by a national assembly known as the “witan,” or “witenagemot.” Originally established in each of the separate early English kingdoms and supposed to include all freemen who held land, the witenagemot in the united and Christianized England normally met at the call of the king and was composed of such major landholders, ealdormen, king’s officers, bishops, and abbots as he might wish to summon. Although the witenagemot was not in practice a democratic institution, the king’s authority was held to derive from its consent, and it might exert influence in the choice of a new king.

The Norman Conquest in 1066 brought England under tight military control by a French-speaking administration, but the structure of Anglo-Saxon governmental machinery was left largely intact.

The Norman kings assembled councils composed of court officials, barons, and prelates—of whom the number present depended on the importance of the business to be discussed. In its fullest form this assembly was known as the “Great Council,” and was looked upon as constitutionally a continuation of the witenagemot. Under the feudal system, it was the duty of each baron to advise the king on any matter on which he might request the baron’s opinion. The early Great Councils were feudal assemblies summoned by the king for the purpose of obtaining such advice.

The conversion of the Great Council into what we now know as Parliament came about during the thirteenth and early fourteenth centuries. The word parliament was in use slightly earlier to describe any important meeting held for the purpose of discussion. This word was first officially applied to certain Great Councils of a particular character in the time of Henry III (reigned 1216–1272). The distinguishing feature of the early parliaments was the fact that the barons of the Council were invited not only to express their opinions individually on matters laid before them by the king, but to discuss, with each other, the overall “state of the realm”—the business “of king and kingdom” rather than only “the king’s business.” The earliest parliament clearly identifiable as of this character was held in 1258.

A second important change in the English national assembly began soon afterward with the introduction into Parliament of representatives of the shires (knights) and of the towns or boroughs (burgesses)—that is, taken together, representatives of the communities, or Commons. Although a number of precedents for such a step had been set earlier, the first national parliament in which the Commons were included was that held by Edward I in 1275. Initially, the primary purpose in summoning the Commons was usually to obtain their approval for measures of taxation, and they were included in Parliament only on occasions when such support was desired. After 1311, however, the Commons were in attendance at every parliament. Separation of Parliament into the two branches which later became known as the House of Lords and the House of Commons took place by degrees and was completed shortly after 1340.
Development of Procedure in Parliament

“The proceedings of parliament in ancient times, and for a long while,” Thomas Jefferson wrote more than four and a half centuries later (in the preface to his famous Manual, discussed below), “were crude, multiform, and embarrassing. They have been however constantly advancing towards uniformity and accuracy….”

Many of the advances in the parliamentary system alluded to by Jefferson occurred from the latter part of the sixteenth century through the seventeenth century. This was a period of prolonged internal conflict over the prerogatives of Parliament—as opposed to those of the king—which stimulated an increased interest in procedure, especially in the House of Commons. During this same time, the Journal of the House of Commons, which was first undertaken by the clerk of the House on his own initiative in 1547, became established as a source of precedent on matters of procedure. The first recorded instance of such use of this Journal was in 1580 or 1581. The Journal was given official status as a document of the Commons about 1623.

Roughly concurrent with the initiation of the Journal of the House of Commons was the development of a body of writing on its procedure. The earliest formal treatment of the Commons’ procedure in English was written between 1562 and 1566 by Sir Thomas Smyth and was published in 1583, six years after the author’s death, as part of a larger work, De Republica Anglorvm: The manner of Gouernement or policie of the realme of England. Activity by other authors in writing treatises on parliamentary precedents and practices followed. In 1689, the small book Lex Parliamentaria (London), variously attributed to George Petyt or George Philips, listed as references thirty-five earlier parliamentary works or sources. The book—a pocket manual prepared for the convenience of members of Parliament—including entries from the Journal of the House of Commons relating to procedure, of which the following examples illustrate the gradual evolution of parliamentary law and are readily recognized as early wordings of present-day principles.
and rules:

• One subject at a time: 1581. When a Motion has been made that Matter must receive a Determination by the Question, or be laid aside by the general Sense of the House, before another be entertain’d. (Lex Parlamentaria, p. 158.)

• Alternation between opposite points of view in assignment of the floor: 1592. It was made a Rule, That the Chairman shall ask the Parties that would speak, on which side they would speak… and the Party that speaketh against the last Speaker, is to be heard first. (ibid., p. 209.)

• Requirement that the chair always call for the negative vote: 1604. [I]t is no full Question without the Negative part be put, as well as the Affirmative. (ibid., p. 161.)

• Decorum and avoidance of personalities in debate: 1604. He that digresseth from the Matter, to fall upon the Person, ought to be suppressed by the Speaker…. No reviling or nipping words must be used. (ibid., p. 157.)

• Confinement of debate to the merits of the pending question: 1610. A Member speaking, and his speech, seeming impertinent, and there being much hissing and spitting, it was conceived for a Rule, that Mr. Speaker may stay impertinent Speeches. (ibid., p. 156.)

• Division of a question: 1640. If a Question upon a Debate contains more Parts than one, and Members seem to be for one Part, and not for the other; it may be moved, that the same may be divided into two, or more Questions: as Dec. 2, 1640, the Debate about the Election of two Knights was divided into two Questions. (ibid., p. 169.)
The Parliamentary Process Brought to America

The same period when the procedure of the House of Commons was undergoing its new development was also the time during which permanent English colonies were established in the Western Hemisphere, beginning with Virginia in 1607. The founding of this colony was soon followed by the institution of the first representative assembly in America, authorized for Virginia by the governor acting for the London Company in 1619. This body consisted of a House of Burgesses as an elected lower chamber and a small Governor’s Council as an upper chamber. As additional colonies were founded, similar assemblies were established in them, and succeeding generations of English settlers brought along the parliamentary processes they had known in the old country.

Into each legislature—into county, town, and parish meeting—the colonists transplanted the rules and customs of Parliament, as far as these rules and customs were applicable under the particular company charter, proprietary grant, or similar instrument by which the colony was established. This new type of self-government, through general parliamentary principles operating under specifications contained in a written basic document, represented a phase in the development of parliamentary law that was peculiar to America, since in England the Constitution was unwritten. Thus, each colony acquired the beginning of a body of experience later to go into the framing of individual state constitutions. The manner in which these rules and customs were adapted to meet the situation within each colony may account for the local variance in parliamentary tradition which persisted among people in America long after the founding of the United States, and that would eventually be one of the conditions that led to the writing of Robert’s Rules of Order.

When policies of the mother country in the 1700s had gradually changed with the growth of the British Empire in such a way as to set the stage for the American Revolution, representatives of the different colonies considered common resistance to the actions of Parliament. In these deliberations, the colonists were able to function effectively by depending on procedures originally developed in Parliament itself!

The First Continental Congress, convening in Philadelphia on September 5, 1774, was made up of delegates largely unacquainted with the representatives of colonies other than their own, and most of the advance planning among the colonies had been by correspondence. Thus, the accomplishments of the first two days of the Congress are worth mentioning as an indication of the grounding and experience of the members in parliamentary methods, and of the thoroughness of their preparation. By September 7 the Continental Congress had: (1) examined the credentials of, and certified as delegates, the accredited representatives; (2) completed its own organization by adopting four “rules of conduct to be observed in debating and determining the questions”; and (3) made progress toward carrying out its purposes to the extent of adopting resolutions for the appointing of committees to study the colonies’ rights and to examine statutes affecting their trade and manufactures.

Under existing rules and customs, the Second Continental Congress carried on the war; it also directed the framing of, and adopted, the Declaration of Independence. In assemblies in each state, through similar proceedings somewhat modified by local tradition, colonial charters were amended to conform to an independent status, or new state constitutions were drafted. Many of the provisions thus codified had been gradually arrived at by the separate colonies over periods of more than a hundred years. These state constitutions in turn—stemming from a common experience with English law and adapting that law to the new conditions—provided the material from which the Constitution of the United States was produced at the Constitutional Convention in 1787, in the face of seemingly deep and discouraging disagreements.

By the close of the eighteenth century, the stages through which the parent English parliamentary methods had passed in America may be summarized as follows:
• the use, within each colony, of such parliamentary rules as were applicable under its individual charter or other authorization for the establishment of the colony;
• the application of these same practices in intercolonial gatherings when representatives of the colonies met to act in their common interest; and
• the use of parliamentary procedure as an instrument for implementing the processes of representative government under a written constitution.
Jefferson’s Manual

Despite this progress, the parliamentary system of the young United States needed further codification. As presiding officer of the Senate while serving as Vice-President of the United States (1797–1801), Thomas Jefferson saw this need, which he described—with respect to the situation in the Senate—in this way:

The Constitution of the United States... authorizes each branch of [the Congress] “to determine the rules of its own proceedings.” The Senate have accordingly formed some rules for their own government; but these going only to few cases, they have referred to the decision of their President, without debate and without appeal, all questions of order arising either under their own rules or where they have provided none. This places under the discretion of the President [of the Senate] a very extensive field of decision... which, irregularly exercised, would have a powerful effect on the proceedings and determinations.... The President must feel... the necessity of recurring... to some known system of rules.... But to what system... is he to recur, as supplementary to [the rules] of the Senate?^3^

Parliament, Jefferson concluded, provided the most practical model for the Congress. It had “served as a prototype to most of” the existing state legislatures. It was “the model which we have all studied, while we are little acquainted with the modifications of it in our several states.... Its rules are probably as wisely constructed for governing the debates of a deliberative body, and obtaining its true sense, as any which can become known to us....”^4^

“Considering therefore the law of proceedings in the Senate as composed of the precepts of the constitution, the regulations of the Senate, and, where these are silent, of the rules of Parliament,”^5^ Jefferson compiled his Manual of Parliamentary Practice, published in 1801. In it, he extensively cited about fifty English works and documents on parliamentary law and related subjects. Among his sources, however, Jefferson in his preface to the Manual (p. xv) acknowledges primary indebtedness to Precedents of Proceedings in the House of Commons by John Hatsell, who was clerk of the House of Commons from 1768 to 1820. First published in 1781, Hatsell’s work is today the best authority on eighteenth-century procedure in the House of Commons.

The position of Jefferson’s Manual is unchallenged as the first to define and interpret parliamentary principles for our democratic republic and to offer a basic pattern of rules and a measure of uniformity for the legislative processes of the United States. The authority of the Manual became established through its adoption by state legislatures and by other groups. The House of Representatives also adopted Jefferson’s Manual; however, differences between the House and the Senate would cause the House to develop and become governed by a separate body of rules and practices largely superseding Jefferson’s work.
Within a few decades after Jefferson wrote his Manual, the formation of societies of various kinds—political, cultural, scientific, charitable, and religious—began to create an increasing need for a body of rules adapted to the requirements of nonlegislative organizations. It seems to have been early recognized that such societies have a deliberative character which calls for the application of essentially the same principles of decision as in a legislative body. Yet certain differences in their conditions—as compared with those of the legislative body—must be taken into account in the formulation of any system of rules suitable for the occasional meeting or the nonlegislative organization. For example:

- Congress and most state legislatures are composed of two Houses, with sessions (8:2(2)) usually lasting from several months to nearly a year; but sessions of an ordinary local society rarely last longer than one meeting of two or three hours.
- The members of a legislative body are generally paid to attend its daily meetings and can be legally compelled to do so, so that the quorum—in Congress, for example—is a majority of the members; but the quorum in a voluntary society must be much less if the organization is to be able to function.
- The business of a legislative body is vastly greater in volume and more complex than that of the typical ordinary society, so that most of the work in legislative bodies is done in standing committees, whereas in a local society it is handled by the assembly or, if necessary, is assigned to special committees.

The first author who attempted to meet the procedural needs of the country’s growing number of voluntary societies was Luther S. Cushing (1803–1856), Clerk of the Massachusetts House of Representatives and a noted jurist. His small volume, Manual of Parliamentary Practice: Rules of Proceeding and Debate in Deliberative Assemblies—which became known as “Cushing’s Manual”—was published in 1845, with a section of further notes being added in 1847. This work, the author said, was intended for “assemblies of every description, but more especially for those which are not legislative in their character.” Cushing accordingly omitted from his manual rules applicable only to lawmaking bodies, but he included those that he considered suitable for both legislative and lay assemblies.

Among Cushing’s observations and conclusions with respect to nonlegislative assemblies in particular were the following:

1. The general parliamentary rules in Jefferson’s Manual formed “the basis of the common parliamentary law of this country.” (Cushing’s Manual, p. 4.)

2. Through modifications by state legislatures, “a system of parliamentary rules [had] been established in each state, different in some particulars from those of every other state.” (ibid., p. 13.)

3. Some ordinary meetings were conducted “not merely according to the general parliamentary law” but also following the system of the individual state. (ibid., p. 14.)

4. For such societies to be considered bound by the parliamentary practice of a particular state legislature in this way, Cushing held, was “erroneous.” (ibid., p. 14.)

5. The “occasional assembly” or ordinary organization was properly subject only to the common parliamentary law and to such rules as the body would specially adopt for itself. (ibid., p. 14.)

In adherence to the last proposition, Cushing confined his book to what he considered “common parliamentary law,” and prescribed that on all other necessary matters of procedure, each organization or assembly should adopt rules of its own (rules of order)—much as Congress and legislatures do.
Although Cushing’s Manual was concisely written, was well received, and became a classic accepted as standard, it was to prove insufficient to the needs of the assemblies for which it was intended. The devising of an adequate supplementary system of rules of order by each assembly for its own use—as envisioned by Cushing—was to prove a task beyond the capacity of the average organization. In the years following the Civil War, the confusion that still existed in parliamentary practice among the multiplying number of lay associations and meetings became a matter of concern to Henry Martyn Robert.
Genesis of Robert’s Rules of Order

Henry Martyn Robert⁷ (1837–1923) was an engineering officer in the regular army—finally attaining the rank of Brigadier General as chief of his corps—who was active in church organizations and civic and educational work wherever he was stationed, as much as military duties allowed him time. He was the son of Dr. Joseph Thomas Robert (1807–1884), successively a physician, Baptist minister, and educator, who became the first president of what is now Morehouse College. Henry Robert’s interest in parliamentary law—as he often related—had been precipitated in 1863 at New Bedford, Massachusetts, where he had been transferred from more strenuous war duty after a recurrence of tropical fever. Without warning, he was asked to preside over a meeting—said to have related to the defense of the city in the event of Confederate attack from the sea and to have lasted for fourteen hours—and did not know how. But he felt that the worst thing he could do would be to decline. “My embarrassment was supreme,” he wrote. “I plunged in, trusting to Providence that the assembly would behave itself. But with the plunge went the determination that I would never attend another meeting until I knew something of... parliamentary law.”⁸

Afterward, in a small book on another subject he found a few pages of “rules for deliberative assemblies.” From these he copied information “showing four or five motions according to rank” (see 5:10–13), “two or three... that could not be debated and some that could not be amended” and carried it on a slip of paper in his wallet for several years afterward. With this, he hoped he would be safe.

In 1867 Robert was promoted to Major and ordered to San Francisco, which was then a turbulent community made up of people recently arrived from every state. As he and his wife worked with persons from different parts of the country in several organizations seeking to improve social conditions there, they found themselves in the midst of a strange situation. Remarking on it many years later, in a lecture in Cincinnati, he stated that “Friction as to what constituted parliamentary law was indeed no uncommon thing.” Each member of these organizations had brought from his home state different and often strong convictions as to what were correct parliamentary rules, and a presiding officer usually followed the customs of the locality from which he came. Under these conditions, confusion and misunderstanding had reached a point where issues of procedure consumed time that should have gone into the real work of the societies.

Robert doubted that these organizations would be able to function efficiently until there could be better agreement as to what constituted parliamentary law. In his words:

A careful reading of these books showed that it was not an easy matter to decide what was parliamentary law…. For instance, both Jefferson and Cushing gave an equal rank to the motions for the Previous Question, and to Postpone Definitely, and Indefinitely, and to Commit; the House of Representatives makes them rank thus: Previous Question, Postpone Definitely, Commit, Amend, and Postpone Indefinitely at the foot of the list; and the Senate does not allow the Previous Question and instead of placing Indefinitely Postpone at the foot, it puts it at the head of the list. Also if a motion to strike out a paragraph is lost, the paragraph can afterwards be amended according to the rules and practice of both Houses of Congress, but it could not be amended according to Jefferson and Cushing and the practice of the English Parliament. In Congress the question would be stated and put on striking out the paragraph whereas according to the other authorities it should be put on whether the paragraph shall stand as a part of the resolution.

Again, as to debate: The U.S. Senate allowed each member to speak twice on the same day to the same question without any limit as to time; all the other authorities allowed only one speech from each member on any question, and the House of Representatives also limited that speech to one hour. Also in Congress certain motions are undebatable, whereas the other authorities did not allude to such a thing as an undebatable motion, except that Cushing said in a note that legislative bodies usually, to quote, “provide that certain questions, as for example, to Adjourn, to Lay on the Table, for the Previous Question, or as to the Order of Business, shall be decided without debate.”

These examples will... show the difficulties in the way of [anyone]... who was anxious to know enough [parliamentary law] to enable him to cooperate with others in effective work in lines in which he was interested.

Robert decided to prepare a few rules of order—expected to run to about sixteen pages—which he hoped would be suitable for the societies to which he and his wife belonged. If these organizations adopted such rules, “each member could know what motions could be debated and amended, which ones required a two-thirds vote, and what was the order of precedence.” When a few sheets had been printed, he began to try them out. The reception was encouraging, but the pamphlet was never completed. He came to the conclusion that the real problem would not be solved by “a half dozen societies having a system of parliamentary law of their own.”

At about this time (1871), Robert was transferred to duty based in Portland, Oregon. Although he was obliged to lay aside parliamentary studies because of heavier responsibilities, such contact with organizations as he had time for strengthened ideas which had begun to crystallize in San Francisco: (1) In the country at large, the average society would find it difficult to have an adequate set of rules of order prepared specially for its own use, as Cushing had apparently expected it to do. Few ordinary organizations had, in fact, done so. (2) Even if a society were in a position to work out a satisfactory set of rules, this would only create further multiplicity. The need was the reverse—to enable civic-minded people to belong to several organizations or to move to new localities without constantly encountering different parliamentary rules. (3) Conditions in ordinary societies, different as the purposes of those societies might be, were sufficiently similar from a parliamentary point of view to be guided by practically the same rules of order. (4) As far as any trend could be seen, it appeared that the best presiding officers were following the practice of the U.S. House of Representatives on basic points, such as the order of precedence of motions, which motions could be debated, and so on. The practice of the House was then approaching an established form after marked evolution during the preceding decades—during which it had become considerably different from the “old common parliamentary law” as laid down by Jefferson and Cushing.

Robert thus became convinced of the need for a new kind of parliamentary manual, “based, in its general principles, upon the rules and practice of Congress, and adapted, in its details, to the use of ordinary societies. Such a work should give, not only the methods of organizing and conducting the meetings, the duties of the officers and the names of the ordinary motions, but in addition, should state in a systematic manner, in reference to each motion, its object and effect; whether it can be amended or debated; if debatable, the extent to which it opens the main question to debate; the circumstances under which it can be made, and what other motions can be made when it is pending.”

Writing such a manual as Robert envisioned would amount to weaving into a single whole a statement of existing parliamentary law and a set of proposed rules of order. His idea was that the book should be written in a form suitable for adoption by any society, without interfering with the organization’s right to adopt any special rules it might require. In the manual, rules taken from the practice of the House should be used except in specific cases where analysis showed that some other rule was better for the conditions in an ordinary organization—which did not, for example, have the enormous volume of business to be handled, the sharp division along party lines, or the extended length of congressional sessions with daily meetings. Sometimes the Senate practice might be preferable, such as allowing each member to speak twice to the same question on the same day.

Robert had no time to begin writing until January 1874 in Milwaukee, when a severe winter tied up army engineering services along Lake Michigan for about three months. By October he had a revised manuscript of the rules of order proper, for which he was ready to seek a publisher. This manuscript, which would have made up the complete book as he originally conceived it, became the first part of the work that was finally published. When early efforts to obtain a publisher failed, he decided to have 4,000 copies made by a job printer at his own expense and under his direction. Since Robert's military duties often would not permit him to correct proofs promptly, the printer could only spare enough type to set and print sixteen pages at a time—the type then being distributed and used again for the next sixteen pages.

The printing slowly progressed in this manner through most of the year 1875. Soon after it began, Robert—having concluded, at least partly through his wife's influence, that more information should be added for the benefit of persons with no experience in meetings—wrote and added a second part, to which he gave the title "Organization and Conduct of Business." Because of its purpose and the nature of its contents, Part II was written in a simpler style, and it contained such repetition of material from Part I as the author thought would be useful to the intended reader. By the end of 1875, the printing of the two parts of the Pocket Manual of Rules of Order for Deliberative Assemblies (176 pages) was completed.

Even then, with his 4,000 "ready-printed" copies, the author was able to obtain a contract with a publisher only by making unusual concessions. In the face of the latter's skepticism as to the demand for such a work, Robert agreed to pay for binding the 4,000 copies and to bear the expense of giving 1,000 copies of the book to parliamentarians, educators, legislators, and church leaders throughout the country. The first edition of the manual accordingly was published by S. C. Griggs and Company of Chicago on February 19, 1876. The publisher placed on the cover the title Robert's Rules of Order. That first edition is now long a rare book.

Robert expected the 3,000 copies available for sale to last two years, during which he planned to prepare a revision on the basis of comments and suggestions from users. But the edition—received with immediate and enthusiastic acclaim—was sold out in four months. Six weeks after the original publication, work was begun on a second edition, with sixteen more pages, which was ready at the end of July 1876.

The following year, the portions of the second 1876 edition comprising the elementary Part II, “Organization and Conduct of Business,” and the “Table of Rules Relating to Motions”—which, with continuing development, has been found in all editions but was originally a new and unique feature of the Pocket Manual—were also offered separately in paperback under the title Parliamentary Guide (price twenty-five cents). The Guide did not remain long in print, however, as the demand apparently was for the complete Robert’s Rules of Order (then priced at seventy-five cents). The latter volume gained another twenty-six pages through changes and additions made by the author in a third edition issued in 1893.

In 1896, when the Griggs firm went out of business, the then recently formed Scott, Foresman and Company purchased the former publisher’s list and thus acquired the publishing rights to Robert’s Rules of Order. The designation “Robert’s Rules of Order,” the short title printed on the cover of the Pocket Manual, properly refers only to the three earliest editions, the last of which was superseded in 1915. At that time, the three editions of the Pocket Manual had totaled more than a half million copies.
Subsequent Revisions

Robert’s Rules of Order Revised, the first complete revision, was the product of three years of the original author’s full-time effort, beginning in 1912, with his second wife, Isabel Hoagland Robert, a former teacher, acting as his secretary and editorial assistant. (His first wife, Helen Thresher Robert, who influenced him to include the elementary portion in the first edition, had died in 1895.) The revision was published on May 5, 1915. Shortly afterward, General Robert wrote that much more work had been put into it than into the three previous editions combined. The 1915 revision, expanded by 75 percent from the 1893 edition, had less than one fourth of its content taken directly from that edition. The reorganization, expansion, and clarification represented by Robert’s Rules of Order Revised was largely the outgrowth of hundreds of letters received by the author over the years, submitting questions of parliamentary law arising in organizations and not covered in the earlier editions.

Upon General Robert’s death in 1923, his only son, Henry M. Robert, Jr.—a professor of mathematics, and later economics, at the United States Naval Academy, who also taught parliamentary law at Columbia University during each summer session—took over the author’s office under a trust that his father had established. In that capacity, Henry Jr. continued his father’s practice of replying to parliamentary questions from users of the book. It had been the original author’s wish that after his death his son should further revise the manual as developments might dictate. Henry Jr. looked forward to doing this following his retirement from the Naval Academy, but he died in 1937 before that time came.

The trusteeship of Robert’s Rules of Order Revised then passed to Henry Jr.’s widow, Sarah Corbin Robert—like Isabel, a former teacher. At General Robert’s request, she had served as a critical reader in the preparation of his last two books, the elementary text, Parliamentary Practice (1921), and the work he considered his definitive explanatory effort, Parliamentary Law (1923). She had also substituted in teaching her husband’s courses at Columbia when Henry Jr. had to give up doing so because of an increased workload at the Naval Academy.

In 1943, changes that General Robert had recorded between 1915 and the time of his death, for inclusion in the next revision of the manual, were incorporated within the 1915 pagination with Isabel and Sarah Robert serving as editors. Under their authorship, additional front and end matter was inserted and further in-page changes were made for the Seventy-fifth Anniversary Edition of 1951. Under the title of Robert’s Rules of Order Revised, the manual thus remained in basically the 1915 typesetting until 1970, by which time a combined total of 2.65 million copies of all editions issued until then had been in use.

About 1960, work was begun on a second complete revision of the book under the direction of Sarah Corbin Robert. She was joined in this project by her son, Henry M. Robert III, and by William J. Evans, a Baltimore lawyer, with James W. Cleary later serving as an editorial adviser to the publisher. This undertaking had a twofold goal: (1) a thorough overhauling of the parliamentary content dictated by two generations’ use of the then-existing work, and (2) the new development of a reference book that would both be suitable for adoption by organizations as their parliamentary authority, and at the same time be as readable and as near to completely self-explanatory as possible—equally useful to a presiding officer, organization member, parliamentarian, and instructor in parliamentary procedure. Achieving this dual goal to the authors’ best ability proved to be a task whose magnitude was only dimly perceived at the outset. The resulting general revision of the book was published as Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised on the ninety-fourth anniversary of the publication of the first edition, February 19, 1970. As the original author stated that more work had been put into the 1915 revision than into the three previous editions combined, so it is believed that more work went into the production of the 1970 edition of Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised than into all six editions brought out previously.

An additional key figure in guiding the authorship affairs of the book since that time, particularly in their commercial aspect, was John Robert Redgrave, a great-grandson of the original author and the business representative of the Robert’s Rules Association, which replaced the first trust after the death of General Robert’s last surviving child.

Consistent with the earlier practice of publishing partial revisions containing in-page changes within the same pagination, a 1981 edition prepared by Henry M. Robert III and William J. Evans made a number of clarifications throughout the work. These changes were the result of experience in using the book in the eleven-year period following the 1970 revision. Some of the more important areas of clarification related to the Previous Question, the motion to Lay on the Table, the nature of a board as a form of assembly, the rule prohibiting interruption of actual voting, and the rules governing amendment at the expiration of the allotted time under different kinds of orders limiting debate or setting a time for voting. The 1981 edition was issued additionally in paperback format by Scott, Foresman and Company in 1984. This was the first time that a current edition of the complete manual had been offered in paperback.

In 1990, the same process was carried further with the issuance of a ninth edition of the work, again authored by Henry M. Robert III and William J. Evans, with Daniel H. Honemann, also a Baltimore attorney, then joining to assist them. Under new technology applied to that edition, however, a complete resetting of the book became for the first time an easy matter. This fact permitted a greater variety of changes and the incorporation of more additional material than would otherwise have been feasible. Two of the most significant of the revisions were the reinsertion, in improved form, of a subsection on hints to inexperienced presiding officers found in earlier editions, and a new treatment of some standard principles of interpretation of bylaws and other documents.

The tenth edition was published as the Millennium Edition of the year 2000. It was the work of four coauthors, with Henry M. Robert III, William J. Evans, and Daniel H. Honemann joined by Thomas J. Balch, a member of the Illinois bar residing in Virginia. A listing of the more important areas of revision in the 2000 edition appears in its preface. Among them were clarification of the role of “established custom” in relation to written rules, and greater specification of the cases in which an action is null and void so that a Point of Order that would otherwise be untimely may be raised and, correlatively, those circumstances in which the rules may not be suspended.

The eleventh edition was published in 2011. With the passing of William Evans, that edition was the work of Henry M. Robert III, Daniel H. Honemann, and Thomas J. Balch, joined by Daniel E. Seabold, a professor of mathematics at Hofstra University in Hempstead, New York, and Shmuel Gerber, who was at that time the chief copy editor for the weekly print edition of the Five Towns Jewish Times, a New York–area newspaper. Among its revisions were expanded treatments of electronic meetings and disciplinary proceedings, a new subsection on challenging the announced result of elections, and permitting notice to be sent by e-mail to members who consent.

This Twelfth Edition responds anew to the ever continuing need for further refinement of interpretation and for answering newly arising questions. As the Twelfth Edition was nearing completion, the authorship team lost the grandson of the original author: Henry M. Robert III, who had been intimately associated with the work for six decades, died at the age of 98 in January 2019.

All editions of the work issued after the death of the original author have thus been prepared by persons who either knew and worked with him or are connected to such persons in a direct continuity of professional association.
Influence of Robert

The crux of Robert’s Rules of Order’s initial contribution was in making it possible for assemblies and societies to free themselves from confusion and dispute over rules governing the use of the different motions of parliamentary law. In this respect the book filled the need that the author accurately stated in the quotation from his preface found on page xli of this Introduction.

In basing his rules on the practice of the U.S. House of Representatives in the manner already described, Robert stated that this practice—except where obviously unsuited to ordinary societies—had come to determine the actual common parliamentary law of the country, just as the practice of the House of Commons had done in England. Within any assembly or organization, however, it was his idea that the authority of his rules should rest on formal adoption of his manual by the particular body. But the book was soon cited increasingly as an authority apart from individual adoption—in such a manner as to constitute acknowledgment of its rules as parliamentary law itself. Thus Robert—by offering a codification of the rules and practices of the House of Representatives adapted to ordinary societies—gave formal direction to a movement toward establishing a more complete common parliamentary law, built upon congressional practice. In this way, Robert had a central role in bringing the parliamentary law of the United States to a stability and a stage of development that led former House parliamentarian Clarence Cannon to describe it as a “system of procedure adapted to the wants of deliberative assemblies generally and which, though variously interpreted in minor details by different writers, is now in the main standardized and authoritatively established.”

In an often quoted statement, the original author said: “The great lesson for democracies to learn is for the majority to give to the minority a full, free opportunity to present their side of the case, and then for the minority, having failed to win a majority to their views, gracefully to submit and to recognize the action as that of the entire organization, and cheerfully to assist in carrying it out, until they can secure its repeal.” But this same man, as he headed many engineering boards in the later phases of his professional career, became known for guiding them to produce reports that were unanimously concurred in by the board members. His record as a leader in civic, social-service, and church activities was similar. He was loath to settle for less.

This was not the contradiction that it may at first seem. Robert was surely aware of the early evolutionary development of parliamentary procedure in the English House of Lords resulting in a movement from “consensus,” in its original sense of unanimous agreement, toward a decision by majority vote as we know it today. This evolution came about from a recognition that a requirement of unanimity or near unanimity can become a form of tyranny in itself. In an assembly that tries to make such a requirement the norm, a variety of misguided feelings—reluctance to be seen as opposing the leadership, a notion that causing controversy will be frowned upon, fear of seeming an obstacle to unity—can easily lead to decisions being taken with a pseudoconsensus which in reality implies elements of default, which satisfies no one, and for which no one really assumes responsibility. Furthermore, what is apparently taken to be the sense of the meeting may well be little more than a “least common denominator” of such generality as to contribute little to the solution of the practical problem involved, thereby leaving such matters to officers or staff or the meeting’s organizers to work out according to their own intentions. Robert saw, on the other hand, that the evolution of majority vote in tandem with lucid and clarifying debate—resulting in a decision representing the view of the deliberate majority—far more clearly ferrets out and demonstrates the will of an assembly. It is through the application of genuine persuasion and parliamentary technique that General Robert was able to achieve decisions in meetings he led which were so free of divisiveness within the group.

PRINCIPLES UNDERLYING PARLIAMENTARY LAW

The rules of parliamentary law found in this book will, on analysis, be seen to be constructed upon a careful balance of the rights of persons or subgroups within an organization’s or an assembly’s total membership. That is, these rules are based on a regard for the rights:

• of the majority,
• of the minority, especially a strong minority—greater than one third,
• of individual members,
• of absentees, and
• of all these together.

The means of protecting all of these rights in appropriate measure forms much of the substance of parliamentary law, and the need for this protection dictates the degree of development that the subject has undergone.

Parliamentary procedure enables the overall membership of an organization—expressing its general will through the assembly of its members—both to establish and empower an effective leadership as it wishes, and at the same time to retain exactly the degree of direct control over its affairs that it chooses to reserve to itself.

Ultimately, it is the majority taking part in the assembly who decide the general will, but only following upon the opportunity for a deliberative process of full and free discussion. Only two thirds or more of those present and voting may deny a minority or any member the right of such discussion.

In this connection, there is an underlying assumption of a right that exists even though it may not always be prudent or helpful for it to be exercised. Each individual or subgroup has the right to make the maximum effort to have his, her, or its position declared the will of the assembly to the extent that can be tolerated in the interests of the entire body.

Another important principle is that, as a protection against instability—arising, for example, from such factors as slight variations in attendance—the requirements for changing a previous action are greater than those for taking the action in the first place.

Fundamentally, under the rules of parliamentary law, a deliberative body is a free agent—free to do what it wants to do with the greatest measure of protection to itself and of consideration for the rights of its members.

The application of parliamentary law is the best method yet devised to enable assemblies of any size, with due regard for every member’s opinion, to arrive at the general will on the maximum number of questions of varying complexity in a minimum amount of time and under all kinds of internal climate ranging from total harmony to hardened or impassioned division of opinion.
§1. THE DELIBERATIVE ASSEMBLY

Nature of the Deliberative Assembly

A deliberative assembly—the kind of gathering to which parliamentary law is generally understood to apply—has the following distinguishing characteristics:

• It is a group of people, having or assuming freedom to act in concert, meeting to determine, in full and free discussion, courses of action to be taken in the name of the entire group.

• The group meets in a single room or area or under equivalent conditions of opportunity for simultaneous aural communication among all participants.

• Persons having the right to participate—that is, the members—are ordinarily free to act within the assembly according to their own judgment.

• In any decision made, the opinion of each member present has equal weight as expressed by vote—through which the voting member joins in assuming direct personal responsibility for the decision, should his or her vote be on the prevailing side.

• Failure to concur in a decision of the body does not constitute withdrawal from the body.
• If any members are absent—as is usually the case in any formally organized assembly such as a legislative body or the assembly of an ordinary society—the members present at a regular or properly called meeting act for the entire membership, subject only to such limitations as may be established by the body’s governing rules (see Quorum of Members, however, 3:3–5; also 40).

1:2 The rules in this book are principally applicable to meeting bodies possessing all of the foregoing characteristics. Certain of these parliamentary rules or customs may sometimes also find application in other gatherings which, although resembling the deliberative assembly in varying degrees, do not have all of its attributes as listed above.

1:3 The distinction should be noted between the assembly (that is, the body of people who assemble) and the meeting (which is the event of their being assembled to transact business). The relation between these terms, however, is such that their application may coincide; a “mass meeting,” for example, is described below as one type of assembly. The term meeting is also distinguished from session, according to definitions stated in 8. A session may be loosely described as a single complete course of an assembly’s engagement in the conduct of business, and may consist of one or more meetings.

1:4 A member of an assembly, in the parliamentary sense, as mentioned above, is a person entitled to full participation in its proceedings, that is, as explained in 3 and 4, the right to attend meetings, to make motions, to speak in debate, and to vote. No member can be individually deprived of these basic rights of membership—or of any basic rights concomitant to them, such as the right to make nominations or to give previous notice of a motion—except through disciplinary proceedings. Some organized societies define additional classes of “membership” that do not entail all of these rights. Whenever the term member is used in this book, it refers to full participating membership in the assembly unless otherwise specified. Such members are also described as “voting members” when it is necessary to make a distinction.

1:5 A deliberative assembly that has not adopted any rules is commonly understood to hold itself bound by the rules and customs of the general parliamentary law—or common parliamentary law (as discussed in the Introduction)—to the extent that there is agreement in the meeting body as to what these rules and practices are. Most assemblies operate subject to one or more classes of written rules, however, that the particular body—or, sometimes, a higher authority under which it is constituted—has formally adopted. Taken as a whole, such rules may relate to the establishment of the organization or society of which the assembly is the meeting body, they may interpret or supplement the general parliamentary law, or they may involve provisions not directly related to the transaction of business. The classes of rules that an assembly or an organization may adopt and the position that the rules in this book assume within such a body’s overall system of rules are initially explained in 2. Aside from rules of parliamentary procedure and the particular rules of an assembly, the actions of any deliberative body are also subject to applicable procedural rules prescribed by local, state, or national law and would be null and void if in violation of such law.2

1:6 The basic principle of decision in a deliberative assembly is that, to become the act or choice of the body, a proposition must be adopted by a majority vote; that is, direct approval—implying assumption of responsibility for the act—must be registered by more than half of the members present and voting on the particular matter, in a regular or properly called meeting of the body (see also 44:1–2). Modifications of the foregoing principle that impose a requirement of more than a majority vote arise: (a) where required by law; (b) where provided by special rule of a particular organization or assembly as dictated by its own conditions; or (c) where required under the general parliamentary law in the case of certain steps or procedures that impinge on the normal rights of the minority, of absentees, or of some other group within the assembly’s membership.

1:7 When a decision is to be based on more than a majority, the requirement most commonly specified is a two-thirds vote—that is, the expressed approval of at least two thirds of those present and voting. Under certain circumstances, whatever the vote required, there may be an additional requirement of previous notice, which means that notice of the proposal to be brought up—at least briefly describing its substance—must be announced at the preceding meeting or must be included in the “call” of the meeting at which it is to be considered (see also 10:44–51). The call of a meeting is a written notice of its time and place that is sent to all members of the organization a reasonable time in advance. Other bases for decision which find use in certain cases are defined in 44, such as a majority of the entire membership—that is, more than half of all the members.

1:8 Whenever the rules of an assembly require a majority vote, a two-thirds vote, or any other basis for decision, it must be understood that, unless otherwise specified in the rules (as in the case of certain procedural actions), such a vote is effective only if taken when the necessary minimum number of members, known as a quorum, is present (see 3:3–5; also 40).
Types of Deliberative Assembly

1:9 The deliberative assembly may exist in many forms. Among the principal types that it is convenient to distinguish for the purposes of parliamentary law are: (1) the mass meeting; (2) the assembly of an organized society, particularly when meeting at the local or lowest subdivisional level; (3) the convention; (4) the legislative body; and (5) the board. A brief introductory explanation of the five principal types of deliberative assembly is given below.

1:10 The Mass Meeting. The mass meeting is the simplest form of assembly in principle, although not the one most frequently encountered. A mass meeting is a meeting of an unorganized group that is announced as open to everyone (or everyone within a specified sector of the population) interested in a particular problem or purpose defined by the meeting’s sponsors, and that is called with a view to appropriate action to be decided on and taken by the meeting body. A series of connected meetings making up a session may be held on such a basis. The class of persons invited might be, for example, supporters of a given political party, homeowners residing within a certain city, persons opposed to a tax increase, or any similar group. Admittance may be limited to the invited category if desired. Everyone who attends a mass meeting has the right to participate in the proceedings as a member of the assembly, upon the understanding that he is in general sympathy with the announced object of the meeting.

1:11 It should be noted that a large attendance is not an essential feature of the mass meeting, although it may usually be desired. A series of meetings held for the purpose of organizing a society are in the nature of mass meetings until the society has been formed.
1:12 Mass meetings are particularly treated in 53.

1:13 The Local Assembly of an Organized Society. The assembly at the meetings of an organized permanent society existing as a local club or local branch is the type of assembly with which the average person is most likely to have direct experience. As the highest authority within such a society or branch (subject only to the provisions of the bylaws or other basic document establishing the organization), this body acts for the total membership in the transaction of its business. Such an assembly’s membership is limited to persons who are recorded on the rolls of the society as voting members and who are in good standing. The bylaws of an organized local society (see 2:8–13) usually provide that it shall hold regular meetings at stated intervals—such as weekly, monthly, quarterly, or sometimes even annually—and also usually provide a procedure for calling special meetings as needed (see 9:13–16). Each of these meetings in such an organization normally is a separate session (8).

1:14 The Convention. A convention is an assembly of delegates (other than a permanently established public lawmaking body) chosen, normally for one session only, as representatives of constituent units or subdivisions of a much larger body of people in whose name the convention sits and acts. The most common type of convention is that of an organized state or national society—held, for example, annually or biennially—in which the delegates are selected by, and from among the members of, each local branch. A convention is sometimes also called for the purpose of forming an association or federation; or, like a mass meeting, it may be convened to draw interested parties or representatives of interested organizations together in acting upon a common problem. The ordinary convention seldom lasts longer than a week. In principle, however, there is no limit on the length of the convention session. A constitutional convention, for example—convoked to draft a proposed new state constitution—may continue for weeks or months.

1:16 The voting membership of a convention consists of persons who hold proper credentials as delegates or as persons in some other way entitled to such membership, which must be certified and reported to the convention by its Credentials Committee. Whenever the term “majority of the entire membership” is used in this book, it means, in the case of a convention of delegates, a majority of the total number of convention members entitled to vote, as set forth in the official roll of voting members of the convention (44:9(b), 59:25).

1:17 The conclusion of the convention session normally dissolves the assembly. In the case of a state or national society, when another convention convenes a year or two later, it is a new assembly.

1:18 Conventions are particularly treated in 58, 59, and 60.

1:19 The Legislative Body. The term legislative body refers to a constitutionally established public lawmaking body of representatives chosen by the electorate for a fixed term of office—such as Congress or a state legislature. Such a body typically (though not always) consists of two assemblies, or “houses.” Its sessions may last for months, during which it meets daily and its members are paid to devote their full time to its work and can be legally compelled to attend its meetings.

1:20 Each state or national legislative assembly generally has its own well-developed body of rules, interpretations, and precedents, so that the exact procedure for a particular legislative house can be found only in its own manual.

1:21 In this connection, however, it should be noted that certain smaller public bodies may serve a lawmaking function yet not assume the character of a full-scale legislative assembly, and instead may somewhat resemble a board or the assembly of a society. An example of such a body might be a city council that meets weekly or monthly and whose members continue their own full-time occupations during their term of service.

1:22 The Board. A board, in the general sense of the term, is an administrative, managerial, or quasi-judicial body of elected or appointed persons that differs from several of the other principal types of deliberative assembly as follows:

   a) boards are frequently smaller than most other assemblies; and

   b) while a board may or may not function autonomously, its operation is determined by responsibilities and powers delegated to it or conferred on it by authority outside itself.

1:23 A board may be assigned a particular function on behalf of a national, state, or local government, as a village board that operates like a small city council, a board of education, or a board of examiners. In a nonstock corporation that has no assembly or body of persons constituting a general voting membership, as a university or foundation, the board of directors, managers, trustees, or governors is the supreme governing body of the institution. Similarly, in a stock corporation, although the board of directors is elected by stockholders who hold an annual meeting, it constitutes the highest authority in the management of the corporation. A board within an organized society, on the other hand, is an instrumentality of the society’s full assembly, to which it is subordinate. Boards are discussed in greater detail in 49.
Applicability of Modified Parliamentary Rules in Small Boards and in Committees

1:24 The distinction between a board and a committee must be briefly noted here for an understanding of what follows. A board of any size is a form of assembly as just explained. Committees, on the other hand, are bodies that are often, but not necessarily, very small, and that are subordinate instruments of an assembly or are accountable to a higher authority in some way not characteristic of an assembly. Large boards generally follow parliamentary procedure in the same way as any other assembly. In small boards, and in committees, most parliamentary rules apply, but certain modifications permitting greater flexibility and informality are commonly allowed (see 49:21, 50:25–26). The distinguishing characteristics of boards and committees are discussed in 49 and 50.
§2. RULES OF AN ASSEMBLY OR ORGANIZATION

2:1 An organized society requires certain rules to establish its basic structure and manner of operation. In addition, a need for formally adopted rules of procedure arises in any assembly, principally because there may be disagreement or a lack of understanding as to what is parliamentary law regarding points that can affect the outcome of substantive issues.

2:2 Experience has shown that some of the rules of a society should be made more difficult to change, or to suspend—that is, to set aside for a specific purpose—than others. Upon this principle, the rules which an established organization may have are commonly divided into classes—some of which are needed by every society, while others may be required only as conditions warrant. Within this framework under the general parliamentary law, an assembly or society is free to adopt any rules it may wish (even rules deviating from parliamentary law) provided that, in the procedure of adopting them, it conforms to parliamentary law or its own existing rules. The only limitations upon the rules that such a body can thus adopt might arise from the rules of a parent body (as those of a national society restricting its state or local branches), or from national, state, or local law affecting the particular type of organization.

2:3 The various kinds of rules which a society may formally adopt include the following: Corporate Charter, Constitution and/or Bylaws, Rules of Order (which include a standard work on parliamentary law adopted as the society’s Parliamentary Authority, and any Special Rules of Order), and Standing Rules. Each of these types of rules is discussed below. (For a more complete treatment of constitution and/or bylaws, see 56)

2:4 In matters not governed by any adopted rule, a society may be guided by established custom, also discussed below.
Corporate Charter

2:5 The Corporate Charter (in different states variously called the Certificate of Incorporation, Articles of Incorporation, Articles of Association, etc.) is a legal instrument that sets forth the name and object of the society and whatever other information is needed for incorporating the society under the laws of the particular state—or under federal law in the case of a few special types of organizations. Incorporation is sometimes necessary or may be advisable, depending upon the differing laws of each state, if the organization is to hold property, inherit a legacy, make legally binding contracts, hire employees, be in a position to sue or be sued as a society, protect its officers and members from personal liability, or the like. Apart from this consideration, in general, a society need not be incorporated unless incorporation is dictated by a law relating to the society’s contemplated activities.

2:6 A corporate charter should be drafted by an attorney and must then be processed in accordance with the legal procedure for incorporation in the state (or under federal law if applicable). Any later amendments (that is, changes in the charter) are subject to the requirements of law and any limitations placed in the charter itself.

2:7 In an incorporated organization, the corporate charter supersedes all its other rules, none of which can legally contain anything in conflict with the charter. Nothing in the charter can be suspended by the organization itself unless the charter or applicable law so provides. For these reasons, a corporate charter generally should contain only what is necessary to obtain it, and to establish the desired status of the organization under law—leaving as much as possible to the bylaws or to lower-ranking rules if appropriate in accordance with the principles explained below and in 56.4
Constitution; Bylaws

2:8 In general, the constitution or the bylaws—or both—of a society are the documents that contain its own basic rules relating principally to itself as an organization, rather than to the parliamentary procedure that it follows. In the ordinary case, it is now the recommended practice that all of a society’s rules of this kind be combined into a single instrument, usually called the “bylaws,” although in some societies called the “constitution”—or the “constitution and bylaws,” even when it is only one document. The term bylaws, as used in this book, refers to this single, combination-type instrument—by whatever name the particular organization may describe it—which:

1) should have essentially the same form and content whether or not the society is incorporated (except for the omission or inclusion of articles on the name and object as noted below);
2) defines the primary characteristics of the organization—in such a way that the bylaws serve as the fundamental instrument establishing an unincorporated society, or conform to the corporate charter if there is one;
3) prescribes how the society functions; and
4) includes all rules that the society considers so important that they (a) cannot be changed without previous notice to the members and the vote of a specified large majority (such as a two-thirds vote), and (b) cannot be suspended (with the exception of clauses that provide for their own suspension under specified conditions, or clauses in the nature of rules of order as described in 2:14; see also 25:7–13 and 56:50–56).

2:9 While the number of articles in the bylaws will be determined by the size and activities of the organization, the general nature of the subjects covered will be indicated by the following list of articles, typical of those found in the bylaws of the average unincorporated society: (1) Name of the organization; (2) its Object; (3) Members; (4) Officers; (5) Meetings; (6) Executive Board (if needed); (7) Committees; (8) Parliamentary Authority (that is, the name of the manual of parliamentary procedure that the organization is to follow; see below); and (9) Amendment of Bylaws (prescribing the procedure for making changes in the bylaws). If the society is incorporated, its name and its object are usually set forth in the corporate charter, in which case the first two articles listed above should be omitted from the bylaws. The appropriate content of bylaws is discussed in detail in 56.

2:10 It formerly was common practice to divide the basic rules of an organization into two documents, in order that one of them—the constitution—might be made more difficult to amend than the other, to which the name bylaws was applied. In such a case, the constitution would generally contain the most essential provisions relating to the first five items listed in the preceding paragraph (leaving additional details to the bylaws), and would prescribe the procedure for amending the constitution. Such an arrangement may still be found in cases where a national, state, or local law applying to the particular type of organization requires a constitution separate from the bylaws, or in older organizations that have had little occasion to change their existing rules. Unless the constitution is made more difficult to amend than the bylaws, however, no purpose is served by separating these two sets of rules.

2:11 In an incorporated society there generally should not be a constitution separate from the bylaws, since in such a case the constitution would duplicate much of the corporate charter. Although it is not improper, in an unincorporated society, to have both a constitution and bylaws as separate documents (provided that the constitution is made more difficult to amend), there are decided advantages in keeping all of the provisions relating to each subject under one heading within a single instrument—which results in fewer problems of duplication or inconsistency, and gives a more understandable and workable body of rules.

2:12 Except for the corporate charter in an incorporated society, the bylaws (as the single, combination-type instrument is called in this book) comprise the highest body of rules in societies as normally established today. Such an instrument supersedes all other rules of the society, except the corporate charter, if there is one. In organizations that have both a constitution and bylaws as separate documents, however, the constitution is the higher of the two bodies of rules and supersedes the bylaws.

2:13 The bylaws, by their nature, necessarily contain whatever limitations are placed on the powers of the assembly of a society (that is, the members attending a particular one of its meetings) with respect to the society as a whole. Similarly, the provisions of the bylaws have direct bearing on the rights of members within the organization—whether present or absent from the assembly. It is a good policy for every member on joining the society to be given a copy of the bylaws, printed together with the corporate charter, if there is one, and any special rules of order or standing rules that the society may have adopted as explained below. A member should become familiar with the contents of these rules if he looks toward full participation in the society’s affairs.

2:14 The term rules of order refers to written rules of parliamentary procedure formally adopted by an assembly or an organization. Such rules relate to the orderly transaction of business in meetings and to the duties of officers in that connection. The object of rules of order is to facilitate the smooth functioning of the assembly and to provide a firm basis for resolving questions of procedure that may arise.

2:15 In contrast to bylaws, rules of order derive their proper substance largely from the general nature of the parliamentary process rather than from the circumstances of a particular assembly. Consequently, although the tone of application of rules of order may vary, there is little reason why most of these rules themselves should not be the same in all ordinary societies and should not closely correspond to the common parliamentary law. The usual and preferable method by which an ordinary society now provides itself with suitable rules of order is therefore to place in its bylaws a provision prescribing that the current edition of a specified and generally accepted manual of parliamentary law shall be the organization’s parliamentary authority, and then to adopt only such special rules of order as it finds needed to supplement or modify rules contained in that manual. However, if the bylaws of a society do not designate a parliamentary authority, one may be adopted by the same vote as is required to adopt a special rule of order, although it is preferable to amend the bylaws. In a mass meeting or a meeting of a body not yet organized, adoption of a parliamentary authority (or individual rules of order) may take place at the beginning of the meeting by majority vote.

2:16 Special rules of order supersede any rules in the parliamentary authority with which they may conflict.\textsuperscript{5} The average society that has adopted a suitable parliamentary authority seldom needs special rules of order, however, with the following notable exceptions:

- It is sometimes desirable to adopt a rule establishing the society’s own order of business (see \textsuperscript{3:16}).
- A rule relating to the length or number of speeches permitted each member in debate is often found necessary.
- A society with a small assembly—such as one having a dozen or fewer members—may wish to adopt a rule that its meetings will be governed by some or all of the somewhat less formal procedures applicable to small boards (see \textsuperscript{49:21}).

2:17 Special rules of order are usually adopted in the form of resolutions (\textsuperscript{4:4–5, 10:13–23}), but when they are printed, the enacting words (such as “Resolved, That”) are normally dropped.

2:18 When a society or an assembly has adopted a particular parliamentary manual—such as this book—as its authority, the rules contained in that manual are binding upon it in all cases where they are not inconsistent with the bylaws (or constitution) of the body, any of its special rules of order, or any provisions of local, state, or national law applying to the particular type of organization. What another manual may have to say in conflict with the adopted parliamentary authority then has no bearing on the case. In matters on which an organization’s adopted parliamentary authority is silent, provisions found in other works on parliamentary law may be persuasive—that is, they may carry weight in the absence of overriding reasons for following a different course—but they are not binding on the body.

2:19 Although it is unwise for an assembly or a society to attempt to function without formally adopted rules of order, a recognized parliamentary manual may be cited under such conditions as persuasive. Or, by being followed through long-established custom in an organization, a particular manual may acquire a status within the body similar to that of an adopted parliamentary authority.

2:20 Any special rules of order are adopted separately from the bylaws. It is advisable that they be printed in the same booklet with, but under a heading separate from, the bylaws. Although rules in the nature of special rules of order are sometimes placed within the bylaws—as occurs most frequently when a society prescribes its own order of business—such an arrangement is less desirable, since it may lead to cases of uncertainty as to whether a particular rule can be suspended.

2:21 Rules of order—whether contained in the parliamentary authority or adopted as special rules of order—can be suspended by a two-thirds vote as explained in 25 (with the exceptions there specified). Rules clearly identifiable as in the nature of rules of order that are placed within the bylaws can (with the exceptions specified in 25) also be suspended by a two-thirds vote; but, except for such rules and for clauses that provide for their own suspension, as stated above, rules in the bylaws cannot be suspended.

2:22 Adoption or amendment of special rules of order that are separate from the bylaws requires either (a) previous notice (10:44–51) and a two-thirds vote or (b) a vote of a majority of the entire membership. After the bylaws of a society have been initially adopted when the organization is formed, the adoption or amendment of special rules of order placed within the bylaws is subject to the procedure for amending the bylaws (see 57).
Standing Rules

2:23   Standing rules, as understood in this book except in the case of conventions, are rules (1) which are related to the details of the administration of a society rather than to parliamentary procedure, and (2) which can be adopted or changed upon the same conditions as any ordinary act of the society. An example of such a rule might be one setting the hour at which meetings are to begin, or one relating to the maintenance of a guest register. Standing rules generally are not adopted at the time a society is organized, but individually if and when the need arises. As with special rules of order, it is advisable for standing rules to be printed under a separate heading in the booklet containing the bylaws, and in such a case, any enacting words such as “Resolved, That” are normally dropped. A standing rule can be adopted by a majority vote without previous notice, provided that it does not conflict with or amend any existing rule or act of the society. (For the vote required for rescinding or amending such a rule, see 35:2(7).) A standing rule remains in effect until rescinded or amended, but if it has its application only within the context of a meeting, it can be suspended at any particular session (although not for future sessions) by a majority vote. Rules that have any application outside a meeting context, however, cannot be suspended.

2:24   Standing rules in conventions differ from ordinary standing rules in some respects, as explained in 59:27–37. Some assemblies, particularly legislative bodies, also apply the name standing rules to their rules of order. Whatever names an assembly may apply to its various rules, the vote required to adopt, amend, or suspend a particular rule is determined by the nature of its content according to the definitions given
Custom

2:25 In some organizations, a particular practice may sometimes come to be followed as a matter of established custom so that it is treated practically as if it were prescribed by a rule. If there is no contrary provision in the parliamentary authority or written rules of the organization, such an established custom is adhered to unless the assembly, by a majority vote, agrees in a particular instance to do otherwise. However, if a customary practice is or becomes in conflict with the parliamentary authority or any written rule, and a Point of Order (23) citing the conflict is raised at any time, the custom falls to the ground, and the conflicting provision in the parliamentary authority or written rule must thereafter be complied with. If it is then desired to follow the former practice, a special rule of order (or, in appropriate circumstances, a standing rule or a bylaw provision) can be added or amended to incorporate it.
Footnotes to Chapter I

1. A group that attempts to conduct the deliberative process in writing—such as by postal mail, electronic mail (e-mail), or facsimile transmission (fax)—does not constitute a deliberative assembly. When making decisions by such means, many situations unprecedented in parliamentary law will arise, and many of its rules and customs will not be applicable (see also 9:30–36).

2. If the assembly is itself a lawmaking body, its actions are subject to applicable law of a higher authority—as, for example, the acts of a state legislature in the United States, which must not be in conflict with the constitution of that state, with national law, or with the national constitution.

3. Members in good standing are those whose rights as members of the assembly are not under suspension as a consequence of disciplinary proceedings or by operation of some specific provision in the bylaws. A member may thus be in good standing even if in arrears in payment of dues (see 45:1, 56:19). If only some of an individual’s rights as a member of the assembly are under suspension (for example, the rights to make motions and speak in debate), other rights of assembly membership may still be exercised (for example, the rights to attend meetings and vote).

4. The word charter may also refer to a certificate issued by a national or state organization, granting the right to form a particular local or subordinate unit. While such a charter is not an instrument of incorporation and is usually quite general in its terms, it supersedes any rules the subordinate body may adopt, because it carries with it the requirement that the subordinate unit adopt no rules that conflict with those of the grantor.

5. However, when the parliamentary authority is prescribed in the bylaws, and that authority states that a certain rule can be altered only by a provision in the bylaws, no special rule of order can supersede that rule.
§3. BASIC PROVISIONS AND PROCEDURES

3:1 The basic parliamentary concepts and practices are interconnected in such a way that a complete statement of the rules that relate to any one of them frequently involves reference to several other concepts. This section contains an initial explanation of a number of these topics, which are given a more detailed treatment later in this book.

3:2 In reading all that follows throughout this manual, it should be borne in mind that—as in any treatment of any subject—a statement of a rule generally cannot include all possible exceptions to the rule. Whenever a particular statement appears to conflict with a more general statement elsewhere in the book, therefore, the particular statement governs in the matter to which it states that it applies (see also 56:68(3)).
Minimum Composition of a Deliberative Assembly

3:3  Quorum of Members. The minimum number of members who must be present at the meetings of a deliberative assembly for business to be validly transacted is the quorum of the assembly. The requirement of a quorum is a protection against totally unrepresentative action in the name of the body by an unduly small number of persons. In both houses of Congress, the quorum is a majority of the members, by the United States Constitution. Such a quorum is appropriate in legislative bodies but too large in most voluntary societies. In an ordinary society, therefore, a provision of the bylaws should specify the number of members that shall constitute a quorum, which should approximate the largest number that can be depended on to attend any meeting except in very bad weather or other extremely unfavorable conditions. In the absence of such a provision in a society or assembly whose real membership can be accurately determined at any time—that is, in a body having an enrolled membership composed only of persons who maintain their status as members in a prescribed manner—the quorum is a majority of the entire membership, by the common parliamentary law.

3:4  In the meetings of a convention, unless the bylaws of the organization provide otherwise, the quorum is a majority of the delegates who have been registered at the convention as in attendance, irrespective of whether some may have departed. In a mass meeting, or in a regular or properly called meeting of an organization whose bylaws do not prescribe a quorum and whose membership is loosely determined (as, for example, in many church congregations or alumni associations), there is no minimum number of members who must be present for the valid transaction of business, or—as it is usually expressed—the quorum consists of those who attend the meeting.

3:5 (The rules relating to the quorum are more fully stated in 40.)

3:6 Minimum Officers. The minimum essential officers for the conduct of business in a deliberative assembly are a presiding officer, who conducts the meeting and sees that the rules are observed, and a secretary, or clerk, who makes a written record of what is done—usually called “the minutes.” If the officers are members of the assembly—as they usually are in ordinary societies—they are counted in determining whether a quorum is present.

3:7 The presiding officer should be placed so that, even when he is seated—on a high stool if necessary when behind a lectern—he can see the entire hall and all present can see him (see also 47:5). The presiding officer’s official place or station (usually in the center of the platform or stage, if there is one) is called “the chair.” During meetings, whoever is presiding is said to be “in the chair” (whether standing or seated at the time), and he is also referred to as “the chair.” The phrase “the chair” thus applies both to the person presiding and to his station in the hall from which he presides. The secretary’s desk should be placed so that papers can easily be passed to him from the chair during the meeting.

3:8 The duties of the presiding officer, the secretary, and other officers that an assembly or society may have are described in 47.
Pattern of Formality

3:9 Customs of formality that are followed by the presiding officer and members under parliamentary procedure serve to maintain the chair’s necessary position of impartiality and help to preserve an objective and impersonal approach, especially when serious divisions of opinion arise.

3:10 Customs Observed by Members. The president or chief officer of an organized society, who normally presides at its meetings, is then addressed as “Mr. President” or “Madam President” (whether a married or unmarried woman), “Mr. [or Madam] Moderator,” or by whatever may be his or her official title. In the lower house of a legislative body, this officer is most commonly “Mr. [or Madam] Speaker.” A vice-president is addressed as “Mr. President” or “Madam President” while actually presiding. (A possible exception may arise where the usual form would make the meaning unclear—for example, when the vice-president is in the chair while the president is also on the platform. In such an instance, the vice-president is addressed as “Mr. [or Madam] Vice-President.”) A person presiding at a meeting who has no regular title or whose position is only temporary is addressed as “Mr. [or Madam] Chairman” by long-established usage. Several variations of this form—such as “chairperson” or “chair”—are now frequently encountered, however, and may be in use as the general practice in particular assemblies.

3:11 Even in a small meeting, the presiding officer of an assembly is not addressed or referred to by name. (The only exceptions that might arise in an assembly\(^1\) would be in cases of a testimonial nature, such as in the presentation of a gift to a president who is about to go out of office.) With nearly the same strictness of observance, he is not addressed by the personal pronoun “you”—although occasional exceptions may occur in ordinary societies if brief administrative consultation takes place during a meeting. As a general rule, when additional reference to the presiding officer is necessary in connection with addressing him by his official title, members speak of him as “the chair”—as in, “Mr. President, do I understand the chair to state…?”

3:12 Members address only the chair, or address each other through the chair. In the parliamentary transaction of business—within a latitude appropriate to the conditions of the particular body—members generally should try to avoid mentioning another member’s name whenever the person involved can be described in some other way, as in, “Mr. President, may I ask the member to explain…,” or, “Mr. Chairman, I hope that the gentleman who last spoke will think of the probable consequences…” With a very limited number of particular exceptions, and except in committees and small boards, a member never speaks while seated; and with a slightly larger number of exceptions, a member does not speak without first having obtained the floor as described in 3:30–35.

3:13 Customs Observed by the Presiding Officer. The presiding officer speaks of himself only in the third person—that is, he never uses the personal pronoun “I.” In actual parliamentary proceedings he always refers to himself as “the chair”—as in, “The chair rules that…” At other times during meetings—such as when he makes a report to the members in the capacity of an administrative officer of the organization rather than as presiding officer of the assembly—he may, if he wishes, describe himself by his official title, as in, “Your President is pleased to report…” Strictly speaking, the chair does not mention a member’s name and does not address an individual member as “you,” except in connection with certain disciplinary procedures (see 61:12). Instead he may say, for example, “The chair must ask the member to confine his remarks to the merits of the pending question.” In practice in an ordinary lay assembly, however, there are a number of occasions where the chair often refers to members by name, such as when assigning the floor (that is, the exclusive right to be heard at that time, as explained in 3:30–35), or when announcing the members of a committee.

3:14  (For more complete explanations of the general forms observed by the presiding officer and members in an assembly, see 42 and 43.)
Call to Order; Order of Business

3:15 When the time of a meeting has arrived, the presiding officer opens it, after he has determined that a quorum is present, by calling the meeting to order. He takes the chair (that is, occupies the presiding officer’s station in the hall), waits or signals for quiet, and, while standing, announces in a clear voice, “The meeting will come to order,” or, “The meeting will be in order.” (For the procedure to be followed when a quorum of members do not appear, see 40:6–10.) The call to order may be immediately followed by religious or patriotic exercises or other opening ceremonies.

3:16 The initial procedures in a mass meeting or in one called to form a society are described in 53 and 54. Meetings of permanently organized bodies usually follow an established order of business that specifies the sequence in which certain general types or classes of business are to be brought up or permitted to be introduced. If the assembly has no binding order of business, any member who obtains the floor (see 3:30–35) can introduce any legitimate matter he desires (within the objects of the organization as defined in its bylaws) at any time when no business is before the assembly for consideration. A society may follow the order of business given in the manual that the bylaws of the organization designate as its parliamentary authority, or it may have adopted its own particular order of business. Although an organization has no binding order of business until it has either adopted its own or has adopted a parliamentary authority that specifies one, the following order of business (which is fully explained in 41) has come to be regarded as usual or standard for one-meeting sessions (see 8) of ordinary societies:

1) Reading and Approval of Minutes
2) Reports of Officers, Boards, and Standing (that is, permanently established) Committees
3) Reports of Special (Select or Ad Hoc) Committees (that is, committees appointed to exist only until they have completed a specified task)
4) Special Orders (that is, matters which have previously been assigned a type of special priority, as explained in 14 and 41)
5) Unfinished Business and General Orders (that is, matters which have come over from the preceding meeting or which have been scheduled for the present meeting)
6) New Business (that is, matters initiated in the present meeting)

3:17 In a meeting where an established order of business is being followed, the chair calls for the different classes of business in the prescribed order.
3:18 A mass meeting usually requires no order of business, since, referring to the headings listed above, there is nothing but new business to be brought up (unless the meeting is one within a series).
3:19 A convention commonly adopts its own order of business—which often specifies the exact hours at which certain important questions are to be taken up. The order of business of a convention is known as the program, or the agenda, depending on whether it is interwoven with, or separate from, the overall schedule of convention meetings, events, etc. (see 41, 59).
3:20 A legislative body usually has a more elaborate order of business suited to its own needs.
Means by Which Business Is Brought Before the Assembly

3:21 Motions. Business is brought before an assembly by the motion of a member. A motion may itself bring its subject to the assembly’s attention, or the motion may follow upon the presentation of a report or other communication.

3:22 A motion is a formal proposal by a member, in a meeting, that the assembly take certain action. The proposed action may be of a substantive nature, or it may express a certain view or direct that a particular investigation be conducted and the findings be reported to the assembly for possible further action, or the like.

3:23 The basic form of motion—the only one whose introduction brings business before the assembly—is a main motion. There are also many other separate parliamentary motions that have evolved for specific purposes. While all of these motions propose some form of action and while all of them are said to be brought “before the assembly” when they are placed under consideration, most of them do not bring business before it in the sense described above—as a main motion does. Many of these motions involve procedural steps relating to a main motion already being considered.

3:24 The main motion sets a pattern from which all other motions are derived. In the remainder of this chapter, rules and explanations relating to “motions” have the main motion as their frame of reference. The manner in which a main motion is brought before the assembly is explained in 4:2ff.

3:25 Motions Growing out of Reports or Communications. After the presentation of the report of an officer, a board, or a committee, one or more motions to carry out recommendations contained in the report may be introduced. (For the procedures in such cases, see 41 and 51.)

3:26 A motion may also grow out of the presentation of a written communication to the assembly. This may be in the form of a letter or memorandum from a member who is not present, from a superior body (such as a state or national executive board to a local chapter), or from an outside source. A communication normally is addressed to the president or secretary and is read aloud by the secretary—unless the presiding officer properly should read it because of special importance of the content or source.

3:27 It is not customary to make a motion to receive a communication or a committee report, which means only to permit or cause such a paper to be read. This is an example of a case in the ordinary routine of business where the formality of a motion is dispensed with. It should be noted that a motion “to receive” a communication after it has been read is meaningless and is therefore not in order.

3:28 The reading of a communication does not in itself formally bring a question before the assembly. After the reading, or at the time provided by the order of business, a motion can be offered proposing appropriate action. If no member feels that anything needs to be done, the matter is dropped without a motion.

3:29 Business That Comes Up Without a Motion, Because of Previous Action. Business may come up automatically at a certain time or at a certain point in the order of business, if it has previously been postponed (14) or otherwise made a general or special order (41). In such cases, the business is announced at the proper time by the chair, and, if it has already been introduced in the form of a motion, no additional motion is made at that time.
Obtaining and Assigning the Floor

3:30 Before a member in an assembly can make a motion or speak in debate—the parliamentary name given to any form of discussion of the merits of a motion—he must obtain the floor; that is, he must be recognized by the chair as having the exclusive right to be heard at that time. (For the parliamentary motions that can be made without obtaining the floor, see pages t44–t45.) The chair must recognize any member who seeks the floor while entitled to it.

3:31 To claim the floor, a member rises at his place when no one else has the floor (or goes to a microphone in a large hall), faces the chair, and says, “Mr. President,” or “Mr. Chairman,” or “Madam Chairman,” or whatever is the chair’s proper title. If the member is entitled to the floor at the time, the chair recognizes him—normally by announcing, as applicable, the person’s name or title, or the place or unit that he represents. This member then has the floor and can remain standing and speak in debate or make a motion as permitted under the rules in this book depending on the parliamentary situation at the time. If only one person is seeking the floor in a small meeting where all present know and can clearly see one another, the chair can recognize the member merely by nodding to him. On the other hand, if a speech is prearranged, or if several members are attempting to claim the floor at once in a large meeting, presiding officers often use the formal wording, “The chair recognizes Mr. Smith.” When the names of the members are not generally known, a person addressing the chair to claim the floor states his name and any necessary identification as soon as the presiding officer turns toward him, as “Edward Wells, Delegate, Crescent County.” The chair then assigns the floor by repeating the member’s name or identification. When the member finishes speaking, he yields the floor by resuming his seat.

3:32 If two or more rise at about the same time, the general rule is that, all other things being equal, the member who rose and addressed the chair first after the floor was yielded is entitled to be recognized. A member cannot establish “prior claim” to the floor by rising before it has been yielded. In principle, it is out of order to rise or be standing while another person has the floor—except for the purpose of making one of the motions or taking one of the parliamentary steps that can legitimately interrupt at such a time (pages t44–t45). In a very large assembly, if members must walk some distance to microphones, it may be necessary to vary from the preceding rule as dictated by conditions in the particular hall. Some arrangements used in large assemblies are outlined in 42:16–17.

3:33 While a motion is open to debate, there are three important cases where the floor is properly assigned to a person who may not have been the first to rise and address the chair (but who did so before anyone had actually been recognized). These cases are as follows:

1) If the member who made the motion claims the floor and has not already spoken on the question, he is entitled to be recognized in preference to other members.
2) No one is entitled to the floor a second time in debate on the same motion on the same day as long as any other member who has not spoken on this motion desires the floor.
3) In cases where the chair knows that persons seeking the floor have opposite opinions on the question (and the member to be recognized is not determined by (1) or (2) above), the chair lets the floor alternate, as far as possible, between those favoring and those opposing the measure. To accomplish this, the chair may say, for example, “Since the last speaker spoke in favor of the motion, who wishes to speak in opposition to the motion?” or “Since the last speaker opposed the motion, who wishes to speak in its favor?”

3:34 A member cannot rise for the purpose of claiming preference in being recognized (as this right is called in all of the above cases) after the chair has recognized another member. If at any time the chair makes a mistake, however, and assigns the floor to the wrong person—when preference in recognition was timely claimed or in any other case—his attention can be called to it by raising a Point of Order (23), and he must immediately correct the error.

3:35 The preceding rules usually are adequate for assigning the floor in most business meetings. In great assemblies or conventions, or in bodies that must handle a heavy agenda or complex issues, additional situations often occur where the best interests of the assembly require the floor to be assigned to a claimant who was not the first to rise and address the chair. (For the rules governing these cases, see 42.)
§4. THE HANDLING OF A MOTION

4:1 The handling of a motion varies in certain details according to conditions. In the ordinary case, especially under new business, there are six essential steps—three by which the motion is brought before the assembly, and three in the consideration of the motion.
How a Motion Is Brought Before the Assembly

4:2 The three steps by which a motion is normally brought before the assembly are as follows:

1) A member makes the motion. (The words move and offer also refer to this step. A person is said to “make a motion,” but he uses the word “move” when he does so. He is also said “to move” a particular proposal, as in “to move a postponement.”)
2) Another member seconds the motion.
3) The chair states the question on the motion. (The step of stating the question on the motion should not be confused with putting the question, which takes place later and means putting the motion to a vote.)

4:3 Neither the making nor the seconding of a motion places it before the assembly; only the chair can do that, by the third step (stating the question). When the chair has stated the question, the motion is pending, that is, “on the floor.” It is then open to debate (if it is a main motion or one of several other debatable parliamentary motions, which are described in later chapters). If the assembly decides to do what a motion proposes, it adopts the motion, or the motion is carried; if the assembly expressly decides against doing what the motion proposes, the motion is lost, or rejected.

4:4 Making a Motion. To make a main motion, a member must obtain the floor, as explained above, when no other question is pending and when business of the kind represented by the motion is in order. The member then makes his motion, in simple cases by saying, “I move that…[announcing what he proposes in a wording intended to become the assembly’s official statement of the action taken].” For more important or complex questions, or when greater formality is desired, he presents the motion in the form of a resolution. The usual wording then is, “I move the adoption of the following resolution: ‘Resolved, That…’”; or, “I offer the following resolution: ‘Resolved, That…’” (For additional information on the proper form for main motions and resolutions, see 10.)

4:5 A resolution or a long or complicated motion should be prepared in advance of the meeting, if possible, and should be put into writing before it is offered. The mover then passes it to the chair as soon as he has offered it. If conditions make it impractical for a member offering a written resolution to read it himself, he signs it and passes or sends it to the chair ahead of time (in a large meeting, often by page or messenger), or he can deliver it to the secretary before the meeting. In such a case the member offers his resolution by saying, “I move the adoption of the resolution relating to…, which I have sent to the chair [or “have delivered to the Secretary”],” identifying it by its subject matter; or, when moving its adoption, the member may identify the resolution by its designated title, number, letter, or the like. The chair then says, “The resolution offered by Mrs. A is as follows:…” or, “The Secretary will read the resolution offered by Mrs. A,” and the chair (or the secretary) reads the resolution in full. If the text of the resolution or motion has been distributed to the members in advance, however, it need not be read when moved.

4:6 As soon as a member has made a motion, he resumes his seat. He will have the right to speak first in debate, if he wishes, after the chair has stated the question. If the motion has not been heard or is not clear, another member can ask that it be repeated, which the chair can request the maker or the secretary to do, or can do himself.

motion. When necessary, a motion can be prefaced by a few words of explanation, which must not become a speech; or a member can first request information, or he can indicate briefly what he wishes to propose and can ask the chair to assist him in wording an appropriate motion. In general, however, when a member has obtained the floor while no motion is pending—unless it is for a special purpose, such as to ask a question—he makes a motion immediately. Any desired improvements upon the member’s proposal can be accomplished by several methods after the motion has been made (for a summary, see 10:29–30).

For a member to begin to discuss a matter while no question is pending, without promptly leading to a motion, implies an unusual circumstance and requires permission of the assembly (see 33:22) in addition to obtaining the floor. In larger assemblies, this rule requires firm enforcement. In smaller meetings, it may sometimes be relaxed with constructive effect if the members are not accustomed to working under the standard rule. Unless the assembly has specifically authorized that a particular subject be discussed while no motion is pending, however, such a discussion can be entered into only at the sufferance of the chair or until a point of order is made; and in the latter case, the chair must immediately require that a motion be offered or the discussion cease. The general rule against discussion without a motion is one of parliamentary procedure’s powerful tools for keeping business “on track,” and an observance of its spirit can be an important factor in making even a very small meeting rapidly moving and interesting.6

4:9 Seconding a Motion. After a motion has been made, another member who wishes it to be considered says, “I second the motion,” or, “I second it,” or even, “Second!”—without obtaining the floor, and in small assemblies without rising.7 In large assemblies, and especially in those where nonmembers may be seated in the hall, the seconder stands, and without waiting to be recognized states his name (with other identification, if appropriate) and says, “Mr. President [or “Mr. Chairman”], I second the motion.” In some organizations, especially labor unions, the word “support” is used in place of “second.”

4:10 If no member seconds the motion, the chair must be sure that all have heard it before proceeding to other business. In such a case the chair normally asks, “Is there a second to the motion?” In a large hall he may repeat the motion before doing so. Or, if a resolution was submitted in writing and read by the chair or the secretary rather than by the mover (as described in 4:5), the chair may say, “Miss A has moved the adoption of the resolution just read. Is there a second to the resolution?”; or, if the text of the resolution has been distributed to the members in advance and was moved without being read, the chair may say, for example, “Miss A has moved the adoption of the resolution relating to…, as printed. Is there a second to the resolution?” If there still is no second, the chair says, “The motion [or “resolution”] is not seconded”; or, “Since there is no second, the motion is not before this meeting.” Then he immediately says, “The next item of business is…”; or, if appropriate, “Is there any further business?”

4:11 A second merely implies that the seconder agrees that the motion should come before the meeting and not that he necessarily favors the motion. A member may second a motion (even if using the word “support” as indicated above) because he would like to see the assembly go on record as rejecting the proposal, if he believes a vote on the motion would have such a result. A motion made by direction of a board or duly appointed committee of the assembly requires no second from the floor (provided the subordinate group is composed of more than one person), since the motion’s introduction has been directed by a majority vote within the board or committee and is therefore desired by at least two assembly members or elected or appointed persons to whose opinion the assembly is presumed to give weight regarding the board’s or committee’s concerns. (For rules governing the appointment of non–assembly members to committees, see [13:15, 50:12, and 50:13(d).]

4:12 The requirement of a second is for the chair’s guidance whether to state the question on the motion, thus placing it before the assembly. Its purpose is to prevent time from being consumed by the assembly’s having to dispose of a motion that only one person wants to see introduced.

4:13 In handling routine motions, less attention is paid to the requirement of a second. If the chair is certain that a motion meets with wide approval but members are slow in seconding it, he can state the question without waiting for a second. However, until debate has begun in such a case—or, if there is no debate, until the chair begins to take the vote and any member has voted—a point of order (see [23] can be raised that the motion has not been seconded; and then the chair must proceed formally and ask if there is a second. Such a point of order should not be made only for the sake of form, if it is clear that more than one member wishes to take up the motion. After debate has begun or, if there is no debate, after any member has voted, the lack of a second has become immaterial and it is too late to make a point of order that the motion has not been seconded. If a motion is considered and adopted without having been seconded—even in a case where there was no reason for the chair to overlook this requirement—the absence of a second does not affect the validity of the motion’s adoption.

4:14 (For lists of certain parliamentary motions that do not require a second, see pages t44–t45.)
The Stating of the Question by the Chair. When a motion that is in order has been made and seconded, the chair formally places it before the assembly by stating the question; that is, he states the exact motion and indicates that it is open to debate (and certain other parliamentary processes to be explained in 5 and 6) in the manner indicated below as appropriate to the case:

a) The basic form used by the chair in stating the question on an ordinary motion is, “It is moved and seconded that [or “to”] … [repeating the motion].” The chair then normally turns toward the maker of the motion to see if he wishes to be assigned the floor. If the maker does not claim the floor and, after a pause, no one else does, the chair may ask, “Are you ready for the question?” (or, less formally, “Is there any debate?”). For example, “It is moved and seconded that the Society allocate fifty dollars for…”; or, “… that fifty dollars be allocated…”; or, “It is moved and seconded to allocate fifty dollars for….” The chair recognizes Mr. A.”

b) In the case of a resolution, the chair may state the question by saying, “It is moved and seconded to adopt the following resolution [or, “… that the following resolution be adopted”]: ‘Resolved, That… [reading the resolution].’”

c) If the chair, in stating the question on a written resolution or motion, wishes the secretary to read it, he may state the question as follows: “It is moved and seconded to adopt the resolution which the Secretary will now read.” The secretary reads the resolution, after which the chair continues: “The question is on the adoption of the resolution just read.”

d) If a written resolution was not read by the mover but was read by the chair or the secretary before being seconded, the chair may state the question thus: “It is moved and seconded to adopt the resolution just read.”
e) The chair at his discretion may also use the form given immediately above in cases where the member offering a resolution has read it clearly and the chair is confident that all members have understood it. In such a case, however, any member has the right to have the motion or resolution read again when the question is stated.

f) Similarly, if the text of a resolution has been distributed to the members in advance, the chair may state the question without reading it in full, instead identifying the resolution by its subject or designated title, number, letter, or the like, as by saying, “It is moved and seconded to adopt the resolution relating to…, as printed.” In such a case, too, any member has the right to have the motion or resolution read by the chair or the secretary.

4:16 In principle, the chair must state the question on a motion immediately after it has been made and seconded, unless he is obliged to rule that the motion is not in order or unless, in his opinion, the wording is not clear.

4:17 Rules and explanations relating to the conditions under which various motions are not in order will be found particularly in 5, 6, and 7; in 10:26–27; and in the first three of the “Standard Descriptive Characteristics” given in the sections on each of the parliamentary motions (11–37). When a member who has legitimately obtained the floor offers a motion which is not in order, the chair may be able, in certain instances, to suggest an alternative motion which would be in order and would carry out the desired intent to the satisfaction of the maker. If the chair is obliged to rule that the motion is not in order, he says, “The chair rules that the motion is not in order [or “is out of order”] because… [briefly stating the reason].” (He must not say, “You are out of order,” nor, “Your motion is out of order.”) To state that a member is out of order implies that the member is guilty of a breach of decorum or other misconduct in a meeting; and even in such a case, the chair does not normally address the member in the second person. See 3:13; also 61.) If the chair rules that a motion is not in order, his decision is subject to an appeal to the judgment of the assembly. (For procedure regarding Appeal, see 24.)

4:18 If a motion is offered in a wording that is not clear or that requires smoothing before it can be recorded in the minutes, it is the duty of the chair to see that the motion is put into suitable form—preserving the content to the satisfaction of the mover—before the question is stated. The chair must never admit a motion that the secretary would have to paraphrase for the record. The chair—either on his own initiative or at the secretary’s request—can require any main motion (10), amendment (12), or instructions to a committee to be in writing before he states the question.

4:19 Until the chair states the question, the maker has the right to modify his motion as he pleases or to withdraw it entirely.
After the question has been stated by the chair, the motion becomes the property of the assembly, and then its maker can do neither of these things without the assembly’s consent (see 33:11–19); but while the motion is pending the assembly can change the wording of the motion by the process of amendment (12) before acting upon it.

4:20 After a motion has been made but before the chair states it or rules that it is not in order, no debate is in order. At such a time, however, any member can quickly rise and, without waiting to be recognized, can say, “Mr. President, I would like to ask the maker of the motion if he will accept the following modification:…. [or, “… if he would be willing to change the words… to…”].” The maker then answers, “Mr. President, I accept [or “do not accept,” or “cannot accept”] the modification”; or, he can respond by making a different modification: “Mr. President, I will modify the motion as follows:
If the maker of a motion modifies it before the question is stated, a person who has seconded it has the right to withdraw his second; but if a modification is accepted as suggested by another member—either before or after the motion has been seconded—the suggester has in effect seconded the modified motion, so that no other second is necessary. Under any circumstances where a second is withdrawn but it is clear that another member favors consideration of the motion in its modified form, the chair treats the motion as seconded. If the maker makes any change in his motion and it remains, in effect, seconded, or (if necessary) is then seconded, the chair says, “It is moved and seconded…,” stating the question on the modified motion just as if it had been so moved originally. If a modification is suggested and the maker declines to make any change, the chair says, “The modification is not accepted,” and (provided that the motion has been seconded) he states the question on it as it was moved by the maker.

This procedure for modifying a motion before the question is stated is useful primarily for quickly handling simple, uncontroversial changes of the type that probably would not generate debate among the members present if proposed as amendments to a pending motion.

In a similar manner, before the question on a motion has been stated, any member who believes that the maker will immediately withdraw the motion if a certain fact is pointed out to him can quickly rise and say (without waiting for recognition), “Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the member would be willing to withdraw his motion in view of… [briefly stating the reasons for the suggested withdrawal].” The maker responds, “I withdraw [or “decline to withdraw”] the motion.” If the maker withdraws his motion, the chair says, “The motion is withdrawn,” and proceeds to the next business. If the purpose of the withdrawal was to deal with a more urgent matter first, the chair immediately recognizes the appropriate member to bring it up. If the maker is unwilling to withdraw his motion, the chair says, “The member declines to withdraw the motion,” and (if the motion has been seconded) he then states the question.

4:24 Before the question is stated no debate may accompany suggestions that a motion be modified or withdrawn. Time can often be saved, however, by brief informal consultation—which the chair has discretion to permit, provided that he or she is careful to see that it does not develop into an extended colloquy between members or take on the semblance of debate. The chair can frequently maintain the necessary control over such informal consultation by standing while it takes place (in contrast to the rule that he normally remains seated during debate unless it would obstruct his view of the members; see 47:9).
The Consideration of a Main Motion: Basic Steps

4:25 Once a main motion has been brought before the assembly through the three steps described above, there are three further basic steps by which the motion is considered in the ordinary and simplest case (unless it is adopted by unanimous consent, as explained in 4:58–63). These normal steps are as follows:

1) Members debate the motion (unless no member claims the floor for that purpose).
2) The chair puts the question (that is, puts it to a vote).
3) The chair announces the result of the vote.

4:26 In addition, while the motion is open to debate, the assembly may wish to take a number of actions as a part of the motion’s consideration—which can themselves be the subject of certain parliamentary motions, as explained in 5 and 6. In the following description of the three principal steps in the consideration of a main motion, it is assumed that none of these other motions are introduced.

4:27 Debate on the Question. Immediately after stating the question, the chair turns toward the maker of the motion to see if he wishes to be assigned the floor first in debate—to which the maker has the right if he claims it before anyone else has been recognized, even though others may have risen and addressed the chair first.

4:28 A member who desires to speak in debate must obtain the floor as described in 3:30–35. In assigning the floor, the chair follows the rules explained in the same paragraphs and in 42. In the debate, each member has the right to speak twice on the same question on the same day, but cannot make a second speech on the same question so long as any member who has not spoken on that question desires the floor. A member who has spoken twice on a particular question on the same day has exhausted his right to debate that question for that day.

4:29 Without the permission of the assembly, no one can speak longer than permitted by the rules of the body—or, in a nonlegislative assembly that has no rule of its own relating to the length of speeches, longer than ten minutes.

4:30 Debate must be confined to the merits of the pending question. Speakers must address their remarks to the chair, maintain a courteous tone, and—especially in reference to any divergence of opinion—avoid injecting a personal note into debate. To this end, they must never attack or make any allusion to the motives of members. As already noted, speakers should refer to officers only by title and should avoid the mention of other members’ names as much as possible.

4:31 Except in committees and small boards, the presiding officer does not enter into discussion of the merits of pending questions (unless, in rare instances, he leaves the chair until the pending business has been disposed of, as described in 43:29–30). While members are speaking in debate, the presiding officer normally remains seated unless the view between him and the members would be obstructed. In the latter case, he should step back slightly while a member is speaking. Although the presiding officer should give close attention to each speaker’s remarks during debate, he cannot interrupt the person who has the floor so long as that person does not violate any of the assembly’s rules and no disorder arises. The presiding officer must never interrupt a speaker simply because he knows more about the matter than the speaker does.

4:32 The presiding officer cannot close debate so long as any member who has not exhausted his right to debate desires the floor, except by order of the assembly, which requires a two-

4:33 (For additional rules and information related to debate, see 43.)

4:34 Putting the Question. When the debate appears to have closed, the chair may ask, “Are you ready for the question?” or “Is there any further debate?” If no one then rises to claim the floor, the chair proceeds to put the question—that is, he puts it to a vote after once more making clear the exact question the assembly is called upon to decide. If the chair’s wording of the question is erroneous, a point of order may be made until any member has actually voted. Except as it may be corrected in response to such a point of order, the exact wording the chair uses in putting the question is definitive, and the wording in the minutes must be the same. Where there is any possibility of confusion, the chair, before calling for the vote, should make sure that the members understand the effect of an “aye” vote and of a “no” vote. In putting the question, the chair stands (except in a small board or a committee) and should especially project his voice to be sure that all are aware that the vote is being taken.

4:35 The vote on a motion is normally taken by voice (or viva voce), unless, under certain conditions, it is taken by rising or —sometimes in committees, or in small boards, or other very small assemblies—by a show of hands. In putting the question by any of these methods, the chair calls first for the affirmative vote, and all who wish to vote in favor of the motion so indicate in the manner specified; then he calls for the negative vote. The chair must always call for the negative vote, no matter how nearly unanimous the affirmative vote may appear, except that this rule is commonly relaxed in the case of noncontroversial motions of a complimentary or courtesy nature; but even in such a case, if any member objects, the chair must call for the negative vote. A further exception arises when the negative vote is intrinsically irrelevant, as, for example, when “a vote of one fifth of the members present” is required (see 44:9(a)). The chair does not call for abstentions in taking a vote, since the number of members who respond to such a call is meaningless. To “abstain” means not to vote at all, and a member who makes no response if “abstentions” are called for abstains just as much as one who responds to that effect (see also 45:3).

4:36 The three methods of putting the question stated in the preceding paragraph, as well as the forms used when a vote taken by rising or by a show of hands is counted, are described below. Other methods of taking a formal vote (as distinguished from adopting a motion by unanimous consent, 4:58–63) are used only when expressly ordered by the assembly or prescribed by its rules; they are described in 45.

4:37 Form for taking a voice vote. A vote by voice is the regular method of voting on any motion that does not require more than a majority vote for its adoption (see 1:6; 44). In taking a voice vote, the chair puts the question by saying, “The question is on the adoption of the motion to [or “that”]… [repeating or clearly identifying the motion]. Those in favor of the motion, say aye. [Pausing for response.]… Those opposed, say no.” (Alternative forms are: “All those in favor…”; “All in favor…”; or the wording formerly prescribed in Congress, “As many as are in favor…”.) In the case of a resolution, the question may be put as follows: “The question is on the adoption of the following resolution: [reading it]. Those in favor of adopting the resolution that was just read, say aye…. Those opposed, say no.” If the resolution has been read very recently and there appears to be no desire to have it read again, the chair may use this form: “The question is on the adoption of the resolution last read.
Those in favor of adopting the resolution, say aye.... Those opposed, say no." However, if there has been any debate or amendment since the resolution was last read, any member can demand that it be read again when the question is put, if the chair does not do so on his own.11

4:38 Form for taking a rising (division) vote. The simple rising vote (in which the number of members voting on each side is not counted) is used principally in cases where a voice vote has been taken with an inconclusive result, and as the normal method of voting on motions requiring a two-thirds vote for adoption (see Chair’s Announcement of the Voting Result, etc., below). When only a majority is required, however, time may sometimes be saved by taking a rising vote initially, if the chair believes in advance that a voice vote will be inconclusive. In all such cases the vote can be taken in a form like this: “Those in favor of the motion to invite Mr. Jones to be guest speaker at our next meeting will rise. [Or, “stand.”]... Be seated.... Those opposed will rise.... Be seated.”

4:39 If a rising vote remains inconclusive, the chair or the assembly can order the vote to be counted (see 4:58; 30; 45:14). The form then used is, for example: “The question is on the motion to limit all speeches at this meeting to two minutes. Those in favor of the motion will rise and remain standing until counted.... Be seated. Those opposed will rise and remain standing until counted.... Be seated.”

4:40 Form for taking a vote by show of hands. As an alternative to voting by voice, a vote by show of hands can be used as the basic voting method in small boards or in committees, and it is so used in some assemblies. An inconclusive voice vote is also sometimes verified by this method. For either of these purposes, the use of voting by show of hands in assemblies should generally be limited to very small meetings where every member can clearly see every other member present. In voting by this method, the question can be put, for example, as follows: “The question is on the motion that the bill for building repairs be paid as rendered. All those in favor of the motion will raise the right hand…. Lower hands. [Or, nodding, “Thank you.”] Those opposed will raise the right hand…. Lower hands.”

4:41 Chair’s Announcement of the Voting Result; Verification Procedures and Cases Where the Chair Votes. The chair, remaining standing, announces the result of the vote immediately after putting the question—that is, as soon as he has paused to permit response to his call for the negative vote. A majority vote in the affirmative adopts any motion unless it is one of the particular motions that require a larger vote under parliamentary law or the rules of the organization. (For the parliamentary motions that require a two-thirds vote, see pages t48–t49.) Under all of the voting methods described above except a counted rising vote (or a counted show of hands), the result is determined by the chair’s judgment as to the prevailing side—which it is his duty, in doubtful cases, to verify beyond reasonable doubt, and to the satisfaction of the members, by the procedures described below.

4:42 In voting by any of these methods (including a counted rising vote), a member has the right to change his vote up to the time the result is announced. After that, he can make the change only by unanimous permission of the assembly. (See 45:8, and see 4:58–63 regarding the granting of such permission by unanimous consent.)

4:43 Content of complete announcement. In general (that is, as applying to main motions and other types of motions explained in later chapters), the chair’s announcement of the result of the vote includes the following:
1) Report of the voting itself, stating which side “has it”—that is, which side is more numerous—or, in the case of a motion requiring a two-thirds vote for adoption, whether there are two thirds in the affirmative. If the vote has been counted, the chair first gives the count before announcing the prevailing side.

2) Declaration that the motion is adopted or lost.

3) Statement indicating the effect of the vote, or ordering its execution, if needed or appropriate.

4:44 The three points listed immediately above generally complete the chair’s announcement of the voting result. However, whenever it is stated in this book that a certain procedural motion relating to a vote that has been taken is in order immediately after the result of a vote has been announced (see, for example, 45:9), that interval begins as soon as the chair has pronounced the first two points.

4:45 Form of announcement of voting result and the business that follows. The three points generally covered by the chair’s announcement of the voting result as listed above are normally spoken without separation into distinct elements; and, where applicable, they are immediately followed without pause by announcement of the next item of business, or (in the case of “secondary” motions, which are described in the next chapter) by the stating of the next motion that consequently comes up for consideration.

4:46 Standard forms, as shown in the bulleted list below, can be given only for the part of the announcement covered by the first two points listed above. The form of the third point—which is usually needed only for a vote that has caused a motion to be adopted—is determined by the particular motion. For example, after declaring that the motion is adopted, the chair might indicate its effect by saying, “The Secretary will send to the

4:47 Immediately after completing the announcement of the voting result, to announce the next business in order, the chair might say, for example, “The next item of business is the report of the Treasurer,” or, “Is there any further new business?” or, to state the question on the motion that comes up next as a result of the vote, “The question is now on the main motion as amended.”

4:48 The full sequence of announcing the voting result and the business that follows is frequently illustrated in the subsections Form and Example in the sections covering the different parliamentary motions in chapters VI–IX, and in 10:38–43 as applied to the main motion.

4:49 Depending on the voting method and the vote required for adoption of the motion, the chair makes the standard portion of the announcement, covering the first two numbered points as listed in 4:43, as follows:

a) For a voice vote: “… The ayes have it and the motion is adopted [or “agreed to” or “carried”].…” Or, “… The noes have it and the motion is lost.…”

b) For a rising vote (uncounted) or a vote by show of hands: “… The affirmative has it and the motion is adopted.…” Or, “… The negative has it and the motion is lost.…”

c) For a rising vote or a show of hands on which a count has been ordered: “… There are 32 in the affirmative and 30 in the negative. The affirmative has it and the motion is adopted.…” Or, “… There are 29 in the affirmative and 33 in the negative. The negative has it and the motion is lost.…”

d) For a motion requiring a two-thirds vote for adoption (where an uncounted rising vote is conclusive): “… There are two thirds in the affirmative and the motion is adopted....” Or, “... There are less than two thirds in the affirmative and the motion is lost....”

e) For a motion requiring a two-thirds vote for adoption (where a count of the vote is taken): “... There are 51 in the affirmative and 23 in the negative. There are two thirds in the affirmative and the motion is adopted....” Or, “... There are 48 in the affirmative and 26 in the negative. There are less than two thirds in the affirmative and the motion is lost....”

f) When the chair votes where his vote will affect the result (see below): “... There are 35 in the affirmative and 35 in the negative. The chair votes in the affirmative, making 36 in the affirmative and 35 in the negative, so that the affirmative has it and the motion is adopted....” Or, “... There are 39 in the affirmative and 38 in the negative. The chair votes in the negative, making 39 in the affirmative and 39 in the negative, so that there is less than a majority in the affirmative and the motion is lost....”

g) When the chair votes where his vote will affect the result on a motion requiring a two-thirds vote for adoption: “... There are 59 in the affirmative and 30 in the negative. The chair votes in the affirmative, making 60 in the affirmative and 30 in the negative, so that there are two thirds in the affirmative and the motion is adopted....” Or, “... There are 60 in the affirmative and 30 in the negative. The chair votes in the negative, making 60 in the affirmative and 31 in the negative, so that there are less than two thirds in the affirmative and the motion is lost....”

4:50 Verifying an inconclusive vote. A voice vote—or, in larger meetings, even a vote by show of hands—may sometimes be inconclusive, either because the voting is close or because a significant number of members have failed to vote. If the chair feels that members may question a somewhat close result of which he is reasonably convinced, he can first say, “The ayes [or “the noes”] seem to have it.” The chair then pauses, and any member who doubts the result is thus invited to demand verification of the vote by a division, as explained below. If no member makes such a demand or states that he doubts the result, the chair continues, “The ayes have it…,” as shown above.

4:51 If the chair is in actual doubt in the case of such a vote, however, he does not announce a result, but instead immediately retakes the vote—strictly speaking, always as a rising vote. (Regarding use of a show of hands as a method of verifying an inconclusive voice vote, however, see below.) If it appears when those in the affirmative rise that the vote will be close enough to require a count, the chair should count the vote, or direct the secretary to do so, or (in a large assembly) appoint a convenient number of tellers—preferably an even number equally divided between members known to be in favor of the motion and those opposed to it. If, after a vote has been retaken as an uncounted rising vote, the chair finds himself still unable to determine the result, he must take the vote a third time as a counted rising vote.

4:52 Division of the Assembly. Whether or not the chair pauses to say, “The ayes seem to have it…,” any member (without a second) has the right to require that a voice vote (or even a vote by show of hands) be retaken as a rising vote, so long as he does not use the procedure as a dilatory tactic when there clearly has been a full vote and there can be no reasonable doubt of the result. A vote retaken by rising at the demand of a member is called a Division of the Assembly, or simply “a division.” A member can demand a division from the moment the negative votes have been cast until the result of the vote has been announced or immediately thereafter (see 45:9). To do so, the member, without obtaining the floor, calls out the single word “Division!” or “I call for [or “demand”] a division,” or “I doubt the result of the vote.” The chair must then immediately take the rising vote.

4:53 Either the chair on his own initiative or the assembly by a majority vote can order such a vote to be counted. If a division appears doubtfully close and the chair does not order a count, a member, as soon as the chair has announced the result, can rise and address the chair, and is entitled to preference in recognition for the purpose of moving that the vote be counted. If such a motion is made and is seconded, the chair states it, and puts the question (by a voice vote, or by an uncounted rising vote or show of hands) on whether a count shall be ordered. If a count is ordered, the chair takes the doubtfully close division again by a counted rising vote.

4:55 Verification by show of hands. In very small assemblies where everyone present can clearly see everyone else, an inconclusive voice vote may sometimes be verified satisfactorily by a show of hands if no member objects. A show of hands is not a division, however, and it is not always as effective in causing a maximum number of members to vote when some have not done so. In small meetings, a voice vote can be retaken by a show of hands at the initiative of the chair; or, during the same time that it is in order to demand a division, any member can call out, “Mr. President, may we have a show of hands?” In either case, any other member still has the right to demand a division, which requires the chair to take a rising vote. The chair can also immediately take a rising vote in response to a request for a show of hands.
Chair’s vote as part of the announcement, where it affects the result. If the presiding officer is a member of the assembly or voting body, he has the same voting right as any other member. Except in a small board or a committee, however—unless the vote is secret (that is, unless it is by ballot; 45)—the chair protects his impartial position by exercising his voting right only when his vote would affect the outcome, in which case he can either vote and thereby change the result, or he can abstain. If he abstains, he simply announces the result with no mention of his own vote. In a counted rising vote (or a count of hands) on a motion requiring a majority vote for adoption, the outcome will be determined by the chair’s action in cases where, without his vote, there is (a) a tie, or (b) one more in the affirmative than in the negative. Since a majority in the affirmative is necessary to adopt the motion in the case mentioned, a final result in the form of a tie rejects it. When there is a tie without the chair’s vote, the chair can vote in the affirmative, and such a vote adopts the motion; but if the chair abstains from voting, the motion is lost. When there is one more in the affirmative than in the negative without the chair’s vote, the motion is adopted if the chair abstains; but if he votes in the negative, the result is thereby tied and the motion is lost.

Adoption of a Motion, or Action Without a Motion, by Unanimous Consent

4:58 In cases where there seems to be no opposition in routine business or on questions of little importance, time can often be saved by the procedure of unanimous consent, or as it was formerly also called, general consent. Action in this manner is in accord with the principle that rules are designed for the protection of the minority and generally need not be strictly enforced when there is no minority to protect. Under these conditions, the method of unanimous consent can be used either to adopt a motion without the steps of stating the question and putting the motion to a formal vote, or it can be used to take action without even the formality of a motion.

4:59 To obtain unanimous consent in either case, the chair states that “If there is no objection… [or, “Without objection…”],” the action that he mentions will be taken; or he may ask, “Is there any objection to…?” He then pauses, and if no member calls out, “I object,” the chair announces that, “Since there is no objection…,” the action is decided upon. If any member objects, the chair must state the question on the motion, allow any desired debate (unless it is an “undebatable” parliamentary motion—see 6 and pages t46–t47), and put the question in the regular manner. Or—if no motion has been made—the chair must first ask, “Is there a motion to… [stating the proposed action]”; or he must at least put the question, assuming such a motion. If an objection is made with reasonable promptness, even though the chair may have already announced the result as one of “no objection,” he must disregard such an announcement and proceed to state the question in the usual manner.

4:60 “Unanimous consent” does not necessarily imply that every member present is in favor of the proposed action; it may only mean that the opposition, feeling that it is useless to oppose or discuss the matter, simply acquiesces. Similarly, when a member responds to the chair’s inquiry, “Is there any objection…?” with “I object,” he may not necessarily oppose the motion itself, but may believe that it is wise to take a formal vote under the circumstances. In other words, the objection is raised, not to the proposed action, but to the action’s being taken without a formal vote. No member should hesitate to object if he feels it is desirable to do so, but he should not object merely for dilatory purposes. If a member is uncertain of the effect of an action proposed for unanimous consent, he can call out, “I reserve the right to object,” or, “Reserving the right to object,…” After brief consultation he can then object or withdraw his reservation.

4:61 The correction of minutes (41:10) is an example of business that is normally handled by unanimous consent. As a second example, assume that a speaker whose time has expired in debate on a motion asks for two additional minutes. If the chair thinks that all members will approve, he may handle the matter as follows:

CHAIR: If there is no objection, the member’s time will be extended two minutes… [pause]. Since there is no objection, the member’s time is extended two minutes.

Or:

CHAIR: Is there any objection to the member’s time being extended two minutes?… [pause]. The chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Or, particularly if no objection is anticipated:

CHAIR: Without objection, the member’s time is extended two minutes.
In cases where unanimous consent is already apparent, the chair may sometimes assume it. For example, if everyone is obviously absorbed in listening to a speaker who seems near the end of his remarks, the chair may allow him to conclude without interruption, although his time has expired.

Whenever it is stated in this book that a certain action or the adoption of a certain motion “requires a two-thirds vote,” the same action can, in principle, also be taken by unanimous consent. If much hinges on the outcome, however, it is usually better to take a formal vote. Action by unanimous consent requires the presence of a quorum, just as for the transaction of business by any other method.
Relation of Other Motions to the Main Motion

4:64 As already noted, the foregoing initial description of the handling of motions refers principally to the main motion—the basic form of motion by which business is brought up and by which the assembly takes substantive action. As also stated above, the consideration of a main motion can involve a number of other procedures not yet described—which are nevertheless in the nature of action by the assembly and are themselves properly the subject of motions. In the same way there are a number of “privileged” motions, which are not associated with the main question but can nevertheless be introduced while it is pending because they relate to certain urgent matters that may arise and warrant immediate determination at such a time. Except for interrupting consideration of the main motion, motions of this type have no direct effect on its disposition. Finally, there are motions by which business can be brought before the assembly under a number of special circumstances involving an earlier question. For each of the permissible processes in all of these categories, there has evolved a particular motion with its own name and rules governing its use—resembling or differing from the main motion in varying degrees. All such derived forms of motions, proposing procedural steps specifically defined under parliamentary law, are loosely referred to for descriptive purposes in this book as “parliamentary” motions.

4:65 The next chapter contains a brief statement of the purpose of each of the parliamentary motions, together with an explanation of the classes into which all motions are divided. The main motion is more fully treated in 10, as are each of the other motions in 11–37.
Footnotes to Chapter II

1. As distinguished from a small committee, where some relaxation of this rule may be appropriate, depending on the conditions.

2. A member who is unable to stand is permitted to speak while seated.

3. The order of business is separate and distinct from the procedure of calling a meeting to order, which is not a part of the order of business. A meeting opens by being called to order even when it has no established order of business. Additional “calls to order” may occur during the order of business at various times not specified in advance, if the assembly takes a recess (8, 20) or adjourns to a future time (8, 22) before the order of business is completed. For these reasons, it is not proper to list a “call to order” as the first item in an order of business or agenda, as is often incorrectly done.

4. In small boards and in committees, members generally need not rise to obtain the floor. See 49:21(1).

5. The expression “privileges of the floor,” sometimes used in legislative bodies or conventions, has nothing to do with having the floor, but means merely that a person is permitted to enter the portion of the hall floor otherwise restricted to members and necessary staff. It carries no right to speak or any other right of membership, except as may be determined by rules or action of the body.

6. In the very early development of parliamentary procedure, a presiding officer was expected to distill from the debate the essence of a motion and, in conclusion, take a vote on that motion. It was found in the House of Lords in England that, when there was no definite motion pending, it was not possible to tell whether debate was germane, and the debate itself often became discursive and lengthy. In addition, the presiding officer might not digest the debate into a motion in a way satisfactory to most of the members. In such a case, there was little opportunity to put the motion in proper form before voting, since the chair’s formulation of it occurred at the conclusion.

7. Motions need not be seconded in a small board or a committee.

8. For a parliamentary motion that is not debatable but is amendable (see list on page t47), only “Are you ready for the question?” or “Are there any amendments?” are applicable phrases. For a parliamentary motion that is neither debatable nor amendable (see list on page t46), the chair omits any such query and instead puts the motion to a vote.
immediately after stating it.

9. For procedures where greater freedom of debate is desired, see 15 and 52.

10. Pronounced VIE-vuh VOE-see.

11. In the case of any resolution, motion, or paper placed before the assembly that has not been read even once, the chair may not put it to a vote or seek its approval or adoption without reading it (or having it read by the secretary) unless permission is first obtained by unanimous consent—except that where the full text has been distributed to the members in advance, the chair may initially presume that there is no objection to omitting the reading (but any member still has the right to demand that it be read). Such an exception typically involves adoption of an agenda; approval of the minutes; or, in a convention, the rules proposed by the Committee on Standing Rules or the program proposed by the Program Committee. (See also 4:15(f).)

12. The ellipsis points (dots) before and after each form indicate that it follows immediately after the putting of the question, and is immediately followed by the remainder of the announcement of the result, as described above.

13. For a discussion of the conditions under which the chair’s vote affects the result in the case of motions requiring a two-thirds vote for adoption, see 44:12.
DESCRIPTION OF MOTIONS IN ALL CLASSIFICATIONS

§5. BASIC CLASSIFICATIONS; ORDER OF PRECEDENCE OF MOTIONS

Classes of Motions

5:1 As noted in Chapter II, the word motion refers to a formal proposal by a member, in a meeting, that the assembly take certain action. Before a subject can be considered, it must be placed before the assembly in the form of a motion. From the basic type of motion known as the main motion, as also noted in the preceding chapter, many other specific motions have been derived and have become defined under parliamentary law.

5:2 For convenience in description, motions may be classified as shown in the following list. (As indicated to the right of the list, the motions in the second, third, and fourth classes—subsidiary, privileged, and incidental motions taken together—are also called “secondary motions.”)\(^1\)
1. Main motions
   a. Original main motions
   b. Incidental main motions
2. Subsidiary motions
3. Privileged motions
4. Incidental motions
5. Motions that bring a question again before the assembly
Secondary Motions as an Underlying Concept

5:3 Nature of Secondary Motions. The concept of secondary motions serves as a starting point for the division of motions into the classes shown. It also throws light on the order of precedence of motions, which, as explained below, is a basic element of the rules under which these motions are used in the transaction of business.

5:4 Secondary motions may be seen as related to the following fundamental principle of parliamentary law: Only one question can be considered at a time; once a motion is before the assembly, it must be adopted or rejected by a vote, or the assembly must take action disposing of the question in some other way, before any other business (except certain matters called “privileged questions”) can be introduced. By this principle, a main motion can be made only when no other motion is pending. Thus, however, the need for a number of particular secondary motions arises.

5:5 A secondary motion is one whose relationship to the main question, or whose procedural character or urgency, is such that:

1) it can be made and considered while a main motion is pending (or, occasionally, it is applicable just before or after a related main question is pending)—without violating the principle of taking up only one question at a time; and

2) when the secondary motion has been made and has been admitted by the chair as in order (that is, as being legitimately able to come before the assembly at the time according to the rules affecting its use), it must be acted upon or disposed of before direct consideration of the main question can be continued.

5:6 Secondary motions generally are made and seconded and are stated by the chair, as a main motion would be—except that certain of them are in order while another member has the floor, and most of the motions in this latter group do not require a second (see pages t44–t45).

5:7 When a secondary motion is placed before the assembly, it becomes the immediately pending question; the main motion remains pending while the secondary motion is also pending. A main motion is the immediately pending question whenever it is pending with no secondary motion. Whenever the chair has occasion to inform the assembly as to what is the immediately pending question, however, he does not use this phrase, but employs the parliamentary form, “The question is on the motion to…” The latter form is used even when more than one motion is pending.

5:8 Taking of Precedence by One Motion over Another. If two motions “A” and “B” are related under rules of parliamentary procedure in such a way that motion “B” can be made while motion “A” is pending and, when stated by the chair, can thus temporarily replace “A” as the immediately pending question, motion “B” takes precedence\textsuperscript{2} over (or takes precedence of) motion “A,” and motion “A” yields to\textsuperscript{3} motion “B.” A secondary motion thus takes precedence over the main motion; and a main motion takes precedence over nothing and yields to all applicable secondary motions.

5:9 Certain secondary motions also take precedence over others, so that it is possible for more than one secondary motion to be pending at a time (together with the main motion). In such a case, the motion most recently stated by the chair (among those that have not been voted on) is the immediately pending question.

5:10 Order of Precedence of Motions; Rank. The rules under which secondary motions take precedence over one another have been gradually evolved through experience. While these rules are proper to each of the specific motions, they follow patterns that are related to the division of secondary motions into the classes of subsidiary, privileged, and incidental motions.

5:11 Viewed apart from incidental motions and with modifications under particular conditions explained in 6:7, the main motion, the seven subsidiary motions, and the five privileged motions fall into a definite order of precedence, which gives a particular rank to each of these thirteen motions. The main motion—which does not take precedence over anything—ranks lowest. Each of the other twelve motions has its proper position in the order, taking precedence over the motions that rank below it and yielding to those that rank above it. The privileged motions rank above all other motions. The manner in which the order of precedence of motions operates is illustrated in the summaries of subsidiary and privileged motions given in the next section (see also the chart pages t3–t5).

5:12 The incidental motions each have a certain relationship to the order of precedence of motions; but this relationship can be fully discussed only in terms of the rules governing the individual motions. Other factors also affect the conditions under which these motions are in order, as described in 6:15–6:24. When a particular incidental motion is in order, it takes precedence over the main motion and any other motions that may be pending. Incidental motions have no rank among themselves, and none of them can be assigned a position in the order of precedence of motions.

5:13 The rank of the motions in the fifth classification as listed at the beginning of this chapter—that is, the motions that bring a question again before the assembly—is discussed in the description of these motions beginning in 6:25.
§6. DESCRIPTION OF CLASSES AND INDIVIDUAL MOTIONS

Main Motions

6:1 A main motion is a motion whose introduction brings business before the assembly. As already noted, a main motion can be made only when no other motion is pending, and it ranks lowest in the order of precedence of motions.

6:2 It is usual to distinguish between original main motions and incidental main motions—which differ principally in the nature of their subject matter. The difference in the rules governing the use of main motions in these two subclasses is only slight. It should be noted that incidental main motions form a category completely separate from incidental motions—the fourth general class of motions. (The distinction between original main motions and incidental main motions is fully discussed in 10:2–7.)

6:3 Subsidiary motions assist the assembly in treating or disposing of a main motion (and sometimes other motions).

6:4 Manner of Listing the Motions. Each of the subsidiary motions is briefly described below in terms of the type of situation where it is of use, in a manner that may convey a suggestion of how the order of precedence of motions was arrived at. In the case of the subsidiary motions only, their distinguishing characteristics as a class are explained after this description of the individual motions, since these characteristics will be more easily understood if the material is read in that order. The subsidiary motions are listed below in reverse order of rank—which is the chronological order in which they would be moved if all of them became pending at one time. Each of the motions listed takes precedence over—that is, ranks above—the main motion, and also any or all of the motions listed before it.

6:5 Listing of Individual Subsidiary Motions. The subsidiary motions, briefly described by function, are as follows:

1) If an embarrassing main motion has been brought before the assembly, a member can propose to dispose of this question without bringing it to a direct vote, by moving to Postpone Indefinitely (11).

2) If a main motion might be more suitable or acceptable in an altered form, a proposal to change its wording (either to clarify or, within limits, to modify the meaning) before the main motion is voted on can be introduced by moving to Amend (12).

3) But it may be that much time would be required to amend the main motion properly, or that additional information is needed, so that it would be better to turn the motion or resolution over to a committee for study or redrafting before the assembly considers it further. Such action can be proposed by moving to Commit the main question—or Refer it to a committee (13).

4) If the assembly might prefer to consider the main motion later in the same meeting or at another meeting, this can be proposed by moving to Postpone to a Certain Time—also called the motion to Postpone Definitely, or simply to Postpone (14).

5) If it is desired to continue consideration of a motion but debate is consuming too much time, a member can move to place a limit on the debate; on the other hand, if special circumstances make it advisable to permit more or longer speeches than under the usual rules, a motion to do so can be made; or, it may sometimes be desirable to combine the elements of limitation and extension, as in limiting the length of speeches but allowing more speeches per member. All such modifications of the normal limits of debate on a pending motion are proposed by means of the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate (15).

6) If it is desired to close debate and amendment of a pending motion so that it will come to an immediate vote, this can be proposed by moving the Previous Question (16).

7) If there is reason for the assembly to lay the main motion aside temporarily without setting a time for resuming its consideration, but with the provision that it can be taken up again whenever a majority so decides, this can be proposed by the motion to Lay on the Table (17).

6:6 Characteristics of Subsidiary Motions as a Class.
to another motion while it is pending, to aid in treating or disposing of it; the adoption of one of them always does something to this other motion—that is, changes its status in some way—without adopting or expressly rejecting it. (2) They can be applied to any main motion. (Regarding other applications, see below.) (3) They fit into an order of precedence, as already explained, so that no subsidiary motion can be moved when a motion of higher rank is already pending. (4) They are out of order when another member has the floor. (5) They are in order during the entire time that a motion to which they can be applied is pending, except as may be precluded by a previously adopted motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate or for the Previous Question that is in effect. (In this respect, they differ from the incidental motions; cf. 6:16 and 16:2.)

6:7 Cases Where One Subsidiary Motion Can Be Applied to Another. The subsidiary motion to Amend is applicable to many other motions in addition to the main motion. All of the subsidiary motions can be amended except Postpone Indefinitely, the Previous Question, and Lay on the Table (which, by the nature of what they propose, do not lend themselves to amendment). When the motion to Amend is applied to another subsidiary motion, its rank is modified so that it takes precedence over the motion to which it is applied, even if that motion ranks higher than Amend in the regular order of precedence of motions. For example, suppose that a motion to Postpone the main question to a certain time is immediately pending. In such a case, motions to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, for the Previous Question, and to Lay on the Table are in order; motions to Postpone Indefinitely, to Amend, and to Commit, on the other hand, may have become pending before the motion to Postpone Definitely was moved, but none of these three motions can now be made—except that it is in order to move to amend the motion to Postpone, while it is immediately pending.

6:8 Debate can also be limited or extended on any debatable motion that is immediately pending (or on a specified series of pending motions including the immediately pending question, 15); and, similarly, debate and amendment can be closed on a motion or series of motions that are debatable and amendable, or amendment can be closed on motions that can be amended but not debated (16). The four lowest-ranking subsidiary motions can be debated (except that Amend is undebatable when it is applied to an undebatable motion). Debate of the three highest-ranking subsidiary motions is not permitted, since that would defeat their purpose. From these rules, it follows that the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate can be applied to any of the four subsidiary motions of lower rank (but not to the two that rank above it), while the Previous Question can be applied to any of the five subsidiary motions that rank below it (but not to the one subsidiary motion that ranks above it).

6:9 Incidental Main Motions Corresponding to Subsidiary Motions. For each of the subsidiary motions Amend, Commit, Postpone Definitely, and Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, there is a corresponding incidental main motion (10:4–5) of the same name that can be made when no other motion is pending.

6:10 (Each of the subsidiary motions is fully discussed in 11–17.)
Privileged Motions

6:11 Characteristics of Privileged Motions as a Class. Unlike subsidiary or incidental motions, privileged motions do not relate to the pending business, but have to do with special matters of immediate and overriding importance which, without debate, should be allowed to interrupt the consideration of anything else. Like subsidiary motions, however, the five privileged motions fit into an order of precedence. All of them take precedence over motions of any other class (except in certain instances where the immediately pending question may be a motion to Amend, a motion for the Previous Question, or an incidental motion that was moved while a still higher-ranking privileged motion was immediately pending). The privileged motions as a class are also known as “privileged questions,” which should not be confused with “questions of privilege,” as described in connection with the second motion listed below.

6:12 Listing of Individual Privileged Motions. The privileged motions are listed below in ascending order of rank. Each of the succeeding motions takes precedence over any or all of the motions listed before it.

1) If the adopted program or order of business is not being followed, or if consideration of a question has been set for the present time and is now in order but the matter is not being taken up, a single member, by making a Call for the Orders of the Day (18), can require such a schedule to be enforced—unless the assembly decides by a two-thirds vote to set the orders of the day aside.

2) If a pressing situation is affecting a right or privilege of the assembly or of an individual member (for example, noise, inadequate ventilation, introduction of a confidential subject... in the presence of guests, etc.), a member can Raise a Question of Privilege (19), which permits him to interrupt pending business to state an urgent request or motion. If the matter is not simple enough to be taken care of informally, the chair then makes a ruling as to whether it is admitted as a question of privilege and whether it requires consideration before the pending business is resumed.

3) A short intermission in a meeting, even while business is pending, can be proposed by moving to Recess (20) for a specified length of time.

4) A member can propose to close the meeting entirely by moving to Adjourn (21). This motion can be made and the assembly can adjourn even while business is pending, provided that the time for the next meeting is established by a rule of the society or has been set by the assembly. (In such a case, the pending business and any other business that is unfinished at the time of adjournment, as well as any questions that have been temporarily disposed of, either fall to the ground or are carried over to the next meeting, depending on the circumstances; see 21:7.)

5) Under certain conditions while business is pending, the assembly—before adjourning or postponing the pending business—may wish to fix a date and hour, and sometimes the place, for another meeting, or (in an established society) for another meeting before the next regular meeting. In cases of this kind, the motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn (22) can be made—even while a matter is pending—unless another meeting is already scheduled for later within the same session. This is the highest-ranking of all motions.

6:13 Incidental Main Motions Corresponding to Privileged Motions. For the motions to Recess, to Adjourn, and to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn, there are corresponding incidental main motions of the same names (10:4–5). Questions of privilege can also be brought up while no motion is pending, and at such times they are moved just as any main motion.

6:14 (Each of the privileged motions is fully discussed in 18–22.)
Incidental Motions

6:15 Characteristics of Incidental Motions as a Class. Incidental motions relate, in different ways, to the pending business or to business otherwise at hand—some of them with varying degrees of resemblance to subsidiary motions, but none of them possessing all five of the characteristics listed in 6:6. As a class, incidental motions deal with questions of procedure arising out of: (1) commonly, another pending motion; but also (2) sometimes, another motion or item of business

a) that it is desired to introduce,
b) that has been made but has not yet been stated by the chair, or
c) that has just been pending.

An incidental motion is said to be incidental to the other motion or matter out of which it arises. With but few exceptions, incidental motions are related to the main question in such a way that they must be decided immediately, before business can proceed. Most incidental motions are undebatable.

6:16 Each of the incidental motions is applicable only in its own type of special circumstance—which may be a particular characteristic present in the motion to which it is incidental, or a particular point in time or possible occurrence during the assembly’s involvement with the other motion or matter. This is an important respect in which incidental motions differ from subsidiary motions, since subsidiary motions—in principle and with certain qualifications already noted (6:6)—are applicable to any main motion over the entire time that it is pending.

6:17 Listing of Individual Incidental Motions. The order in which the incidental motions are listed below, unlike that in which the subsidiary and privileged motions are presented above, has no relation to what other motions they may take precedence over or yield to (see discussion beginning in 6:18). The incidental motions arise as follows:

1) Although the presiding officer has the responsibility of enforcing the rules, any member who believes he has noticed a case where the chair is failing to do so can, at the time the breach occurs, call attention to it by making a Point of Order (23); the effect is to require the chair to make a ruling on the question involved.

2) Although the duty of ruling on all questions of parliamentary procedure affecting the assembly’s proceedings rests with the chair, any two members, by moving and seconding an Appeal (24) immediately after the chair has made such a ruling, can require him to submit the matter to a vote of the assembly.

3) When it is desired that the assembly take up a question or do something that would be in violation of a rule that applies, it can be proposed in some cases to Suspend the Rules (25) to permit accomplishment of the desired purpose.

4) If an original main motion has been made and a member believes that it would do harm for the motion even to be discussed in the meeting, he can raise an Objection to the Consideration of the Question (26), provided he does so before debate has begun or any subsidiary motion (other than a motion to Lay on the Table) has been stated; the assembly then votes on whether the main motion shall be considered (and if there is a two-thirds vote against consideration, the motion is dropped).

5) If a pending main motion (or a pending amendment) contains two or more parts capable of standing as separate questions, the assembly can vote to treat each part accordingly in succession; such a course is proposed by the motion for Division of a Question (27).

6) If the main motion is in the form of a resolution or document containing several paragraphs or sections which (although not separate questions) could be most efficiently handled by opening each paragraph or section to amendment one at a time (before the whole is finally voted on), such a procedure can be proposed by the motion for Consideration by Paragraph or Seriatim (28).

7) If a member doubts the accuracy of the chair’s announcement of the result of a voice vote (or even a vote by show of hands)—or doubts that a representative number of persons voted—he can demand a Division of the Assembly (29); a single member thus has the power to require a standing vote, but not to order a count, which only the chair or the assembly can do (see next item).

8) A member can move that a vote be taken (a) by ballot, (b) by roll call, or (c) by a counted standing vote, especially if a division of the assembly has appeared inconclusive and the chair neglects to order a count. This grouping also includes a motion (d) that the polls be closed or reopened in a ballot vote. All these motions are grouped under the heading of Motions Relating to Methods of Voting and the Polls (30).

9) If the bylaws or rules of the organization do not prescribe how nominations are to be made, and if the assembly has taken no action to do so prior to an election, any member can move while the election is pending (a) to specify one of various methods by which the candidates shall be nominated; or, if the need arises, (b) to close nominations, or (c) to reopen them; these are the Motions Relating to Nominations (31).

10) A member may Request to Be Excused from a Duty (32) if he wishes to be relieved from an obligation imposed upon him by the bylaws or by virtue of some position or office he
11) There are several other types of Requests and Inquiries (33) which a member can make in connection with business that someone desires to introduce, or which is pending or has just been pending. These include:
   a) Parliamentary Inquiry (a request for the chair’s opinion on a matter of parliamentary procedure as it relates to the business at hand—not involving a ruling).
   b) Request for Information or, as it is also called, Point of Information (an inquiry as to facts affecting the business at hand—directed to the chair or, through the chair, to a member).
   c) Request for Permission (or Leave) to Withdraw or Modify a Motion (after it has been stated by the chair).
   d) Request to Read Papers.
   e) Request for Any Other Privilege.
   The first two types of inquiry are responded to by the chair, or by a member at the direction of the chair; the other requests can be granted only by the assembly.

6:18 Conditions Under Which Incidental Motions Take Precedence over, or Yield to, Other Motions. Incidental motions take precedence over other motions according to the following principle: An incidental motion is in order only when it is legitimately incidental to another pending motion, or when it is legitimately incidental in some other way to business at hand (see 6:15); it then takes precedence over any other motions that are pending. Each incidental motion has its own rules that determine the conditions under which it is incidental—that is, the motions or situations to which it can be applied, and the circumstances or stage of consideration at which this can be done. Usually, but not always, an incidental motion is legitimately incidental to another pending motion only while the other motion is immediately pending.

6:19 As stated above, incidental motions have no rank among themselves and cannot be assigned positions within the order of precedence of motions, although they have individual relationships to that order which are described in the sections dealing with these motions (23–33). With the exception of a Division of the Assembly, incidental motions yield to the privileged motions and generally yield to the motion to Lay on the Table, unless the incidental motion arose out of a motion of higher rank than the one to which it would otherwise yield (see also second paragraph below). By the principle stated in the preceding paragraph, an incidental motion yields to any motion legitimately incidental to itself—as all motions do. For example, a motion for a Division of a Question, or one to Suspend the Rules, would yield to a Point of Order arising in connection with itself.

6:20 Whenever it is stated in this book that “incidental motions” or “all incidental motions” take precedence over a certain motion, or that a certain motion yields to “all applicable incidental motions,” it must be understood that the incidental motions referred to are only those that are legitimately incidental at the time they are made. For example, “Incidental motions always take precedence over the main motion”; but an Objection to the Consideration of a Question is legitimate only against an original main motion, and the objection is no longer in order after consideration of the question has begun—even though an original main motion is immediately pending (26). Similarly, “A Point of Order takes precedence over any pending question (of no matter how high a rank) out of which it arises”—but it does so only at the time the breach of order occurs.

6:21 In connection with motions that can be incidental to motions of any rank (such as Point of Order, Appeal, Suspend the Rules, Motions Relating to Voting, and certain types of Requests and Inquiries), whenever it is stated that one of these motions yields to “all motions” above a certain rank, the incidental motion nevertheless does not yield to any motion ranking below the one out of which it arises. For example, “A Point of Order yields to the motion to Lay on the Table, and to all privileged motions.” This statement is true without qualification if the point of order is in connection with a motion ranking lower than Lay on the Table (that is, a main motion or any other subsidiary motion); but a point of order arising from a motion to Recess would yield only to the two higher-ranking privileged motions—to Adjourn and to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn.

6:22 While a series consisting of a main motion and a number of subsidiary or privileged motions is being considered, it is possible for some of the incidental motions—such as a Point of Order, an Appeal, or a Division of the Assembly—to arise more than once, in connection with different motions in the series.

6:23 Incidental Main Motions Corresponding to Incidental Motions. Counterparts of some of the incidental motions may occur as incidental main motions. For example, a standing rule (2) can be suspended for the duration of a session (8); and a motion for such a suspension, made when no business is pending, is an incidental main motion. Similarly, a motion prescribing how nominations shall be made is an incidental main motion if it is moved while no election is pending.

6:24 (Each of the incidental motions is fully discussed in 23–33.)
Motions That Bring a Question Again Before the Assembly

6:25 Basis of This Classification. Four motions are grouped in this book as motions that bring a question again before the assembly since, either by their adoption or by their introduction, they allow the assembly to consider again the merits of a question that has previously been disposed of in some way. All of the motions that bring a question again before the assembly are usually made—and, like main motions, three of them can only be made—while no business is pending. The existence of these motions as a separate category may be seen as related to the following principles of parliamentary law:

a) During the meeting or series of connected meetings (called a “session,” 8) in which the assembly has decided a question, the same or substantially the same question cannot be brought up again, except through special procedures.

b) While a question is temporarily disposed of (by any of several methods described in this and later chapters) but is not finally settled, no similar or conflicting motion whose adoption would restrict the assembly in acting on the first question can be introduced.

c) To change what the assembly has adopted requires something more (in the way of a vote or previous notice to the members) than was necessary to adopt it in the first place.

The motions that bring a question again before the assembly enable the assembly, without violating the above principles, to reopen a completed question during the same session, or to take up one that has been temporarily disposed of, or to change something previously adopted and still in force.

6:26 Listing of Individual Motions in This Class. The order in which these motions are listed below has no relation to the order of precedence of motions. The first three of these motions are either main motions or have the same low rank as main motions, and the fourth has special characteristics relating to rank (see 6:27(5), 37:9(1)). The motions that bring a question again before the assembly, briefly described by function, are as follows:

1) If it is desired to resume consideration of a main motion (along with any series of motions that may be adhering to it —see 10:35) which lies on the table, it can be proposed by means of the motion to Take from the Table (34) that the motion or series become pending again. (A main motion is said to lie on the table if it was laid on the table earlier in the present session, or in the last previous session with no more than a quarterly time interval having intervened (see 9:7), and it has not yet been finally disposed of.)

2) If it is desired to cancel or countermand an entire main motion, resolution, order, or rule that has been adopted and that has continuing force and effect, such action can be proposed by means of the motion to Rescind (or Repeal, or Annul, 35); and by another form of the same parliamentary motion—that is, the motion to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35)—it can be proposed to modify the wording or text previously adopted, or to substitute a different version.

3) If a question has been referred, or a task has been assigned, to a committee that has not yet made its final report, and it is desired to take the matter out of the committee’s hands, either so that the assembly itself can consider or act upon it or so that it can be dropped, such action can be proposed by means of the motion to Discharge
a Committee (36).

4) If, in the same session that a motion has been voted on but no later than the same day or the next day on which a business meeting is held, new information or a changed situation makes it appear that a different result might reflect the true will of the assembly, a member who voted with the prevailing side can, by moving to Reconsider (37) the vote, propose that the question come before the assembly again as if it had not previously been voted on.

6:27 Relationships Among Motions in This Class. The motions that bring a question again before the assembly have a number of differences among themselves, and they may be variously subgrouped depending on the point of view, as follows:

1) The motions to Take from the Table and to Reconsider—and the motion to Discharge a Committee, in certain applications—are classed only with the motions that bring a question again before the assembly and cannot be satisfactorily placed in any other class. The motion that takes the form either to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted—and the motion to Discharge a Committee, in its other applications—are incidental main motions having special characteristics, as explained in the next item below.

2) The motion to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted is an incidental main motion because (a) it brings business before the assembly by its introduction and (b) when it is voted on, business thereby ceases to be pending. By contrast, two other motions in this class—Take from the Table and Reconsider (as applied to a main motion)—do not bring a question again before the assembly by their introduction, but by their adoption, which automatically causes a main question to become pending. The remaining motion, Discharge a Committee, either shares this same characteristic with the motions to Take from the Table and to Reconsider, or else it is in effect a particular case of the incidental main motion to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted—depending on whether the matter to be taken out of the committee’s hands was in the form of a pending motion referred by means of the subsidiary motion to Commit, or was a task assigned to the committee by means of a main motion (see 13:6, 36:10–11).

3) From another point of view, the motion to Discharge a Committee—even when applied to cause a previously referred motion to become pending again—is similar to the motion to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted in regard to the rules governing its use. Both of these motions have special requirements for their adoption—that is, both require either notice or more than a majority vote (see 35:2(7), 36:4(7)).

4) Again, the motion to Discharge a Committee (as applied to a motion that was referred) and the motion to Take from the Table have the common feature of proposing that the assembly take up a matter still “within its control” (see 9:7–11, 38:8) that was temporarily disposed of. On the other hand, the motion to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted and the motion to Reconsider are both applied to a motion that has been finally voted on. However, the latter motions differ from each other in that the motion to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted can be applied only to a motion on which the vote was affirmative, and it proposes a specified change in a decision that may have been made at any time previously. By contrast, the motion to Reconsider can, with certain exceptions, be applied to a vote that was either affirmative or negative, within a limited time after that vote, and it proposes no specific change in a decision but simply proposes that the original question be reopened.
5) The motion to Reconsider can be applied to several of the subsidiary, privileged, or incidental motions; and in certain cases when so applied, it assumes the character of a secondary motion—that is, a motion that can be made and considered while other motions are pending. It is the only one of the four motions in this class that can be applied to a secondary motion alone—that is, without also being applied to a related main motion. Because of the time limit on making the motion to Reconsider, the making of this motion takes precedence over all others (even the highest-ranking motion in the regular order of precedence of motions, Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn); but its consideration has only the rank of the motion proposed to be reconsidered. The motion to Reconsider thus cannot always be taken up at the time it is made. This feature of the motion is one of its unique characteristics.

6:28 (Each of the motions that bring a question again before the assembly is fully discussed in 34–37.)
§7. STANDARD DESCRIPTIVE CHARACTERISTICS OF MOTIONS

7:1 Many of the most important rules governing the use of the individual motions described in this chapter reduce to eight standard descriptive characteristics. In addition to containing basic rules of procedure for each motion, these characteristics serve as points of comparison showing how the motion resembles or differs from a main motion.

7:2 The standard descriptive characteristics of a motion are the following:

1. Over what motions, if any, it takes precedence (that is, what motions can be pending without causing this motion to be out of order); also, to what motions it yields (that is, what motions can be made and considered while this motion is pending). (The main motion, ranking lowest, takes precedence over no other motion and yields to all subsidiary motions, all privileged motions, and all applicable incidental motions.)

2. To what motions or to what type of situation it is applicable; also, what motions, particularly subsidiary motions, are applicable to it, if any. (The main motion is applicable to no other motion; and all subsidiary motions, and certain incidental motions under various conditions, are applicable to it.)

3. Whether it is in order when another has the floor. (A main motion is not.)

4. Whether it requires a second. (A main motion does. Whenever it is stated in this book that a certain motion “must” be seconded, or “requires” a second, the precise meaning is as explained in 4:9–14, and the requirement does not apply when the motion is made by direction of a board or committee.)

5. Whether it is debatable—that is, whether debate on its merits is permitted while it is immediately pending. (A main motion is.)

6. Whether it is amendable. (A main motion is.)

7. What vote is required for its adoption. (A main motion requires a majority vote, except as noted in 10:8(7).)

8. Whether it can be reconsidered—that is, whether a motion to Reconsider (37) can be applied to the vote taken on it. (A main motion can be reconsidered.)

7:3 The standard descriptive characteristics of the main motion are more fully stated in 10, and those of the other parliamentary motions are given in 11–37. In addition, key facts with regard to Standard Descriptive Characteristics 1 and 2 are shown in Chart I, pages t3–t5, and with regard to Standard Descriptive Characteristics 3 through 8 are shown in Chart II, pages t6–t33.

7:4 Additional background for the detailed treatment of the motions in 10–37 is provided by the discussion of the topics “meeting” and “session” in 8 and 9.

2. Pronounced pree-SEED-n's.

3. The word yield as used in this sense has no connection with yielding the floor as explained in 3:31.

4. See explanation in 7; rules governing the individual motions, 11–37; Table of Rules Relating to Motions, pages t6–t33; and lists, pages t46–t47.

5. The distinction between the main and the privileged motions to adjourn is different from any other case where an incidental main motion corresponds to a secondary motion of the same name, since a motion “to adjourn” can under certain conditions be a privileged motion rather than an incidental main motion even if made when no question is pending (see 21).

MEETING AND SESSION

§8. MEETING, SESSION, RECESS, ADJOURNMENT

Explanation of Terms

8:1 In an assembly, as mentioned above in 1:3, each event of the members’ being assembled to transact business constitutes a separate meeting; but the complete unit of engagement in proceedings by the assembly is a session, which (in the general case covering all types of assemblies) consists of one or more connected meetings. The term session is a fundamental concept entering into many important parliamentary rules.

8:2 In parliamentary law and as understood in this book, the terms defined below have distinct meanings:

1) A meeting of an assembly is a single official gathering of its members in one room or area to transact business for a length of time during which there is no cessation of proceedings and the members do not separate, unless for a short recess, as defined below. (For modification of the “one-room-or-area” requirement when the bylaws authorize electronic meetings, see 9:30–36.) Depending on the business to be transacted, a meeting may last from a few minutes to several hours.

2) A session of an assembly, unless otherwise defined by the bylaws or governing rules of the particular organization or body, is a meeting or series of connected meetings devoted to a single order of business, program, agenda, or announced purpose, in which—when there is more than one meeting—each succeeding meeting is scheduled with a view to continuing business at the point where it was left off at the previous meeting (see also discussion of distinction between recess and adjournment, 8:7).

3) A recess, strictly speaking, is a short intermission or break within a meeting that does not end the meeting or destroy its continuity as a single gathering, and after which proceedings are immediately resumed at the point where they were interrupted. During the recess, members may leave the hall or room in which the meeting is being held, but they are expected to remain nearby. A recess frequently has a purpose connected with the business of the meeting itself—such as to count ballots, to permit consultation among members, or the like. (For the motion to Recess, see 20.)

4) A meeting is said to stand at ease if the chair, without objection, simply permits a brief pause, without a declaration of recess. In such a case there is technically no interruption of the meeting, and members remain in their places. Quiet conversation among neighboring members may take place, but it must cease immediately when the chair declares the meeting again in order or any member objects to continuing to stand at ease.

5) An adjournment (that is, the act of the assembly’s adjourning) terminates a meeting; it may also end the session. If another meeting to continue the same business or order of business has been set for a definite time (or to be “at the call of the chair”), the adjournment does not end the session. (See also 9:17–19 for the use of the word adjournment as applied to an adjourned meeting; for the motion to Adjourn see 21.)

6) The term adjournment sine die¹ (or adjournment without day) usually refers to the close of a session of several meetings: (a) where the adjournment dissolves the assembly—as in a series of mass meetings or in an annual or biennial convention for which the delegates are separately chosen for each convention; or (b) where, unless called into special session, the body will not be convened again until a time prescribed by the bylaws or constitution—as in the case of a session of a legislature. In cases where the words sine die are applicable, they may be, but are not always, mentioned in the motion to adjourn or the chair’s declaration of the adjournment.
Interrelation of the Concepts

8:3 Number of Meetings in a Session. The length of a session or the number of meetings included within it varies depending on the type of assembly.

8:4 In a permanent society whose bylaws provide for regular weekly, monthly, or quarterly meetings that go through an established order of business in a single afternoon or evening, each “meeting” of this kind normally completes a separate session—unless the assembly at such a meeting schedules an adjourned meeting as explained in 9:17–19. This rule is the common parliamentary law and holds except where the bylaws provide otherwise. Although any society has the right to define, in its bylaws, what shall constitute a session of the organization, it is usually unwise in ordinary societies to adopt a rule making regular sessions last over a long period of time. Such a rule would make it possible for the hands of the organization to be tied during that time, since the same question cannot be brought up again during the same session after it is too late to reconsider (37) a vote that has finally disposed of a motion without adopting it (that is, a vote that has rejected or indefinitely postponed it or has sustained an objection to its consideration; see 11, 26).

8:5 In the case of a state or national organization that holds annual or biennial conventions, each convention constitutes a session of the organization—having one agenda or program—which may be broken up into separate meetings in the morning, afternoon, and evening, or into many meetings held over several days. In Congress a session may comprise hundreds of almost daily meetings, sometimes continuing for nearly a year.

Speech. Because of the fact that a meeting and a session usually coincide in ordinary local societies or branches, these two terms often tend to become confused or used interchangeably in everyday speech. Whenever either word is used, the context should be noted in the light of the explanations in this section. A similar situation exists regarding the terms recess, adjournment, and adjournment sine die. It is common, especially in conventions, to hear the word recess also applied to a longer break that does terminate a meeting and that consequently should be understood as an adjournment, as in “to recess until tomorrow.” On the other hand, assemblies sometimes “adjourn” or provide in the program or agenda for an “adjournment” when only a short recess is intended. The use of the word recess to describe the interval between regular sessions of an organization or assembly, as in “the summer recess of Congress,” is a colloquialism that has no relationship to the parliamentary meaning of the term.

8:7 Comparative Effects of Recess and Adjournment Within a Session. The distinction between recess and adjournment may in some cases become thin so that it must be judged in the individual context. For example, according to the definitions given above, a break in the proceedings of a convention for lunch may be more in the nature of a recess, or of an adjournment, depending on the time and the extent of dispersion of the members that is required for them to be served. From the viewpoint of the effect of a recess or an adjournment on the procedure the next time the assembly is called to order, the difference is that at the conclusion of a recess there never are any “opening” proceedings, but business is always immediately resumed where it was left off, just as if there had been no recess. At the beginning of any meeting (after the first meeting in a session), on the other hand, the resumption of business at the point where it was left off may be, but is not necessarily, preceded by brief opening ceremonies and the reading of minutes. Normally in a session lasting several days, the minutes are read at the beginning of the first meeting each day; and the beginning of a later meeting the same day may be virtually indistinguishable from the conclusion of a recess.\footnote{2}

8:8 How Meetings to Continue a Session Are Scheduled. When a meeting adjourns without ending the session, this necessarily means that the time for another meeting to continue the same business or order of business has already been set (or that provision has been made for such a meeting to be held “at the call of the chair”). The time or provision for this next meeting of the session may have been established by one of the following methods (which are listed in order of frequency of occurrence): (a) through a program adopted at the beginning of a convention; (b) by the adoption in the present meeting of a motion (main or privileged, depending on when it is moved) to fix the time to which to adjourn; or (c) by a specification in the motion to adjourn, if that motion was made as a main motion while no other question was pending.

8:9 Ordinary Practice in Adjourning. In ordinary practice a meeting is closed by adopting a motion simply “to adjourn”; or under certain conditions the chair can declare the adjournment without a motion, as explained in \ref{21:14–15}. The society meets again at the time provided in its bylaws or other rules, or as already established by the adoption of an earlier motion. If it does not expect to convene until the next “regular meeting” prescribed by rule or bylaw, the chair declares that the meeting “is adjourned,” and such an adjournment closes the session. On the other hand, if another meeting in the same session has been scheduled by any of the methods listed in the preceding paragraph, the chair announces the time as he declares the adjournment, saying, for example, that the “meeting is adjourned until 4 P.M. tomorrow.”

8:10 In the event of fire, riot, or other extreme emergency, if the chair believes taking time for a vote on adjourning would be dangerous to those present, he should declare the meeting adjourned—to a suitable time and place for an adjourned meeting (if he is able), or to meet at the call of the chair.
Significance of Session

8:11 The principal significance of the session as a complete unit of an assembly’s engagement in proceedings lies in the freedom of each new session, as contrasted with the limitations placed upon a session in progress by decisions it has made. Some of the consequences of this characteristic of the session are described in the following paragraphs.

8:12 Freedom of Each New Session. As a general rule, one session cannot place a question beyond the reach of a majority at a later session except through the process of adopting a special rule of order or an amendment to the bylaws (either of which requires more than a majority vote; see immediately below). It is improper, for example, to postpone anything beyond the next regular session—which would be an attempt to prevent that session from considering the question. The principle stated applies in qualified form to cases in which a majority rescinds or amends something adopted at an earlier session, or discharges a committee from further consideration of a question referred to it at an earlier session—which a majority can do provided that previous notice was given. (See 35:2(7) and 36:4(7) for the vote required for these actions without previous notice.)

8:13 Relation of a Session’s Freedom to the Rules of an Organization. The application of the same principle to the case of standing rules (which, as the term is understood in this book, do not deal with parliamentary procedure; see 2) is as follows: Although a standing rule can be adopted by a majority vote at any session and continues in force until it is rescinded or amended, such a rule does not interfere materially with the freedom of a later session, since it can be suspended for the duration of any session (but not for longer) by a majority vote.

8:14  Bylaws, on the other hand—and special rules of order, which do deal with parliamentary procedure—contain the provisions that are expected to have stability from session to session, and to represent the judgment of the whole society as distinguished from the members voting at any particular session. These rules therefore require both previous notice and a two-thirds vote for amendment (with a vote of a majority of the entire membership as an allowable alternative); and rules of order require a two-thirds vote for suspension, while bylaws normally cannot be suspended (see 2, 25).

8:15 Relation of a Session’s Freedom to the Renewability of Motions. The conditions under which a motion can be renewed—that is, can be introduced as if new after having previously been made and disposed of without adoption—are closely related to the freedom of each new session, and to the distinction between a meeting and a session. As stated in 38 and in 8:4, the same or substantially the same question cannot be brought up a second time during the same session except by means of the parliamentary motions that bring a question again before the assembly. At any later session, on the other hand, any motion that is still applicable can normally be renewed unless it has come over from the previous session (by one of the five processes mentioned in 9:7–11 under Regular Meeting, below) as not finally disposed of (see also 38, where the renewal of motions is fully discussed).

8:16 Relation of a Session’s Freedom to Limitation on Appointment as Chairman Pro Tem. If the assembly is to elect a chairman pro tem to hold office beyond the current session (in the event of illness or disability of both the regular presiding officer and his alternate), notice must be given at the preceding meeting or in the call of the meeting that elects him.
One session cannot interfere with the freedom of each new session to choose its own chairman pro tem except by an election held with previous notice (10:44–51).
§9. PARTICULAR TYPES OF BUSINESS MEETINGS

Regular Meeting

9:1 The term regular meeting (or stated meeting) refers to the periodic business meeting of a permanent society, local branch, or board, held at weekly, monthly, quarterly, or similar intervals, for which the day (as, “the first Tuesday of each month”) should be prescribed by the bylaws and the hour and place should be fixed by a standing rule.

9:2 If, instead, an organization follows the practice of scheduling the day, hour, or place of its regular meetings by resolution, notice (also referred to as the call of the meeting) must be sent to all members a reasonable time in advance of each regular meeting.

9:3 In any organization, notice must be sent a reasonable time in advance of each regular meeting that is separated by more than a quarterly time interval (see 9:7 below) from the previous regular meeting. Notice must also be sent a reasonable time in advance of a convention of delegates. In many organizations, a call is sent to all members in advance of each meeting.

9:4 In all such cases, to avoid uncertainty about what period in advance is reasonable, the specific number of days’ notice required—which will depend on the conditions of the particular assembly and which each organization must determine for itself—should be prescribed in the bylaws (56:34). Unless otherwise provided in the bylaws, the number of days is computed by counting all calendar days (including holidays and weekends), excluding the day of the meeting but including the day the notice is sent.
9:5 When notice is required to be sent, unless a different standard is specified that requirement is met if written notice is sent to each member either:

a) by postal mail to the member’s last known address; or
b) by a form of electronic communication, such as e-mail or fax, by which the member has agreed to receive notice.

9:6 Each regular meeting normally completes a separate session, as explained in 8:4 (see Adjourned Meeting, 9:17–19 below, however). Some societies have frequent meetings for social or cultural purposes at which business may be transacted, and also hold a session every month or quarter especially for business. In such societies, the term regular meeting applies particularly to the regular business session.

9:7 Important rules relating to the continuance of a question from one session to the next depend on whether no more than a quarterly time interval intervenes between the two sessions. In this book, it is understood that no more than a quarterly time interval intervenes between two sessions if the second session begins at any time during or before the third calendar month after the calendar month in which the first session ends. For example, with reference to a session held in January, no more than a quarterly time interval has elapsed since the previous session if that session ended on or after October 1st of the preceding calendar year; and no more than a quarterly time interval will elapse before the next session if that session will begin on or before April 30th of the current year.

9:8 If two business sessions are separated by more than a quarterly time interval—or if the term of a specified portion of the membership expires before the start of the later session (as may happen in an elected legislative assembly or in a board)—then business can go over from the earlier session to the later one only by means of referral to a committee (13).
If two consecutive regular business sessions are separated by no more than a quarterly time interval, then—provided that there is no specified portion of the membership whose term expires before the start of the later session—there are several ways in which business can go over from the earlier session to the later one:³

1) by being postponed to, or otherwise set as a general or special order for, the later session (see 14, 41);
2) by being laid on the table (17) at the earlier session and not taken from the table (34) before that session adjourns;
3) by going over to the later session as unfinished business or as an unfinished special order (see 21:7(b), 41:18–23);
4) by being the subject of a motion to Reconsider (37) that is not finally disposed of at the earlier session; and
5) by being referred to a committee (13) that can report at the later session.

The only way for business to be carried over directly from one session to some later regular session beyond the next regular business session is by being referred to a committee that will report at that later session.

When a question is carried over from one session to another by any of the above processes, it remains within the control of the assembly as a question that has been temporarily, but not finally, disposed of.

Any business that falls within the objects of the society as defined in its bylaws (or, in the case of a board, any business within the authority of the board) can be transacted at any regular meeting (provided that the parliamentary rules relating to action already taken, or to matters not finally disposed of and remaining within the control of the assembly, are complied with in cases where they apply; compare 10:26–27; see also 35 and 38).
Special Meeting

9:13 A special meeting (or called meeting) is a separate session of a society held at a time different from that of any regular meeting, and convened only to consider one or more items of business specified in the call of the meeting. Notice of the time, place, and purpose of the meeting, clearly and specifically describing the subject matter of the motions or items of business to be brought up, must be sent to all members a reasonable number of days in advance. The reason for special meetings is to deal with matters that may arise between regular meetings and that require action by the society before the next regular meeting, or to dedicate an entire session to one or more particular matters.\(^4\) As in the case of a regular meeting, the session of a special meeting in an ordinary society is normally concluded in a single meeting, unless the assembly at the special meeting schedules an adjourned meeting (see below).

9:14 Special meetings can properly be called only (a) as authorized in the bylaws (see \[56:36\]); or (b) when authorized by the assembly itself, as part of formal disciplinary procedures, for purposes of conducting a trial and determining a punishment (see \[63:21n9\]). A section of the bylaws that authorizes the calling of special meetings should prescribe:

1) by whom such a meeting is to be called—which provision is usually in the form of a statement that the president (or, in large organizations, the president with the approval of the board) can call a special meeting, and that he shall call a special meeting at the written request of a specific number of members; and

2) the number of days’ notice required. The number of days is computed in the same manner as for regular meetings (see
The president directs the secretary to send the notice of the special meeting to all members at the society’s expense in compliance with the bylaws no later than the required number of days in advance, making sure that it contains all the necessary information.

The only business that can be transacted at a special meeting is that which has been specified in the call of the meeting. This rule, however, does not preclude the consideration of privileged motions, or of any subsidiary, incidental, or other motions that may arise in connection with the transaction of such business or the conduct of the meeting. If, at a special meeting, action is taken relating to business not mentioned in the call, that action, to become valid, must be ratified (see 10:54–57) by the organization at a regular meeting (or at another special meeting properly called for that purpose).

The requirement that business transacted at a special meeting be specified in the call should not be confused with a requirement that previous notice of a motion be given. Although the call of a special meeting must state the purpose of the meeting, it need not give the exact content of individual motions that will be considered. When a main motion related to business specified in the call of a special meeting is pending, it is as fully open to germane amendment as if it had been moved at a regular meeting.
Adjourned Meeting

9:17 An adjourned meeting is a meeting in continuation of the session of the immediately preceding regular or special meeting. The name adjourned meeting means that the meeting is scheduled for a particular time (and place, if it is not otherwise established) by the assembly’s “adjourning to” or “adjourning until” that time and place. If a regular meeting or a special meeting is unable to complete its work, an adjourned meeting can be scheduled for later the same day or some other convenient time before the next regular meeting, by the adoption (as applicable) of a main or a privileged motion to fix the time to which to adjourn, or a main motion to adjourn until the specified time (see 21, 22). In such a case, the adjourned meeting is sometimes spoken of as “an adjournment of” the regular or special meeting. This usage should not be confused with the act of adjourning.

9:18 When common expressions such as “regular [or “stated”] meeting,” “special [or “called”] meeting,” and “annual meeting” (see below) are used in the bylaws, rules, or resolutions adopted by an organization, the word meeting is understood to mean session in the parliamentary sense, and therefore covers all adjourned meetings.

9:19 An adjourned meeting takes up its work at the point where it was interrupted in the order of business or in the consideration of the question that was postponed to the adjourned meeting, except that the minutes of the preceding meeting are first read.
Annual Meeting

9:20  The term annual meeting is used in two senses.
9:21  Certain types of societies may hold only one business meeting of the general membership each year, perhaps leaving the management of the organization’s affairs in the meantime to a board. Such a meeting is then the annual meeting of the society.
9:22  In local organizations that hold regular business meetings throughout the year, however, the bylaws may provide that one of these regular meetings held at a specified time each year shall be known as the annual meeting. The only difference between this kind of annual meeting and the other regular meetings is that the annual reports of officers and standing committees, the election of officers, and any other items of business that the bylaws may prescribe for the annual meeting are in order, besides the ordinary business that may come up. The minutes of the previous regular meeting are read and approved as usual at the annual meeting, and the minutes of the annual meeting are read and approved at the next regular meeting. Minutes of one annual meeting should not be held for action until the next one a year later.
9:23  Business that is required to be attended to “at the annual meeting” can be taken up at any time (when it is in order) during the session of the annual meeting, or, in other words, either at that meeting as originally convened or at any adjournment of it. If such an item of business has actually been taken up as required during the session of the annual meeting, it may also go over to a later session by any of the means by which a matter may be temporarily, but not finally, disposed of (9:8–11). This is usually unwise, however, unless completing the item of business during the session proves impossible or impractical. (See also 14:12.) If the assembly fails to take up any such item of business as required before final adjournment of the annual meeting, and the next regular meeting is held within a quarterly time interval, the business goes over to that meeting as unfinished business or an unfinished special order (cf. 41:20).
Executive Session

9:24 An executive session in general parliamentary usage has come to mean any meeting of a deliberative assembly, or a portion of a meeting, at which the proceedings are secret. This term originally referred to the consideration of executive business—that is, presidential nominations to appointive offices, and treaties—behind closed doors in the United States Senate. The practice of organizations operating under the lodge system is equivalent to holding all regular meetings in executive session. In any society, certain matters relating to discipline (61, 63), such as trials, must be handled only in executive session. A meeting enters into executive session only when required by rule or established custom, or upon the adoption of a motion to do so. A motion to go into (or out of) executive session is a question of privilege (19), and is adopted by a majority vote.

9:25 Attendance at an Executive Session or Other Closed Session. Whenever a meeting is being held in executive session, only members of the body that is meeting, special invitees, and such employees or staff members as the body or its rules may determine to be necessary are allowed to remain in the hall. Thus, in the case of a board or committee meeting being held in executive session, all persons—whether or not they are members of the organization—who are not members of the board or committee (and who are not otherwise specifically invited or entitled to attend) are excluded from the meeting. When it is desired to similarly restrict attendance at a particular meeting without imposing any obligation of secrecy (or to remove a previously imposed restriction on attendance), this may also be done by majority vote (see also 61:6–7).
9:26 Rules Relating to the Secrecy of an Executive Session.
The general rule is that anything that occurs in executive session may not be divulged to nonmembers (except any entitled to attend). However, action taken, as distinct from that which was said in debate, may be divulged to the extent—and only to the extent—necessary to carry it out. For example, if during executive session a member is expelled or an officer is removed from office, that fact may be disclosed to the extent described in 63:3. If the assembly wishes to further lift the secrecy of action taken in an executive session, it may adopt a motion to do so, which is a motion to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35). In making or debating such a motion, the members must be careful, if the assembly is not in executive session, to preserve the existing secrecy.

9:27 A member of a society can be punished under disciplinary procedure if he violates the secrecy of an executive session. Anyone else permitted to be present is honor-bound not to divulge anything that occurred. Reading and approval of the minutes of an executive session must take place only in executive session, unless that which would be reported in the minutes is not secret. When the minutes of an executive session must be considered for approval at an executive session held solely for that purpose, the brief minutes of the latter meeting are, or are assumed to be, approved by that meeting. (For additional rules regarding access to minutes and other records, including those kept by boards and committees, that are protected by the secrecy of an executive session, see 47:36 and 49:17–19.)
Public Session

9:28 A deliberative assembly or committee is normally entitled to determine whether nonmembers may attend or be excluded from its meetings (even when not in executive session). Many public and semipublic bodies, however, are governed by sunshine laws—that is, their meetings must be open to the public. Normally, such laws have no application to private, nongovernmental bodies.

9:29 In meetings of many public bodies, such as school boards, the public may attend. Similarly, in some private organizations such as church councils, parishioners may be permitted to attend. These attendees are not members of the meeting body and ordinarily have no right to participate. Some bodies, especially public ones, may invite nonmembers to express their views, but this is done under the control of the presiding officer subject to any relevant rules adopted by the body and subject to appeal by a member. Often, by rule or practice, time limits are placed on speakers and relevance is closely monitored.
Electronic Meetings

9:30 Extension of Parliamentary Law to Electronic Meetings. Except as authorized in the bylaws, the business of an organization or board can be validly transacted only at a regular or properly called meeting—that is, as defined in 8:2(1), a single official gathering in one room or area—of the assembly of its members at which a quorum is present.

9:31 Among some organizations, there is an increasing preference, especially in the case of a relatively small board or other assembly, to transact business at electronic meetings—that is, at meetings at which, rather than all participating members being physically present in one room or area as in traditional (or “face-to-face”) meetings, some or all of them communicate with the others through electronic means such as the Internet or by telephone. A group that holds such alternative meetings does not lose its character as a deliberative assembly (see 1:1) so long as the meetings provide, at a minimum, conditions of opportunity for simultaneous aural communication among all participating members equivalent to those of meetings held in one room or area. Under such conditions, an electronic meeting that is properly authorized in the bylaws is treated as though it were a meeting at which all the members who are participating are actually present.

9:32 If electronic meetings are to be authorized, it is advisable to adopt additional rules pertaining to their conduct (see Additional Rules for the Conduct of Electronic Meetings, below).

9:33 Types of Electronic Meetings. Various provisions for electronic meetings are possible, so that more than the minimum standard of an audioconference may be required.
Thus, if the bylaws provide for meeting by videoconference (but not merely by “teleconference” or “audioconference”), the meeting must be conducted by a technology that allows all participating members to see each other, as well as to hear each other, at the same time. Provision may also be made for the use of additional collaborative technology to aid in the conduct of a meeting.

9:34 It is important to understand that, regardless of the technology used, the opportunity for simultaneous aural communication is essential to the deliberative character of the meeting. Therefore, a group that attempts to conduct the deliberative process in writing (such as by postal mail, e-mail, “chat rooms,” or fax)—which is not recommended—does not constitute a deliberative assembly. Any such effort may achieve a consultative character, but it is foreign to the deliberative process as understood under parliamentary law.

9:35 Electronic Meetings in Committees. As in the case of a board or any assembly, committees that are expressly established by the bylaws can hold a valid electronic meeting only if authorized in the bylaws to do so. A committee that is not expressly established by the bylaws, however, may instead be authorized to hold electronic meetings by a standing rule of the parent body or organization, by the motion establishing the particular committee, or by instructions included in a motion referring an individual matter to the committee or issued subsequent to such a motion (see 13:8(d), 13:22).

9:36 Additional Rules for the Conduct of Electronic Meetings. If an organization authorizes its assembly, boards, or committees to hold electronic meetings, such a provision should indicate whether members who are not present in person have the right to participate by electronic means, or whether the body may choose to allow or disallow such participation; and, conversely, whether there is required to be a central location for members who wish to attend meetings in person. The notice of an electronic meeting must include an adequate description of how to participate in it (for example, the telephone number to call for a teleconference must be provided). Various additional rules (in the bylaws, special rules of order, standing rules, or instructions to a committee, as appropriate) may also be necessary or advisable regarding the conduct of electronic meetings, such as rules relating to:

• the type of equipment or computer software required for participation in meetings, whether the organization must provide such equipment or software, and contingencies for technical difficulties or malfunctions;
• methods for determining the presence of a quorum;
• the conditions under which a member may raise a point of order doubting the presence of a quorum, and the conditions under which the continued presence of a quorum is presumed if no such point of order is raised;
• methods for seeking recognition and obtaining the floor;
• means by which motions may be submitted in writing during a meeting; and
• methods for taking and verifying votes.

In addition, depending on the character of the organization, it may be advisable to adopt provisions for ensuring that nonmembers cannot participate in meetings (unless properly invited to do so), especially during any meeting or portion of a meeting held in executive session. (For examples of rules for electronic meetings designed to meet various needs, see the appendix Sample Rules for Electronic Meetings, pp. 635-649.)
Footnotes to Chapter IV

1. Pronounced SIGN-ee DYE-ee.

2. If the assembly recesses rather than adjourns, that may preclude certain motions to Suspend the Rules (see Renewal of the Motion, 25:6) and to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes (see 37:47(6)).

3. It should be noted that if some, but not all, of an organization’s regular business sessions are separated by no more than quarterly time intervals, it is only between meetings which are that close together that a question can go over from one session to the next by any means other than referral to a committee. If a society holds regular monthly business meetings from September through May, for example, but does not meet during the summer, a question can be postponed until the next meeting at any of the meetings from September through April, but such a question cannot be postponed at the May meeting until the September meeting.

4. When a special meeting intervenes between two regular meetings, that does not affect the rules governing whether and how business can go over from the earlier regular meeting to the later regular meeting.
§10. THE MAIN MOTION

10:1 As explained in 3–6, a main motion is a motion whose introduction brings business before the assembly; such a motion can be made only while no other motion is pending.
Distinction Between Original Main and Incidental Main Motions

10:2 The division of main motions into original and incidental main motions was mentioned in 6 and is discussed below.

10:3 An original main motion is a main motion that introduces a substantive question as a new subject. This is the motion most often used, and is the basic device by which a matter is presented to the assembly for possible action, as “… that the Club contribute $50 to the centennial celebration”; or “… that the Society go on record as favoring the Popular Run route for the proposed new beltway”; or “… to adopt the following resolution: ‘Resolved, That the Northridge Improvement Association oppose a municipal tax increase at this time.’” It may be more suitable for an original main motion to be made orally, or to be submitted in writing, depending on its length, complexity, or importance. (See Making a Motion, 4:4–5, where many of the statements apply especially to original main motions.)

10:4 An incidental main motion is a main motion that is incidental to or relates to the business of the assembly, or its past or future action. Such a motion is distinguished by the following characteristics:

1) It proposes an action specifically defined under parliamentary law and described by a particular parliamentary term. There are thus a definite number of incidental main motions somewhat as in the case of the secondary motions (subsidiary, privileged, and incidental) and the motions that bring a question again before the assembly.

2) It does not mark the beginning of a particular involvement of the assembly in a substantive matter, as an original main motion does. (Like all main motions, however, it can be made only when nothing is pending, and it brings business before the assembly.) Action that can be proposed by the incidental main motions may relate: (a) to further steps in dealing with a substantive matter in which the assembly’s involvement has begun earlier; or (b) to procedure, without direct reference to a particular substantive item of business.

10:5 An incidental main motion involving a subject already entered into might be a motion to adopt recommendations which a committee has prepared upon instructions (not relating to a referred motion), or a motion to ratify action taken at a meeting when no quorum was present. An example of an incidental main motion relating to procedure without reference to an item of business would be a motion to take a recess, made when no business is pending, or a motion to place a special limit on the length of speeches throughout a meeting. In each of the examples just mentioned, the italicized word—adopt, ratify, limit, recess—is the parliamentary term that describes the motion.

10:6 An incidental main motion is usually made orally. The chief difference in the rules governing original and incidental main motions is that an Objection to the Consideration of a Question (26) can be applied only to original main and not to incidental main motions. The reason is that, in the case of an incidental main motion dealing with a subject previously entered into, the involvement has already begun and it is too late to object; and in the case of an incidental main motion involving only procedure, an objection to its consideration has no legitimate purpose. In conventions, incidental main motions are not referred to a resolutions committee (59:67ff.).

10:7 Most of the incidental main motions closely correspond to secondary (subsidiary, privileged, or incidental) motions described by the same or similar names—as in the last two of the four examples above. (Compare the subsidiary motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, 15, and the privileged motion to Recess, 20.) Referring to the Table of Rules Relating to Motions on pages t6–t33, most of the motions listed as “main”—with the exception of No. 1 (original main motion)—are incidental main motions in their usual application. The motions to adopt and to ratify are briefly discussed at the end of this chapter.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

10:8 A main motion:

1. Takes precedence of nothing—that is, it cannot be moved when any other question is pending. It yields to all subsidiary, all privileged, and all applicable incidental motions; that is, any subsidiary or privileged motion, and any incidental motion that is applicable in the particular case at the particular time, can be moved while a main motion is pending.

2. Can be applied to no other motion. All subsidiary motions can be applied to it. If it is postponed to a certain time or laid on the table, it carries with it any subsidiary motions that may also be pending. If it is referred to a committee, the only subsidiary motions that it carries with it to the committee are pending amendments (so that a motion to Postpone Indefinitely, if pending, is dropped). An Objection to the Consideration of a Question can be applied only to an original main motion, not to an incidental main motion.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is debatable.

6. Is amendable.

7. Requires a majority vote, except:
   a) when the motion proposes an action for which the bylaws or special rules of order prescribe some other requirement (such as a two-thirds vote, or previous notice [10:44–51], or both)—for example, where the organization’s bylaws require greater than a majority vote for motions proposing admission to membership, the purchase or sale of real estate, etc.;
   b) when adoption of the motion would have the effect of suspension of a rule of order or a parliamentary right of members, in which case it requires a two-thirds vote—as, for example, a motion to place a special limit on the length or number of speeches per member during a meeting or a session; or

c) when adoption of the motion would have the effect of changing something already adopted, as in a motion to postpone an event previously scheduled by vote of the assembly, or to discharge a committee (from an uncompleted task previously assigned to it by means of a main motion, before the committee is ready to report)—in which case the vote required is as stated in 35:2 under Standard Characteristic 7 of the motion that takes the form either to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted.

8. Can be reconsidered. (See, however, Standard Characteristic 8 of the motion that takes the form either to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted, 35:2(8); with reference to the adoption of bylaws, see final sentence of 54:20, and 57:1(3).)
The Framing of Main Motions

10:9 Wording of a Main Motion. If a main motion is adopted, it becomes the officially recorded statement of an action taken by the assembly. A motion should therefore be worded in a concise, unambiguous, and complete form appropriate to such a purpose. It cannot employ language that is not allowed in debate (43). A member making a motion embodying something that has just been said by the chair or another member in informal consultation during a meeting should avoid statements such as “I so move,” and should himself recite the complete motion that he offers.

10:10 Motions to “reaffirm” a position previously taken by adopting a motion or resolution are not in order. Such a motion serves no useful purpose because the original motion is still in effect; also, possible attempts to amend a motion to reaffirm would come into conflict with the rules for the motion to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35); and if such a motion to reaffirm failed, it would create an ambiguous situation.

10:11 A motion whose only effect is to propose that the assembly refrain from doing something should not be offered if the same result can be accomplished by offering no motion at all. It is incorrect, for example, to move “that no response be made” to a request for a contribution to a fund, or “that our delegates be given no instructions,” unless some purpose would be served by adoption of such a motion. This could be the case, for example, if the membership of an organization wishes to make certain that a subordinate body, such as its executive board, will not take such action at a later date, or if the motion expresses an opinion or reason as to why no action should be taken.

statement even in cases where the effect of the motion is to propose that something be done, since members may become confused as to the effect of voting for or against such a motion. Rather than moving, for example, that the association go on record as “not in favor of the proposed public bond issue,” it should be moved that the association “oppose” or “declare its opposition to” the bond issue. In this connection, it should be noted that voting down a motion or resolution that would express a particular opinion is not the same as adopting a motion expressing the opposite opinion, since—if the motion is voted down—neither opinion has been expressed. A member may be in complete agreement with the views contained in such a resolution yet feel that his organization should not speak out on the matter, and he might therefore vote against the resolution.

10:13 Motions Submitted in Writing; Resolutions. As previously stated, a main motion—particularly an original main motion—is frequently offered as a resolution, either because of its importance or because of its length or complexity. Any resolution—and any long or complicated motion, whether cast as a resolution or not—should always be submitted in writing as described in 4:5. In preparing an important written motion or resolution (which should be done in advance of the meeting if possible), it is often advisable to consult with members who can be of assistance in perfecting it, and also with those whose support is likely to be necessary for its adoption. If such a motion is not offered as a resolution, it can simply be written out in the form in which it would be moved orally (beginning with the word “That”); for example, “That the Merchants’ Association sponsor an essay contest open to high school students of the city, to be conducted according to the following specifications:…..” If put in the form of a resolution, the preceding example would be written, “Resolved, That the Merchants’ Association sponsor an essay contest….” In a resolution, the name of the adopting organization can also be made a part of the enacting words, as in “Resolved by the International Benevolent Association in convention assembled, That….”

10:14 The form in which a main motion is written does not determine in any way what must be referred to a “resolutions committee,” nor does it affect the form of the motions reported by such a committee (see, for example, “platform,” 59:76–77).

10:15 An example of a simple resolution expressing an opinion or position of an organized society is given in 10:3. If the resolution is offered in a mass meeting (or in any meeting where there is no established organization whose act the adopted resolution would become), it may begin, “Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that…” A resolution can consist of more than one resolving clause, as in the following example:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the existing zoning ordinance should undergo a general revision; and

Resolved, That the Secretary be requested to send a copy of this resolution, and of the report already presented at this meeting, to the Mayor and to each member of the City Council.

10:16 Use of a Preamble. It is usually inadvisable to attempt to include reasons for a motion’s adoption within the motion itself. To do so may encumber the motion and may weigh against its adoption—since some members who approve of the action it proposes may dislike voting for it if it states reasons with which they disagree. When special circumstances make it desirable to include a brief statement of background, the motion should be cast in the form of a resolution, with the background or reasons incorporated in a preamble that is placed before the resolving clauses. A preamble consists of one or more clauses beginning “Whereas,….” It should be emphasized that neither rule nor custom requires a resolution to have a preamble, and one should not be used merely for the sake of form. In general, the use of a preamble should be limited to cases where it provides little-known information without which the point or the merits of a resolution are likely to be poorly understood, where unusual importance is attached to making certain reasons for an action a matter of record, or the like.

10:17 An example of a resolution with an appropriate preamble might be the following:

Whereas, A privately conducted survey by experts engaged by the Association reveals conditions constituting a serious fire hazard throughout the lower office-building area bordering the waterfront; Resolved, That a committee of seven consisting of [names of four], and three others to be named by the chair, be appointed to draw up recommendations whereby the Association may bring to bear all possible influence to secure proper enforcement of city fire regulations and any revision of them that may be found to be appropriate.

10:18 To avoid detracting from the force of the resolution itself, a preamble generally should contain no more clauses than are strictly necessary. In cases where an elaborate resolution (consisting of several preamble clauses and several resolving clauses) cannot be avoided, however, the following skeleton example will serve as a guide:

Whereas, The… [text of the first preamble clause]; ……………………………………………………. Whereas,… [text of the next to the last preamble clause]; and Whereas,… [text of the last preamble clause]; Resolved, That… [stating action to be taken]; Resolved, That… [stating further action to be taken]; and Resolved, That… [stating still further action to be taken].
In the consideration of a resolution having a preamble, the preamble is always amended last, since changes in the resolving clauses may require changes in the preamble. In moving the adoption of a resolution, the preamble is not usually mentioned, since it is included in the resolution. When the Previous Question (16) is ordered on the resolution before the preamble has been considered for amendment, however, the Previous Question does not apply to the preamble, which becomes open to debate and amendment unless the Previous Question is then separately ordered on it also.

Details of Form and Variations in Resolutions. The following details regarding the usual form for writing resolutions, and the variations that are used, should be noted:

If there is a preamble, each clause, written as a separate paragraph, begins with the word “Whereas” followed by a comma, and the next word should begin with a capital letter. The preamble, regardless of how many paragraphs it has, should never contain a period. Each of its paragraphs should close with a semicolon, followed, in the case of the next to the last paragraph, by the word “and” (which is optional for the preceding paragraphs also). The last paragraph of the preamble should close with a semicolon, after which a connecting expression such as “therefore” or “therefore, be it” or “now, therefore, be it” is sometimes added. When one of these phrases is included, no punctuation should follow it, and it should always be placed at the end of the preamble paragraph, never at the beginning of the resolving paragraph, thus:

Whereas, The… [text of the preamble]; now, therefore, be it Resolved, That… [stating action to be taken].

A resolution is often more forceful with a minimum of connecting words, however, as in the earlier examples above.

10:22 The word “Resolved” is underlined or printed in italics, and is followed by a comma and the word “That”—which begins with a capital “T.” If there is more than one resolving clause, each of them should be a separate paragraph. Unless the paragraphs are numbered as in the alternative form described below, each paragraph begins with the words “Resolved, That,” just as the first resolving clause. Each resolving paragraph may close with a semicolon (followed by the word “and” at least in the case of the next to the last, as in the example already shown); or each resolving paragraph may end with a period. A resolving paragraph should not contain a period within its structure, though observance of this rule is becoming less strict. As an alternative form, separate paragraphs, except the first, may be numbered and begin with the word “That”—as follows:

Resolved, That…
2. That…
3. That…

10:23 (For the format used in a platform, see 59:76–77.)

10:24 Orders (Instructions to Employees). In organizations with employees, the assembly or the board can give instructions to an employee in the form of an order, which is written just as a resolution except that the word “Ordered” is used in place of the word “Resolved.” An example would be: “Ordered, That the steward obtain impoundment of all unauthorized vehicles found parked on the club premises.”

10:25 Series of Resolutions Offered by a Single Main Motion. If a single composite proposal for taking a number of actions in reference to a particular subject has too many elements to be conveniently written into one resolution (even of several clauses), it can be set forth in a series of separate resolutions that can be numbered and offered by means of a single main motion, thus: “Mr. President, I move the adoption of [or “I offer”] the following resolutions:….” Such a series of resolutions can include orders as described above. In the case of a series of resolutions relating to a single subject, if members desire one or more of the resolutions to be considered separately, the motion for Division of a Question (27) must be made and adopted by a majority vote. Sometimes a series of independent resolutions relating to completely different subjects is offered by a single main motion in the same way. In the latter case—where the subjects are independent—any resolution in the series must be taken up and voted on separately at the demand of a single member. Such a demand can be made even when another has the floor, at any time until the vote has been taken on adopting the series. A member wishing to make this demand rises and says, for example, “Mr. President, I call for a separate vote on Resolution No. 2.”
Main Motions That Are Not in Order

10:26 Below are stated a number of characteristics or conditions that cause a particular main motion to be out of order, and—where applicable—the alternative courses that are open for accomplishing the desired result:

1) No main motion is in order that conflicts with the corporate charter, constitution, or bylaws\(^1\) (although a main motion to amend them may be in order; see 35, 57); and to the extent that procedural rules applicable to the organization or assembly are prescribed by federal, state, or local law, no main motion is in order that conflicts with such rules.

2) A main motion that proposes action outside the scope of the organization’s object as defined in the corporate charter, constitution, or bylaws is not in order unless the assembly by a two-thirds vote authorizes its introduction. If a member offers such a main motion, the chair can put to the assembly the question whether it shall be considered; or, if the chair rules the motion out of order, any member can move to authorize its introduction. This question is neither debatable nor amendable. If a two-thirds vote is not obtained, the main motion cannot be introduced at that session unless the vote on authorizing its introduction is reconsidered, but it can be authorized at any later session. (An affirmative vote on authorizing its introduction cannot be reconsidered.)

3) No main motion is in order that presents substantially the same question as a motion that was finally disposed of earlier in the same session by being rejected, postponed indefinitely (11), or subjected to an Objection to the Consideration of a Question (26) that was sustained. A main motion that was thus disposed of can, however, be renewed
(38)—that is, the same question can be introduced again as if new—at any later session; or, a motion to reconsider the vote that disposed of it can be made for a limited time during the same session, and if such a motion to Reconsider (37) is adopted, the previously disposed of main motion will thereby become pending.2

5) No main motion is in order that would conflict with or that presents substantially the same question as one which has been temporarily but not finally disposed of—whether in the same or an earlier session—and which remains within the control of the assembly (see 9:7–11, 38:8). If a motion that has been temporarily disposed of interferes with the desired introduction of another main motion, it can be brought before the assembly again (at which point the earlier motion can possibly be amended to encompass the idea of the desired new motion), as follows:

a) If it is in the hands of a committee, the committee can be discharged from further consideration of the question, or the vote that referred it to the committee can be reconsidered (so long as such reconsideration is permissible) and reversed (see 13, 36, 37).

b) If it is due to come up at a later time, or at a later point in the order of business, as a general order, a special order, or unfinished business, the rules can be suspended and it can be taken up out of its proper order, or any intervening items of business can be individually laid on the table or postponed as they arise, or the vote that established the general order or special order can be reconsidered (so long as such reconsideration is permissible) and reversed (see 41, especially 41:37–39).

c) If it lies on the table, it can be taken from the table (see 17, 34).

d) If it is the subject of a motion to Reconsider (37) that has been made but not finally disposed of, the motion to Reconsider can be adopted. Such a motion to Reconsider—if it is not already pending—can be brought before the assembly for this purpose as follows: (1) if it has not yet been taken up, it can be called up by any member when no other question is pending, or (2) if it has been taken up and temporarily disposed of, it can be brought before the assembly again by whichever of the processes mentioned in (b) or (c) above is applicable.

10:27 Many of the alternative courses for obtaining a result that cannot be directly reached through a main motion, as described above, involve parliamentary motions having special requirements (such as a two-thirds vote or previous notice, 10:44–51) for their adoption. The rules relating to the motions to Suspend the Rules (25), Take from the Table (34), Rescind or Amend Something Previously Adopted (35), Discharge a Committee (36), and Reconsider (37), and the rules relating to the renewal of motions (38), should be read in connection with the application of these methods.
Treatment of Main Motions

10:28 The basic procedure by which main motions are introduced and considered is described in detail in 4. Additional points to be noted in connection with the handling of main motions are as follows:

10:29 Procedures by Which the Proposal Contained in a Main Motion Can Be Improved Upon Before Action Is Taken. As previously noted (4:7–8), it is a general parliamentary rule that a subject must be brought up in the form of a motion (embodying a specific proposal) before it can be discussed in a meeting of an assembly. A motion should be as well thought out as possible before it is introduced. At the same time, it will frequently happen that the assembly—although desiring to take some kind of action on the subject that a main motion has brought to its attention—wishes to make some change in the proposal before voting on its adoption.

10:30 There are several means by which such a result can be accomplished, depending on the conditions and the degree or scope of the changes desired. The courses that are open in such cases are summarized below:

1) After a main motion has been made and before the question has been stated by the chair, any member can quickly rise and, with little or no explanatory comment, informally suggest one or more modifications in the motion, which at this point the maker can accept or reject as he wishes (see 4:20–22). Application of this method should generally be limited to minor changes about which there is unlikely to be a difference of opinion.

2) After the question has been stated by the chair—although the assembly, and not the maker of the motion, then has control over its wording—the maker can request unanimous consent to modify the motion (see 33:11–19). If any member then objects, however, the desired modification must be introduced in the form of a motion to Amend, as noted below.

3) By means of the subsidiary motion to Amend (12), members can propose changes to be made in the wording and, within limits, the meaning of a pending main motion before it is voted on. These amendments must be seconded, are debatable, and are adopted by a majority vote. Such proposed amendments can take the form of either:

a) changes to particular words or paragraphs in the main motion—of which several specific types are permitted under the rules for the motion to Amend; or

b) a motion to substitute an entire new text of the main motion in place of the pending version (see 12:69–90). Whatever amendments are adopted, the main motion is then voted on in its amended form.

4) If proper recasting of a main motion will require time or study, the subsidiary motion to Commit (13), which is adopted by a majority vote, can be used to refer the main motion to a committee. When this committee reports, it normally recommends appropriate amendments for the assembly’s consideration. Such a committee can be a special committee, appointed only for the particular case, or it can be one of a number of standing committees that may be permanently established within the organization (see 50). Some assemblies provide in their rules for the automatic referral of all main motions dealing with certain classes of subjects to specified standing committees as soon as they are introduced. Bills are handled in this manner in most legislative bodies. In conventions, the rules of the organization often require that all resolutions not reviewed by some other committee be submitted to a Resolutions Committee before coming before the general voting body (see 59:67–71). Where an assembly is large and has a volume of business, it is usually desirable to have every main question go to a committee before final action is taken.

5) If the general problem posed by a main motion might be better dealt with by an alternative measure that cannot conveniently be proposed as an amendment in the form of a substitute (see above), a member speaking in debate can urge rejection of the pending main motion, saying that if it is voted down he will offer a different main motion which he can describe briefly and which deals with the general problem in a substantially different way (see 10:26(3)). Or, with the same explanation, he may move to postpone the main motion indefinitely (11). If the pending motion is thereafter voted down, or indefinitely postponed, the chair immediately recognizes this member again for the purpose of making his alternative motion, even if another member rises to claim the floor first and addresses the chair.

10:31 Introduction of Subsidiary or Incidental Motions as a Part of—or Privileged Motions as an Interruption of—the Consideration of a Main Motion. While a main motion is pending, as described in 5 and 6, one or more subsidiary motions or incidental motions can be introduced and disposed of as an integral part of the main motion’s consideration, or the introduction of one or more privileged motions can interrupt its consideration. A member may speak in debate on the main motion and conclude by offering a secondary motion.

10:32 Such motions are usually made during the period while the main motion is open to debate, although certain incidental motions can also arise before or after this stage in its handling. The precise times and circumstances when each of these motions is in order are determined by the first three of the motion’s standard descriptive characteristics. If the assembly’s treatment of a particular main motion involves a number of these other motions, they may occur in such a way that each one of them is disposed of before the next is introduced, or—depending on the circumstances—several of them may become pending at one time by operation of the order of precedence of motions (see 5:3–13).

10:33 In the latter case, when a motion that takes precedence over all pending questions is made, that motion is disposed of first, and then “the question recurs” on the next-most-recently-moved motion; that is (as far as applicable in the existing parliamentary situation), its consideration is resumed at the point where the higher-ranking motion interrupted it. This motion is again open to debate and amendment if it is a debatable and amendable motion. In this manner, the motions in the series of pending questions are voted on in the reverse of the order in which they were made—with the main motion being voted on last—unless the result of the vote on one of the other motions causes consideration of the remainder of the series to be halted.

10:34 This principle may be illustrated by a somewhat more complicated example than may ordinarily occur in practice.
Referring to the explanation of subsidiary, privileged, and incidental motions in 6, assume that the following series of motions is pending and that the motions have been moved in the order shown:

1) a main motion;
2) a motion to postpone the main question indefinitely;
3) an amendment to the main motion;
4) a motion to refer the main question (with the pending amendment) to a committee;
5) a motion to postpone the pending questions to a certain time;
6) a motion to vote on the postponement by ballot;
7) a motion to lay the pending questions on the table; and
8) a motion to take a recess.

In such a case, the motion to Recess is voted on first, then the motion to Lay on the Table, and so on, proceeding upward through the list above. If any one of the motions (8), (7), (5), (4), or (2) is adopted, however, consideration of the remaining motions stops. These processes, and others that may be employed in or interrupt a main motion’s consideration, are explained initially in 6 and are further illustrated in the examples in 11–33.

10:35 A subsidiary or incidental motion adhere to a main question if it is related to the main question in such a way that—once introduced—it must be decided before the main question can be decided. Adhering motions thus remain connected with the main question if that question is interrupted or temporarily disposed of, and remain to be decided first if and when the main question is taken up again. In the example in the preceding paragraph, motions (2) through (7) adhere to the main motion—except that motion (2), to Postpone Indefinitely, would cease to adhere to it if motion (4), to Commit, were adopted (see Standard Descriptive Characteristic 2, 10:8). Motion (8) in the example does not adhere to the main question.

10:36 Main Motions Brought Up by Means of a Call for the Orders of the Day or by Raising a Question of Privilege. Under the process by which a main motion is normally introduced, as already explained, it can be moved only while no motion is pending. Certain questions may come before the assembly with the status of main motions after having interrupted other business, however, if they are brought up by means of either of the two lowest-ranking privileged motions. To Call for the Orders of the Day (18) and to Raise a Question of Privilege (19) each have privileged rank and can therefore interrupt pending business. As a result of the application of one of these devices to interrupt a pending question, an order of the day (that is, another question previously set as due to come up automatically at the time) may be taken up, or an urgent motion relating to the privileges of the assembly or of a member may be admitted as a question of privilege to be entertained immediately. But when such an order of the day or question of privilege has thus become pending, it is treated exactly as any other main motion. (The description of the first two privileged motions in 6:12 and the sections on them referred to above should be read in connection with this paragraph.)
10:37 Below for the main motion, and in each of the succeeding sections covering the different motions of parliamentary law (11–37), is a subsection headed Form and Example giving a script showing the words to be spoken by a member making the motion and by the chair in stating and putting the question on it. In these subsections and throughout this book as applicable, the following methods of notation are used:

- The examples generally show the presiding officer addressed as “Mr. President” or “Madam President.” While this form corresponds to the chair’s designation in most organized societies, the presiding officer should be addressed by whatever is his or her official title in the particular organization or assembly. Where he or she has no special title, or in a meeting of an unorganized body such as a mass meeting, the form “Mr. Chairman” or “Madam Chairman” should be used (see also 3:10–12).

- The phrase “obtaining the floor” in parentheses before words spoken by a member indicates that this member must first obtain the floor in the manner explained in 3:30–35.

- The word “Second” in parentheses after words spoken in making a motion indicates that, except in cases where it is proposed on behalf of a board or a committee, another member must second the motion as described in 4:9–14, and that it is assumed that this is done.
Form and Example

10:38 The example below illustrates the handling of a main motion in a case that involves only the basic forms of the six principal steps—three in bringing the motion before the assembly (4:2) and three in its consideration (4:25).

10:39 Assume that the chair has just asked if there is any new business (see 41:27).

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move that the Society contribute $100 to the Centennial Celebration. (Second.)

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded that the Society contribute $100 to the Centennial Celebration. [Proceeding as shown in 4:15.]

10:40 The chair immediately turns toward Member A (who resumed his seat after making his motion) to see if he wishes the floor first in debate (see 3:33(1)). Member A is already rising to claim the floor. The chair recognizes him:

CHAIR: Mr. A.

10:41 Member A explains the reasons why the contribution should be made, followed by others who also speak in debate after having obtained the floor. When debate appears to have ended, the chair makes sure that no one else wishes to speak, as by asking, “Are you ready for the question?” or “Is there any further debate?” and then puts the question—that is, puts the motion to a vote—as follows:

CHAIR: The question is on the motion that the Society contribute $100 to the Centennial Celebration. Those in favor of the motion, say aye. [Pausing for response.]... Those opposed, say no.... The ayes have it and the motion is agreed to. The Treasurer will issue the appropriate check and the Secretary will prepare a covering letter forwarding the contribution to the Chairman of the Centennial Commission. Is there further new business?

10:42 If the assembly is taking up business under the heading of Special Orders in the order of business, or that of Unfinished Business and General Orders (rather than New Business as in the above example), the chair, instead of saying, “Is there further new business,” announces, “The next item of business is… [immediately proceeding to state the question]” (see 41:19–26).

10:43 (See 4 for variations in the steps illustrated above. For examples of the use of subsidiary and incidental motions in the handling of main motions and the application of privileged motions while a main motion is pending, see 11–33.)
Previous Notice of Motions

10:44 The term previous notice (or notice), as applied to necessary conditions for the adoption of certain motions, has a particular meaning in parliamentary law. A requirement of previous notice means that announcement that the motion will be introduced—indicating its exact content as described below—must be included in the call of the meeting (1:7, 9:2–5) at which the motion will be brought up, or, as a permissible alternative, if no more than a quarterly time interval (see 9:7) will have elapsed since the preceding meeting, the announcement must be made at the preceding meeting.

10:45 Motions that have the effect of changing or nullifying previous action of the assembly—such as the motion to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35), the motion to Discharge a Committee (36), or a motion to postpone an event already scheduled—require previous notice if they are to be adopted by only a majority vote. Accordingly, it is ordinarily desirable to give previous notice if there is a possibility of serious disagreement. The adoption or amendment of special rules of order requires either (a) previous notice and a two-thirds vote or (b) a vote of a majority of the entire membership—as does the amendment of bylaws if they do not prescribe the procedure for their amendment, which they should do (see also Table of Rules Relating to Motions, pages t6–t33). Bylaws or special rules of order sometimes also provide a requirement of notice for original main motions dealing with certain subjects (compare Standard Characteristic 7(a), 10:8).

10:46 Subject to any rules of the organization that provide how notice shall be given, it can be given as follows:

10:47 If previous notice is given at a meeting, it can be given orally unless the rules of the organization require it to be in writing—which is often the case with notice of amendments to bylaws. Unless the rules require the full text of the motion, resolution, or bylaw amendment to be submitted in the notice, only the purport need be indicated; but such a statement of purport must be accurate and complete—as in “to raise the annual dues to $20”—since it will determine what amendments are in order when the motion is considered. The notice becomes invalid if the motion is amended beyond the scope of the notice (see also 35, 57).

When no question is pending, a member desiring to give a notice is entitled to preference in recognition (but see 42:6–13 for circumstances in which others may have a higher priority for such preference). But if the member wishing to give the notice is unable to obtain the floor while no business is pending (as may sometimes happen, for example, in a convention that is following an adopted agenda or program, 41, or in cases where a meeting of an ordinary society adjourns before completing its regular order of business), the notice, if necessary, can interrupt pending business or any other pending motion; the notice is also in order when another person has been assigned the floor but has not yet begun to speak, and is in order even after it has been voted to adjourn, provided that the chair has not yet declared the meeting adjourned (see also 21:10–12).

A notice can be given and taken note of in a meeting as follows:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I give notice that at the next meeting I will move to rescind the resolution adopted April 17, 20__, relating to...
CHAIR: Notice has been given that at the next meeting... [repeating the substance of the notice].
10:50 The secretary then records the notice in the minutes. If the member desiring to give the notice is unable to obtain the floor, the following variations in form can be used as appropriate to the case:

MEMBER A (rising and addressing the chair immediately after the chair has recognized another member, Mr. Y, and before the latter has begun to speak—or remaining standing if he has just sought the floor un成功fully): Mr. President!
CHAIR: For what purpose does the member rise [or, if Member A has remained standing after seeking the floor, “For what purpose does the member address the chair”]?
MEMBER A: I wish to give notice of the following amendment to the bylaws: “To amend Article II, Section 3, by…”
CHAIR: Notice has been given of the following amendment to the bylaws:… Mr. Y has the floor.

10:51 Instead of being given at a meeting, a notice can also be sent to every member with the call of the meeting at which the matter is to come up for action, in cases where there is a duty or established custom of issuing such a call. In such cases, the member desiring to give the notice writes to the secretary alone, requesting that the notice be sent with the call of the next meeting, and the secretary then does this at the expense of the society.
Motion to Adopt and Motion to Ratify

10:52 A motion to adopt (or accept or agree to) an officer’s or a committee’s report or recommendations which the assembly (by means of a main motion) directed the officer or committee to prepare is an incidental main motion. A motion to adopt or accept a report or the recommendations of a standing committee prepared on the committee’s own initiative and dealing with a subject that was not expressly referred to the committee, however, is an original main motion.

10:53 A motion to adopt a resolution, bylaws, or any other document can be amended by adding, “and that it be printed and that members be furnished with copies,” or, “that it [or “they”] go into effect at the close of this annual meeting,” or anything of a similar nature (see also 51; for the adoption of bylaws, see 54:15–20 and 56:15).

10:54 The motion to ratify (also called approve or confirm) is an incidental main motion that is used to confirm or make valid an action already taken that cannot become valid until approved by the assembly. Cases where the procedure of ratification is applicable include:

• action improperly taken at a regular or properly called meeting at which no quorum was present (40:6–10);
• action taken at a special meeting with regard to business not mentioned in the call of that meeting (9:15–16);
• action taken by officers, committees, delegates, subordinate bodies, or staff in excess of their instructions or authority—including action to carry out decisions made without a valid meeting, such as by approval obtained separately from all board members (49:16) or at an electronic meeting (9:30–36) of a body for which such meetings are not authorized;
• action taken by a local unit that requires approval of the state or national organization; or • action taken by a state or national society subject to approval by its constituent units.

10:55 An assembly can ratify only such actions of its officers, committees, delegates, subordinate bodies, or staff as it would have had the right to authorize in advance. It cannot make valid a voice-vote election when the bylaws require elections to be by ballot; nor can it ratify anything done in violation of procedural rules prescribed by national, state, or local law, or in violation of its own bylaws, except that provision for a quorum in the bylaws does not prevent it from ratifying action taken at a meeting when no quorum was present.

10:56 A motion to ratify can be amended by substituting a motion of censure, and vice versa, when the action involved has been taken by an officer or other representative of the assembly.

10:57 Since the motion to ratify (or to censure) is a main motion, it is debatable and opens the entire question to debate.
Footnotes to Chapter V

1. However, an incidental main motion that conflicts with a provision in the nature of a rule of order in the bylaws or constitution is in order provided that (a) the motion has no continuing force and effect beyond the current session and (b) the provision that it conflicts with is one that can be suspended. Such a motion is, in effect, an incidental main motion to suspend the rules, and the vote required for its adoption is the same as for the corresponding incidental motion (25)—that is, it usually requires a two-thirds vote. (See 6:23, 25:2(7), 25:7–14.) For example, it is in order, by a two-thirds vote, to adopt an agenda for the current session that differs from an order of business set forth in the bylaws.

2. Upon the reconsideration of a vote that postponed a main motion indefinitely, both the main motion and the motion to Postpone Indefinitely will become pending, the motion to Postpone Indefinitely becoming the immediately pending question.

3. Unless an adopted main motion specifies a time for the termination of its effect, it continues in force until it is rescinded.

4. Rejection of the motion to Reconsider will not cause the main motion to be brought before the assembly again, but will cause the vote that had previously disposed of the main motion to become final.

SUBSIDIARY MOTIONS
See 6:3ff. for a list of these motions and a description of their characteristics as a class.

§11. POSTPONE INDEFINITELY

(To drop the main motion without a direct vote on it)

11:1 Postpone Indefinitely is a motion that the assembly decline to take a position on the main question. Its adoption kills the main motion (for the duration of the session) and avoids a direct vote on the question. It is useful in disposing of a badly chosen main motion that cannot be either adopted or expressly rejected without possibly undesirable consequences.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

11:2 The subsidiary motion to Postpone Indefinitely:

1. Takes precedence over nothing except the main question to which it is applied. It is the lowest-ranking subsidiary motion and yields to all other subsidiary motions, to all privileged motions, and to all applicable incidental motions.

2. Can be applied only to the main question and can therefore be made only while a main question is immediately pending. Motions to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate and for the Previous Question can be applied to it without affecting the main question. It cannot be committed (although the motion to Commit can be made while it is pending; see below). It cannot be definitely postponed or laid on the table alone, but when it is pending, the main question can be definitely postponed or laid on the table, and in such a case, the motion to Postpone Indefinitely is also postponed to the specified time or carried to the table.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is debatable; and, unlike the case of any other subsidiary motion, debate on the motion to Postpone Indefinitely can go fully into the merits of the main question.

6. Is not amendable.

7. Requires a majority vote.

8. An affirmative vote on the motion to Postpone Indefinitely can be reconsidered. A negative vote on it cannot be reconsidered, and after such a vote this motion cannot be renewed as to the same main motion, for two reasons: (a) by the negative vote on Postpone Indefinitely, the effort to prevent the issue raised by the main motion from coming to a head is already lost; and (b) the opponents of the main motion will be given another chance to kill it by direct rejection when the vote on the main motion is taken.
Further Rules and Explanation

11:3 Effect on the Pending Motion. The effect of postponing a question indefinitely is to suppress it throughout the current session. In a convention or conference consisting of several meetings, the suppression continues throughout the entire series of meetings, and in ordinary societies, throughout the weekly, monthly, or other meeting, as the case may be. Consequently, the adoption of the motion to Postpone Indefinitely is in effect an indirect rejection of the main motion.

11:4 Effect of Referral (of the Main Motion) on a Pending Motion to Postpone Indefinitely. If a main motion is referred to a committee while Postpone Indefinitely is pending, the latter motion is ignored and does not go to the committee, since the adoption of the motion to Commit indicates that the assembly is not in favor of postponing indefinitely.

11:5 Occasional Special Use. The motion to Postpone Indefinitely is sometimes employed by strategists to test their strength on a motion they oppose. Making this motion enables members who have exhausted their right of debate on the main question to speak further because, as explained under Standard Characteristic 5, the motion to Postpone Indefinitely, though technically a new question, necessarily involves debate of the main question. Its effect, therefore, is to give the opponents of the pending measure a chance to kill it without risking its adoption, as they would be doing if the vote were taken on the main motion itself. If opponents of the main question carry the indefinite postponement, the main question is suppressed for the session; if they fail, they still have a vote on the main question and, having learned their strength by the vote on the indefinite postponement, can form an opinion as to the advisability of continuing their effort.
Form and Example

11:6 Assume that the following resolution is pending in a meeting of a local unit of a state professional society: “Resolved, That the Ferndale Unit endorse the State President of the Society, James Thornton, for the office of United States Senator.” Debate creates a delicate situation. Members are loyal to their state president, but in questions of public office they wish to support the nominee of their choice. Yet, for them to vote no on the endorsement might appear to be a repudiation of their state president. Furthermore, a vote on this question either in the affirmative or in the negative might tend to create an unfortunate division within the local unit.

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move that the resolution be postponed indefinitely. (Second.)

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded that the resolution pertaining to the endorsement of James Thornton for United States Senator be postponed indefinitely. The chair recognizes Mr. A.

11:7 Debate on the subsidiary motion to Postpone Indefinitely will likely involve also the advisability of the resolution itself. When debate ceases, however, the subsidiary motion is voted on first.

CHAIR: The question is on the motion to postpone indefinitely the resolution, “Resolved, That the Ferndale Unit endorse the State President of the Society, James Thornton, for the office of United States Senator.” As many as are in favor of postponing the resolution indefinitely, say aye.... Those opposed, say no.... The ayes have it and the resolution is postponed indefinitely.

11:8 If the motion to Postpone Indefinitely is lost, the chair announces the result and immediately states the question on the main motion. The wording in this case is:

CHAIR: The noes have it. The motion to postpone indefinitely is lost. The question is on the resolution, “Resolved, That…” [Continues as for any main motion.]
12:1 The subsidiary motion to Amend is a motion to modify the wording—and within certain limits the meaning—of a pending motion before the pending motion itself is acted upon.

12:2 Less frequently, it may become desirable to apply a similar process to something already adopted—as bylaws, a program, or a resolution. It should be noted that the motion then used is not the subsidiary motion to Amend, but a main motion having particular characteristics. This section deals only with Amend as a subsidiary motion. (For the motion to Amend Something Previously Adopted, see 35.)

12:3 Amend is probably the most widely used of the subsidiary motions, although the full procedure for its most effective application is not generally well understood by the meeting-going public at large. The ordinary member’s becoming at home with the formal amendment process is the keystone of the power of the general membership to keep details of the direction of an organization under its control to the extent it wishes to do so. To understand how the process works, it is important to realize that, when an assembly “takes action,” all it ever actually does itself is to adopt a statement—directing that a certain action be carried out, or expressing a certain view or aspiration. The precise wording of the statement can become crucial when it deals, for example, with a complex matter or an expressed position on a publicly controversial issue. To enable an assembly to work through internal disagreements about the precise wording of a statement in an orderly manner, the rules governing the subsidiary motion to Amend include extensive detailed specifications stating the types of change in language structure through which modifications are to be achieved.
Adoption of a subsidiary motion to Amend does not adopt the motion thereby amended; that motion remains pending in its modified form. Rejection of a motion to Amend leaves the pending motion worded as it was before the amendment was voted on.

Neither the member who offers an amendment nor the maker of the main motion amends or “makes an amendment”; only the assembly can do that. A member’s vote on an amendment does not obligate him to vote in a particular way on the motion to which the amendment applies; he is free to vote as he pleases on the main motion, whether it is amended or not.

An amendment must always be germane—that is, closely related to or having bearing on the subject of the motion to be amended. This means that no new subject can be introduced under pretext of being an amendment (see 12:16–21).
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

12:7 The subsidiary motion to Amend:

1. a) When applied to a main motion: It takes precedence over the main motion and over the subsidiary motion to Postpone Indefinitely. It yields to all subsidiary motions other than Postpone Indefinitely and Amend, and it also yields to a motion to Amend that is applied to it; and it yields to all privileged motions and all applicable incidental motions.

   b) When applied to other than a main motion: It takes precedence over the motion that it proposes to amend. It yields to any privileged or subsidiary motion (other than Amend) to which the motion that it proposes to amend would yield, and it also yields to motions to Amend, to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, or for the Previous Question that are applied to it; and it yields to all applicable incidental motions.

2. Can be applied to any main motion (but in the case of some incidental main motions only in a limited manner); also can be applied, in different limited ways, to any other motion that legitimately contains a variable factor; for example, can be applied to change the duration of a proposed recess or the hour to which a pending question is to be postponed. (For lists of motions that cannot be amended, see pages t46–t47.)

   Amend* can be applied to itself (that is, to a pending primary amendment), so that a secondary amendment* (or “amendment to an amendment”) will result, but it cannot be applied to a secondary amendment (see Standard Characteristic 6, below; and Degrees of Amendment, 12:11–13).
The sections in this book dealing with each individual motion contain under Standard Characteristic 6 a statement of whether Amend is applicable to that particular motion, and if applicability is limited, in what manner.

Motions to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate and for the Previous Question can be applied to a pending primary amendment or secondary amendment; and these motions affect only the immediately pending amendment unless otherwise specified. A Division of a Question can be applied to the motion to Amend; the motion for Consideration by Paragraph or Seriatim can also be applied to it. The motion to Amend cannot have motions to Commit, Postpone Definitely, or Lay on the Table applied to it alone, but when a primary amendment or a primary and a secondary amendment are pending, the main question can be committed, postponed, or laid on the table, and the amendments then undergo the same process with the main question. The motion to Amend cannot be postponed indefinitely.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.
4. Must be seconded.
5. Is debatable whenever the motion to which it is applied is debatable. Such debate must be confined to the desirability of the amendment, however, and must not extend to the merits of the motion to be amended, except as may be necessary to determine whether the amendment is advisable. Amend is undebatable whenever the motion to be amended is undebatable (but see 43:31–32 regarding allowable explanation of an undebatable motion).
6. Is generally amendable. This characteristic, however, creates two degrees of amendment—primary and secondary—and a secondary amendment cannot be amended (see Degrees of Amendment, 12:11–13).
7. Requires a majority vote, regardless of the vote required to adopt the question to be amended. This is true even in cases where adoption of the amendment would result in changing the vote required to adopt the question being amended, as from a two-thirds vote to a majority vote or vice versa (see, e.g., Standard Characteristic 7 of Postpone to a Certain Time, 14:4, and the example in 14:21).

8. Can be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation (with Forms)

12:8 Classification as to Form. There are three basic processes of amendment, the third of which is an indivisible combination of the first two. For each of these processes, some of the rules are different depending on whether it is applied with reference to a few words or to a whole paragraph or section; so that each process has two forms, as follows:

1. First process: to insert, or to add.
   a. To insert words, or, if they are placed at the end of the sentence or passage being amended, to add words.
   b. To insert a paragraph, or, if it is placed at the end, to add a paragraph.

2. Second process: to strike out.¹
   a. To strike out words.
   b. To strike out a paragraph.

3. Third process: an indivisible combination of processes (1) and (2) having the following forms:
   a. To strike out and insert (which applies to words).
   b. To substitute; that is, in effect, to strike out a paragraph, or the entire text of a resolution or main motion, and insert another in its place.² (Note that substitute is a technical parliamentary term that is not applied to anything less than a complete paragraph of one or more sentences, so that this term is not applicable to Form 3(a).)

12:9 Forms 1(a), 2(a), and 3(a), relating to words, can be applied to change the wording within a single sentence, or occasionally within two or more consecutive sentences that make up a part of a single paragraph. Forms 1(b), 2(b), and 3(b), relating to a paragraph, can also be applied to a section, article, or larger unit.
12:10 The rules for each of the different forms of amendment are given in separate subsections beginning in 12:24.

12:11 Degrees of Amendment. As noted in Standard Characteristics 2 and 6, above, a subsidiary motion to Amend can, in general, be amended, so that two degrees of amendment—primary and secondary—are possible. A primary amendment applies directly to the pending resolution, main motion, or other motion (except Amend) to be amended. A secondary amendment applies to a pending primary amendment; it proposes a change in the primary amendment or, in certain cases, in a paragraph that the primary amendment proposes to strike out of the pending resolution or motion (see 12:51, 12:70).

12:12 The terms amendment of the first degree and amendment of the second degree, or amendment to the main question and amendment to the amendment, are correct expressions, but the terms primary amendment and secondary amendment are preferred. An amendment of the third degree is not permitted. To accomplish the same purpose, a member can say, while a secondary amendment is pending, that if it is voted down, he will offer another secondary amendment—which he can then indicate briefly—in its place.

12:13 Except as described under the next two headings, no more than one primary amendment and one secondary amendment are permitted to be pending at a time, but any number of each can be considered in succession—so long as they do not again raise questions already decided during the same session. (See Filling Blanks, 12:92–113, however, for a special method of amending highly variable factors, such as times, amounts, names, or numbers, by which several alternative proposals can be pending at the same time.)

series of amendments to a pending main motion (or to a lengthy primary amendment, such as a substitute) may be offered in one subsidiary motion to Amend. Unless these amendments meet the standard for conforming amendments described immediately below, any member may demand a separate vote on one or more of them. After the others have been voted on together, the amendment(s) on which separate votes were requested are disposed of. (For application of this method to amendments recommended by a committee to which a resolution has been referred, see 51:45–48.)

12:15 Conforming Amendments. Sometimes several changes throughout a motion or resolution are needed in order to achieve one end, in which case these separate amendments are proposed and adopted by a single subsidiary motion to Amend. For example, suppose a lengthy resolution is pending relating to the creation of a new standing committee, called the “Ways and Means Committee,” to study and make recommendations concerning the society’s financial circumstances and requirements, and this committee is referred to by name in a number of places scattered throughout the resolution. If it is desired to change the name of this committee from “Ways and Means Committee” to “Finance Committee,” it is both necessary and in order to move “to amend the pending resolution by striking out ‘Ways and Means Committee’ wherever it appears and inserting ‘Finance Committee’ in lieu thereof.” In such cases (where all of the individual amendments must be made, if any one of them is made, in order to leave a coherent resolution pending if the motion to Amend is adopted), the proposed amendments are offered in a single motion, as in the example given. Such proposed amendments may not be divided.

12:16 Determining the Germaneness of an Amendment. As already stated, an amendment must be germane to be in order. To be germane, an amendment must in some way involve the same question that is raised by the motion to which it is applied. When a secondary amendment proposes a change in the primary amendment, it must be germane to that primary amendment—not just to the motion the primary amendment would change. When a secondary amendment proposes a change in a paragraph that a primary amendment proposes to strike out, either by a motion to strike out a paragraph or by a motion to substitute, it must be germane to that paragraph. An amendment cannot introduce an independent question; but an amendment can be hostile to, or even defeat, the spirit of the original motion and still be germane.

12:17 Aside from these principles, there is no single, all-inclusive test for determining when a proposed amendment is germane and when it is not. A method by which the germaneness of an amendment can often be verified, however, grows out of the following general rules of parliamentary law:

1) During the session in which the assembly has decided a question, another main motion raising the same or substantially the same question cannot be introduced.

2) While a motion has been temporarily disposed of (as explained in 9:7–11), no other motion can be admitted that might conflict with one of the possible final decisions on the first motion.

12:18 By these rules, if a proposed amendment is related to the main motion in such a way that, after the adoption, rejection, or temporary disposal of the present main motion, the essential idea of the amendment could not be introduced as an independent resolution during the same session, the amendment is germane and must be admitted, since there will not, or may not, be any opportunity to present it later. This test cannot be reliably used to determine that an amendment is not in order, since it is sometimes possible for an amendment to be germane even if, regardless of action on the present main motion, the idea embodied in the amendment could be introduced independently later in the same session.

12:19 As an example of a germane amendment, assume that a motion is pending “that the Society authorize the purchase of a new desk for the Secretary.” It would be germane and in order to amend by inserting after “desk” the words “and matching chair,” since both relate to providing the secretary with the necessary furniture. On the other hand, an amendment to add to the motion the words “and the payment of the President’s expenses to the State Convention” is not germane.

12:20 Or assume that the following is the pending motion: “that the City Council commend Officer George for his action in…” An amendment to strike out “commend” and insert “censure,” although antagonistic to the original intent, is germane and in order because both ideas deal with the council’s opinion of the officer’s action. Also, since a motion to censure the officer for the same act could not be introduced independently in the same session after the adoption of a motion to commend him, the amendment to change commend to censure is germane under the rule given above. It should be noted that censure is different from not commend (see Improper Amendments, below).

12:21 There are borderline cases where a presiding officer will find it difficult to judge the germaneness of an amendment. Whenever in doubt, he should admit the amendment or, in important cases, refer the decision to the assembly: “The chair is in doubt and will ask the assembly to decide whether the amendment is germane. [Debate, if any, provided that debate is in order.] The question is on whether the amendment is germane to the resolution [or “to the primary amendment”]. Those of the opinion that the amendment is germane, say aye. … Those of the opinion that it is not germane, say no. …, etc.” (See also example under Point of Order, 23:18–20.)

12:22 Improper Amendments. The following types of amendment are not in order:

1) One that is not germane to the question to be amended.
2) One that merely makes the adoption of the amended question equivalent to a rejection of the original motion. Thus, in the motion that “our delegates be instructed to vote in favor of the increase in Federation dues,” an amendment to insert “not” before “be” is not in order because an affirmative vote on not giving a certain instruction is identical with a negative vote on giving the same instruction. But it would be in order to move to insert “not” before “to” (“instructed not to vote in favor”), since this would change the main motion into one to give different instructions.
3) One that would cause the question as amended to not be in order.5
4) One that proposes to change one of the forms of amendment listed in 12:8 into another form. A pending primary amendment to “strike out ‘oak’ before ‘furniture,’” for example, cannot be converted into the form strike out and insert by moving to add “and insert ‘maple.’”
5) One that would have the effect of converting one parliamentary motion into another. For example, a motion to “postpone the question until 2 P.M.” cannot be amended by “striking out ‘until 2 P.M.’ and inserting ‘indefinitely,’” since this would convert it into a different kind of motion.
6) One that strikes out the word “Resolved” or other enacting words.
12:23 Note on Amendment of Preamble. When a resolution has a preamble (one or more clauses beginning “Whereas”), the preamble is not opened to amendment until after amendment of the resolving clauses has been completed. After any amendment of the preamble, a single vote is taken on the question of adopting the entire resolution or paper (see also 28:7).

12:24 Rules for the Different Forms of Amendment. Because Amend can be moved in different forms, rules pertaining to each form of the motion are given separately below, with examples. The general guidelines for consideration of primary and secondary amendments that are presented under Form and Example: 1(a), 1(b), 12:32–45, are applicable also to the other forms.

12:25 It should be noted that many of the rules governing the different forms of amendment are particular applications of the following principle: After the assembly has voted that certain words (or a certain paragraph) shall, or shall not, form part of a pending resolution, it is not in order, during the same session at which that vote was taken, to make another motion to Amend that raises the same question of content and effect. Common sense should guide the presiding officer in interpreting the rules, both to give freedom for improvement of the main motion finally to be voted on, and at the same time to protect the assembly from motions for amendment that present questions it has already decided.

12:26 1(a). To Insert, or to Add, Words. A motion to insert words must specify the exact place of insertion by naming the word before or after which, or the words between which, the insertion is to be made—whichever will better locate and point out the effect of the change. For long or printed copies, the line number and paragraph number should be designated.
12:27  In the consideration of a motion to insert certain words, or (if they are to be placed at the end of the passage being amended) to add certain words, any necessary perfecting of the new words should be done by secondary amendment before the vote is taken on inserting or adding as proposed by the primary amendment. Otherwise there may be no opportunity to perfect the inserted or added words, for reasons explained in the next paragraph.

12:28  After words have been inserted or added, they cannot be changed or struck out during the same session, except through a reconsideration of the vote (see 37), or through an amendment presenting a new question in the form of a motion:

1) To strike out the entire paragraph into which the words were inserted.
2) To strike out a portion of the paragraph, including all or a part of the words inserted and enough other words to make a different question from the one decided by the insertion.
3) To substitute an entire paragraph for the one into which the words were inserted.
4) To strike out a portion of the paragraph (including all or a part of the words inserted) and insert other words, in a way that presents a new question.

12:29  If a motion to insert certain words in a particular place is voted down, it is still in order—provided that it will present an essentially new question—to make a motion:

1) To insert only a part of the same words.
2) To insert all or a part of the same words together with some others.
3) To insert the same words in place of others (motion to strike out and insert).
4) To insert the same words in another place where the effect
A motion to insert, or to add, words can have applied to it secondary amendments in any of the three forms relating to words—inserting or adding; striking out; or striking out and inserting.

1(b). To Insert, or to Add, a Paragraph. The rules for the insertion or addition of a paragraph are essentially the same as those given above, except that after a paragraph has been inserted, words can still be added to it (that is, placed at the end of the paragraph only) provided that they do not conflict with or modify anything in the paragraph as already inserted. When a paragraph is to be inserted or added, any necessary perfecting should first be done by secondary amendments. After its insertion or addition, the paragraph cannot be struck out except in connection with other paragraphs that make the question materially different. If a motion to insert or add a paragraph is voted down, its rejection does not preclude any other motion except one that presents essentially the same question. If a rejected paragraph is rewritten or shortened in such a way that its effect is changed, it becomes a different paragraph under the rules for amendment.

Form and Example: 1(a), 1(b). To Insert, or to Add (Words or a Paragraph). Typical forms in which a motion to insert, or to add, may be made are: “I move to amend the resolution by inserting the word ‘waterfront’ before the word ‘property’”; “I move to insert ‘plus expenses’ after ‘$100’”; “I move to insert ‘permanent’ between ‘all’ and ‘employees’”; “I move to insert in Line 5 of the second paragraph, the word ‘preferred’ before ‘stocks’”; “I move to insert after Paragraph 3 the following paragraph:…”; “I move to amend by adding the words, ‘at a cost not to exceed $2,000’”; “I move to add the following
In stating the question on each motion in any series involving amendments, and again when putting the motion to a vote, the chair should take care that the members understand which motion is under immediate consideration, as well as the effect of adopting or rejecting it.

Therefore, when stating the question on an amendment, the chair may find it advisable to employ three steps:

1) State the question as for any other motion: “It is moved and seconded to…”

2) Read the main motion (or the portion affected by the amendment) as it would stand if the amendment were adopted: “If the amendment is adopted, the main motion will read…”

3) Make clear once more that it is the amendment that is under immediate consideration: “The question is on…”

Assume that the main motion “That the Society purchase the property adjoining the present Headquarters” is pending.

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move to add the words “and convert it into a parking lot.” (Second.)

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to add the words “and convert it into a parking lot.” If the amendment is adopted, the main motion will read, “That the Society purchase the property adjoining the present Headquarters and convert it into a parking lot.” The question is on adding the words “and convert it into a parking lot.”

Similarly, when putting to a vote the question on an amendment, if debate or consideration of other motions has intervened since the amendment was stated, the chair may find it advisable to employ a comparable set of three steps:

1) Repeat the amendment: “The question is on…”

2) Read the main motion (or the portion affected by the amendment) as it would stand if the amendment were adopted: “If the amendment is adopted, the main motion will read…”

3) Take the vote in such a way as to make clear it is the amendment that is to be voted on: “Those in favor of…, say aye. [Pausing for response.]… Those opposed, say no.”

CHAIR: The question is on adding the words “and convert it into a parking lot.” If the amendment is adopted, the main motion will read, “That the Society purchase the property adjoining the present Headquarters and convert it into a parking lot.” Those in favor of adding the words “and convert it into a parking lot,” say aye. [Pausing for response.]… Those opposed, say no.

12:37 After taking the vote, the chair announces the result of the vote on the amendment, and then states the question that consequently becomes immediately pending:

CHAIR: The ayes have it and the amendment is adopted. The question is now on the main motion as amended, “That the Society purchase the property adjoining the present Headquarters and convert it into a parking lot.”

12:38 Should the amendment fail, the chair’s announcement of the result would be as follows:

CHAIR: The noes have it and the amendment is lost. The question is now on the main motion, “That the Society purchase the property adjoining the present Headquarters.”

12:39 At this point, regardless of whether the amendment is adopted or rejected, the resolution is again open to debate, and it is in order to offer a different amendment.

12:40 In some cases—depending on the length of the resolution and the amendment, the nature of the subject matter, the conditions of the assembly, etc.—the question may be clearer to the members if the chair restates only the amendment, rather than employing the three steps outlined above. On the other hand, in circumstances of particular complexity, when confusion is otherwise likely, the chair may find it advisable to employ four steps: first, to reread the entire main motion or resolution (or the paragraph or portion that the amendment would affect); second, to read the proposed amendment; third, to read the motion, resolution, or affected portion as it would stand if the amendment were adopted; and fourth, to make it clear once more that it is the amendment that is to be voted on.

12:41 As an example of secondary amendment by inserting, assume that there are pending: (1) a resolution, “Resolved, That the Society purchase the property adjoining the present Headquarters”; and (2) (immediately pending) a primary amendment, “to add the words, ‘and convert it into a parking lot.’” (Details as to probable costs of proposed phases of the project are assumed to be known.)

MEMBER X (obtaining the floor): I move to insert in the pending amendment the word “landscaped” before “parking lot.” (Second.)

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to amend by inserting in the primary amendment the word “landscaped” before “parking lot.” If the word is inserted, the primary amendment will be, “to add the words, ‘and convert it into a landscaped parking lot.’” The question is on inserting the word “landscaped.”

12:42 It should be noted that in the preceding example the chair gives the primary amendment as it would read if the secondary amendment were adopted.

12:43 Debate, if any, must be confined to the issue: If the conversion to a parking lot is to be included in the project at this time, should the lot be landscaped? When this debate has ended, the chair puts the secondary amendment to a vote, announces the result, and states the question before the assembly, as follows:

CHAIR: The question is on inserting in the primary amendment the word “landscaped” before “parking lot.” If the word is inserted, the primary amendment will be, “To add to the resolution for the purchase of the adjoining property, the words, ‘and convert it into a landscaped parking lot.’” It should be noted that this vote will not decide whether a parking lot is to be part of the project. This vote will determine only whether the parking lot will be landscaped if it is constructed. A vote of aye is for landscaping. A vote of no is against landscaping. Those in favor of inserting the word “landscaped” in the amendment, say aye…. Those opposed, say no…. The ayes have it and the word is inserted. The question is now on the primary amendment as amended, which is, “to add to the resolution the words, ‘and convert it into a landscaped parking lot.’” If the amendment is adopted, the resolution will read, “Resolved, That the Society purchase the property adjoining the present Headquarters and convert it into a landscaped parking lot.” Adoption of this amendment will mean that if the property is purchased by the Society, there will be a parking lot—which will be landscaped. The question is on the amendment.

12:44 Debate and voting on the question proceed as described above.

12:45 Amendments are sometimes so simple or acceptable that they may be adopted by unanimous consent (see 4:58–63). For example, assume that while a main motion is pending, “That the Properties Committee be directed to secure estimates for the necessary building repairs,” a member moves “to amend by inserting the words ‘at least three’ before ‘estimates.’” If the chair senses that there is general approval, he may say, “If there is no objection, the words ‘at least three’ will be inserted. The wording would then be ‘to secure at least three estimates.’ [Pause.] Since there is no objection, the words are inserted.”

12:46 2(a). To Strike Out Words. A motion to strike out words must specify their location when it is not otherwise clear.

12:47 When a motion to strike out certain words is made, it can be applied only to consecutive words; but the words to be struck out may become separated as a result of secondary amendments, in which case the primary amendment is voted on in a form in which it could not have been moved directly. To strike out separated words, the best method is to make a motion to strike out the entire clause or sentence containing the separated words and insert a new clause or sentence as desired. Separated words can also be struck out by separate motions or as part of a series of amendments offered in one motion (see 12:14).

12:48 If a motion to strike out certain words is adopted, the same words cannot be inserted again during the same session unless the place or the wording is so changed as to make a new proposition. If a motion to strike out certain words fails, it is still in order—subject to the requirement that the words involved must be consecutive—to move:

1) To strike out only a part of the same words.
2) To strike out all or a part of the same words together with some others.
3) To strike out all or a part of the same words and insert different ones.
4) To strike out all or a part of the same words together with some others and insert different words.

12:49 It is important to note that: The motion to amend by striking out certain words can be amended only by striking out words from the primary amendment. The effect of such a secondary amendment is that words struck out of the primary amendment will remain in the main motion regardless of whether the primary amendment is adopted or rejected. For example, assume that the following are pending: (1) a main motion directing the secretary to write to Congressmen Altman, Brock, Crowley, Davidson, and Edwards; (2) a primary amendment to strike out “Brock, Crowley, Davidson”; and (3) a secondary amendment to strike out “Crowley” from the primary amendment. If the secondary amendment is adopted, the primary amendment then becomes “to strike out ‘Brock’ and ‘Davidson’” from the main motion—so that Crowley’s name will remain in the main motion regardless of the outcome of the vote on the primary amendment, which no longer affects him. As a consequence of the rule stated at the beginning of this paragraph, a primary amendment to strike out a single word cannot be amended.

12:50 When a motion is made to strike out a sentence that might desirably be retained with some changes, the form of secondary amendment allowed for motions to strike out certain words may not be readily applicable. In such a case, a member can say in debate on the primary amendment that he believes the sentence should be reworded in a way which he can then state, and that if the motion to strike out the present sentence is adopted he will move to insert his new version. If the motion to strike out is lost, he can also move to strike out the present sentence and insert his new version.

12:51 2(b). To Strike Out a Paragraph. There is an essential difference between the motion to strike out a paragraph and the motion to strike out certain words, which lies in the rules and effect of secondary amendment. When it is moved to strike out an entire paragraph, the paragraph that would be struck out is opened to improvement by secondary amendment in any of the three forms relating to words (inserting or adding; striking out; or striking out and inserting) before the vote is taken on the primary amendment. If the primary amendment to strike out is voted down, the paragraph then remains in the resolution with any changes that were made by secondary amendment. The following differences in the effect of a secondary amendment to strike out—dependent on whether the primary amendment to strike out involves only certain words or a paragraph—should be particularly noted:

• If the primary amendment is to strike out certain words, then words struck out of the primary amendment will remain in the resolution regardless of the final vote on the primary amendment (as explained under Strike Out Words, above).
• But if the primary amendment is to strike out a paragraph, then words struck out of that paragraph in the process of secondary amendment are out of the resolution regardless of the final vote on the primary amendment.

12:52 After a paragraph has been struck out, it cannot be inserted again unless the wording (or, possibly, the place) is changed in a way that presents an essentially new question. After a motion to strike out a particular paragraph has been voted down, any amendment presenting a materially new question involving the same paragraph, or any part of it, is still in order.

12:53 Form and Example: 2(a), 2(b). To Strike Out (Words or a Paragraph). The motion to strike out may be made in such forms as “I move to strike out the word ‘concrete’ before ‘pavement’ in Line 5”; or “I move to strike out the third paragraph of the platform statement.” Variations similar to those given for inserting or adding (12:32) are applicable.

12:54 Assume that the following main motion is pending: “That the Bowling League establish a division open to the juniors and seniors of Southwood High School.”

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move to amend by striking out the words “juniors and.” (Second.)
CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to amend by striking out the words “juniors and.” If the amendment is adopted, the main motion will be to “establish a division open to the seniors of Southwood High School.” The question is on striking out the words “juniors and.”

12:55 From this point, the procedure is similar to that already illustrated for inserting or adding.

12:56 3(a). To Strike Out and Insert (applying to words). The motion to strike out and insert is especially applicable in situations where it may be impossible to secure the desired result without making the act of “striking out” inseparable from that of “inserting”—as may happen if some members are unwilling to vote for the one unless assured of the other. The two parts of this motion cannot be separated, either by secondary amendment or by a Division of a Question.

12:57 To avoid confusion with the form of amendment known as Substitute (12:69–90), which applies to paragraphs or longer elements, the word substitute should not be used in connection with the motion to strike out and insert, which applies to words.

12:58 Motions to strike out and insert fall into two types:
- those by which a different wording is inserted in the same place; and
- those by which the same wording struck out of one place is inserted in a different place.

12:59 The two parts of the motion to strike out and insert must not represent two independent questions, unless the mover receives unanimous consent to make such a combined motion; rather, the two parts must be germane to each other. Thus, in motions of the first type mentioned in the previous paragraph—to strike words out of and insert words into the same place—the words to be inserted must in some way be related to, or address the same issue as, the words to be struck out; and in motions of the second type—to strike words out of one place and insert words into a different place—the words to be inserted must not be materially different from the words to be struck out.

12:60 The first type of the motion to strike out and insert—the kind that proposes to insert a different wording in the same place—is perhaps more common.

12:61 When such a primary amendment is offered, the chair states the question on it and lets debate of its merits begin in the usual way. For purposes of secondary amendment, however, this type of motion is treated as if resolved into its two elements, with secondary amendment of each element following the rules that would apply to two separate motions for primary amendment—one to strike out (amendable only by striking out) and another to insert (amendable in any of three forms relating to words). A single secondary amendment involving both elements of a primary amendment to strike out and insert is not in order. If a motion to strike out and insert involves enough words that several secondary amendments—particularly to the words to be struck out—might be possible, it is often best to take any amendments to the words to be struck out first, because members who wish to perfect the words to be inserted by secondary amendment may need to know exactly what language those words will replace, to be able to perfect them effectively. Amendments to the words to be inserted are then taken up after amendments to the words to be struck out have been disposed of. But the chair should make a judgment depending on the conditions as to whether the assembly wishes to follow this procedure or will find it helpful. In any event, the primary amendment remains open to debate at all times while it is pending with no secondary amendment pending, and this debate goes into the merits of both parts of the motion viewed as a single whole.

12:62 While a primary amendment to strike out and insert certain words is pending, if an admissible secondary amendment to the words to be struck out is introduced and no amendments to the words to be inserted have been proposed, the chair simply proceeds to entertain the secondary amendment, letting debate on the primary amendment resume after the secondary amendment has been dealt with. But the first time that a secondary amendment to the words to be inserted is offered—assuming a number of amendments to the words to be struck out might be possible—the chair has the option, as described in the preceding paragraph, of saying: “The chair believes it would be better to follow the procedure of taking any amendments to the words to be struck out first, as permitted under the rules. Accordingly, before entertaining the amendment just offered, the chair will ask: Are there any amendments [or “any further amendments”] to the words to be struck out?” When it appears that no one else wishes to propose an amendment to the words to be struck out, the chair then says: “The primary amendment as amended is open to debate, and secondary amendments to the words to be inserted are now in order.” After reasonable opportunity to offer any amendments of the latter type has been given, secondary amendments to either element are in order. When these and any further debate have concluded, the vote is taken on the motion to strike out and insert as it stands after secondary amendment.

12:63 After a motion to strike out and insert has been adopted, what has been struck out and what has been inserted are subject to the same rules regarding further amendment during the same session, as if the striking out and the inserting had been done by separate motions: The inserted matter cannot be struck out, and the matter that has been struck out cannot be inserted again, except through a reconsideration of the vote on the amendment, or through changes in the wording or the place in a way that presents a new question (under the rules already given for Insert, or Add, and for Strike Out).

12:64 If a motion to strike out and insert is voted down, it is still in order:

• to make either of the separate motions to strike out, or to insert, the same words that would have been struck out or inserted by the combined motion that was lost; or
• to make another motion to strike out and insert—provided that the change in either the wording to be struck out or the wording to be inserted presents a question materially different from the one that was voted down.

12:65 When a primary amendment to strike out a passage of any length or complexity and insert a new version is pending and some members would prefer to insert something different or keep something closer to the original, it may be difficult or impossible to reach the desired end by secondary amendment. Situations of this kind can occur especially when the amendment relates to one or more complete sentences that do not constitute an entire paragraph. In such a case, a member should speak against the pending primary amendment and say that if it is rejected he will offer a new motion to strike out the same passage and insert the version he desires—which he should then state. He should present his case as strongly as possible, because if the first proposed version is inserted, it cannot be changed afterward during the same session except in connection with a different question.
As already explained in connection with the rules for the motion to strike out, the motion to strike out and insert can be used to obtain the effect of striking out or modifying separated words. To do this, a member can move to strike out of the resolution a passage long enough to include all of the words to be removed or changed, and insert the revised passage. If several changes in a paragraph are desired, it is usually better to rewrite the paragraph and offer the new version as a substitute, as explained below.

Form and Example: 3(a). To Strike Out and Insert (applying to words). As an example of a motion to strike out and insert, assume that the following resolution is pending: “Resolved, That the Citizens’ Association endorse the Rockville site for the new Community College.”

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move to amend by striking out “Rockville” and inserting “Chatham.” (Second.)

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to strike out “Rockville” and insert “Chatham.” If the amendment is adopted, the resolution will be to “endorse the Chatham site for the new Community College.” The question is on striking out “Rockville” and inserting “Chatham.”

Debate on the amendment is limited to the relative advantages of the two sites. After the amendment is debated, the chair puts it to vote, as in the case already illustrated for Insert or Add. Debate on the resolution can go into the question of whether the association should express approval of any site.

3(b). To Substitute. A motion to Amend by striking out an entire paragraph, section, or article—or a complete main motion or resolution—and inserting a different paragraph or other unit in its place is called a motion to substitute, and the paragraph or resolution to be inserted is said to be offered (or proposed) as “a substitute.” A substitute can be offered for a paragraph or a main motion of only one sentence, and in such a case the paragraph proposed as a substitute can contain several sentences. (For the replacement of sentences within a paragraph, see below.) A substitute offered for a main motion or resolution, or for a paragraph within a resolution, is a primary amendment and can therefore be moved only when no other amendment is pending. If a motion proposes to replace one or more paragraphs that are involved in a pending primary amendment, it is a secondary amendment to which the term substitute is also applicable.6

12:70 A primary amendment to substitute is treated similarly to a motion to strike out and insert as described in 12:56–68. It is open to debate at all times while it is pending with no secondary amendment pending; and such debate may go fully into the merits of both the original text and the substitute, since this is necessary to determine the desirability of the primary amendment. But for purposes of secondary amendment, the motion to substitute is looked upon as resolved into its two elements, the paragraph to be struck out and the paragraph to be inserted. In contrast to the rules for striking out and inserting words, however, when a motion to substitute is under consideration the paragraph to be struck out as well as the paragraph to be inserted can be perfected by secondary amendment in any of the three basic forms (inserting or adding; striking out; or striking out and inserting), since this is the procedure when either of the separate motions to insert or to strike out is applied to the paragraph.

12:71 As in the case of a motion to strike out and insert words, the chair has the option of accepting only amendments to the paragraph to be struck out first, and then only amendments to the proposed substitute, thereafter accepting either type of secondary amendment. Following this procedure is likely to be more often indicated in the case of a motion to substitute, particularly if a substantive issue hangs on such a motion, as in the example given below. After all secondary amendments have been disposed of and after any further debate on the motion to substitute, the vote is taken on whether to make this substitution.

12:72 For replacing an unbroken part of a paragraph when the part to be replaced consists of (or contains) one or more complete sentences, there is an option between offering the amendment as a motion to strike out the part and insert the new matter (that is, as a motion to strike out and insert), or moving it in the form of a substitute for the entire paragraph with only the desired part changed. Either of these motions, as applied to the same case, will present substantially the same question when it is made, but the effect of each of them is different as to permissible secondary amendment. If much of the paragraph is involved in such a case, it is generally better to offer the desired amendment in the form of a substitute. If this method is used, however, secondary amendment can also involve the portion of the paragraph in which no change was proposed initially.

12:73 In taking the vote on whether to make the substitution, the chair should first read both the paragraph of the original text and the proposed substitute—as they stand at the time as amended. Even if the entire resolution or main motion is replaced, adopting the motion to substitute only amends the resolution, which remains pending as amended.

12:74 After a paragraph, section, or version of a resolution has been substituted for another, the substituted paragraph or resolution cannot be amended during the same session except by adding something that does not modify the paragraph’s existing content—as is true of any paragraph that has been inserted. The paragraph that has been replaced cannot be inserted again during the same session unless a material change in the wording (or possibly, the place) makes a new question—as is true of any paragraph that has been struck out.

12:75 If a motion to substitute is lost, the assembly has decided only that the paragraph proposed as a substitute shall not replace the one specified. The same proposed new paragraph can still replace a different one, or can simply be inserted. On the other hand, the paragraph that was retained in the resolution can be further amended, or struck out (if it is not the entire resolution); or it still can be replaced by a different substitute.

12:76 When a question is being considered by paragraph or seriatim (28), it is in order to move a substitute for any paragraph or section at the time that the paragraph or section is opened to amendment. But it is not in order to move a substitute for the entire document until all of the paragraphs or sections have been individually considered and the point is reached when the chair announces that the entire paper is open to amendment.

12:77 If a resolution is referred to a committee while a primary amendment—or a primary and a secondary amendment—are pending, the committee can report by recommending a substitute for the resolution, even though the substitute cannot become pending until the other amendments have been voted on in their normal order. Thus, when a committee has so reported, the chair first states the question on the secondary amendment that was pending when the resolution was committed, puts the secondary amendment to vote, and then continues with the primary amendment to which it applied. As soon as this primary amendment is disposed of, the chair states the question on the substitute recommended by the committee, and proceeds as he would with any other motion to
In a similar way, if a resolution is referred to a committee while a substitute and a secondary amendment (either to the original or to the substitute) are pending, the committee can report in favor of either version, with any desired recommendation as to secondary amendment; or the committee can recommend rejection of the pending substitute and propose a new substitute in its place. In all such cases, the chair starts with the parliamentary situation as it was when the resolution was committed; he then proceeds as with any motion to substitute, and states the question on any new amendment (recommended by the committee) as soon as it is in order for that amendment to be pending under the usual rules.

The motion to substitute often provides a convenient and timesaving method for handling a poorly framed resolution, or for introducing a different and better approach to the real question raised by a main motion. While changes by separate amendments are in progress, a member who feels that he has a better solution by substitution can indicate its features briefly and announce his intention of offering the substitute as soon as no other amendment is pending. If the member wishing to propose the substitute thinks it appropriate, he can try to bring the pending amendments to an immediate vote by moving the Previous Question (16) on them.

An amendment in the form of a substitute can also be used to defeat or work against the purpose of the measure originally introduced. Such a stratagem can be utilized with a view either to converting the measure into a weakened form before its final adoption, or to substituting a version that is likely to be rejected in the final vote. It should be noted that a vote in favor of a substitute for an entire resolution or main motion is ordinarily a vote to kill any provisions of the original version.

12:81 Properly applied, the rules for the treatment of motions to substitute automatically operate in fairness to both sides when there is disagreement as to the preferability of the original or the substitute. Under the procedure of initially accepting amendments to each element of the primary amendment exclusively—which is generally indicated whenever such disagreement exists—the proponents of the original version are first given the opportunity to amend their proposition into a more acceptable form in the light of conditions revealed by the introduction of the substitute. When this process is correctly handled as described 12:61–62 and 12:70–71, it tends to ensure that the provisions of the version first offered receive appropriate consideration, without impeding free debate of the proposal to substitute. Furthermore, by the requirement that internal amendment of the substitute be done before the vote on the motion to make the substitution, the members are protected from having to decide whether to reject the original version without knowing what may finally replace it.

12:82 Form and Example: 3(b). To Substitute. As an example of a motion to substitute, assume that the following resolution is pending: “Resolved, That the Parish Federation undertake the construction and equipping of a new service wing for the Parish House, to be financed as far as possible by a mortgage on the present building.”

12:83 Debate points strongly to a need for further investigation, but many members are determined to secure immediate authorization. The meeting seems evenly divided, and the outcome is unpredictable.

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move to substitute for the pending resolution the following: “Resolved, That the Parish Board be directed to engage appropriate professional consultants to make a survey of, and prepare a complete report on, the need, probable cost, feasible methods of financing, and maintenance of a new service wing for the Parish House.” (Second.)

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to amend by substituting for the pending resolution the following: [reading the substitute submitted by Member A]. The motion to substitute proposes that the resolution just read shall come before the assembly in place of the pending resolution. [Debate.]

MEMBER L (who favors the pending resolution and is, therefore, opposed to the motion to substitute—obtaining the floor): I move to amend the proposed substitute by adding the words “within twenty days.” (Second.)

CHAIR: The chair believes it will be preferable to take any amendments to the pending resolution first, as permitted under the rules. Such amendments, if adopted, will affect the wording in which the pending resolution will come to a final vote if the motion to substitute fails. Accordingly, before entertaining the amendment just offered, the chair will call for any amendments to the pending resolution, which he will first reread. The pending resolution is as follows: “Resolved, That the Parish Federation undertake the construction and equipping of a new service wing for the Parish House, to be financed as far as possible by a mortgage on the present building.” Are there any amendments to the pending resolution?

MEMBER X (obtaining the floor): I move to amend the pending resolution by striking out everything after the word “undertake” and inserting the words “a campaign to raise funds for the construction and equipping of a new service wing for the Parish House.” (Second.)

12:84 The chair states the question on this amendment, making its effect clear, and, after debate, puts it to vote. For purposes of the example, assume that the proponents of the original resolution differ on the amendment, some voting for it, others opposing it. Also, since the adoption of this amendment presumably would make the pending resolution less objectionable to those who feel that the proposed project is presently ill advised and who therefore hope that the substitution will be made, most of those members probably vote for the amendment. Assume that it is adopted. The chair announces the result as follows:

CHAIR: The ayes have it and the amendment is adopted. The pending resolution now reads, “Resolved, That the Parish Federation undertake a campaign to raise funds for the construction and equipping of a new service wing for the Parish House.” The question is on the motion to substitute. [Further debate on the relative merits of the pending resolution and the proposed substitute.]

MEMBER L (who favors the pending resolution—obtaining the floor): I move to amend the substitute by adding “within twenty days.” (Second.)

CHAIR: Before entertaining the amendment just offered, the chair will again ask: Are there any further amendments to the pending resolution? [Pause.] There being none, it is moved and seconded to amend the proposed substitute by adding the words “within twenty days.” If the amendment is adopted, the substitute will read, “Resolved, That the Parish Board be directed to engage appropriate professional consultants to make a survey of, and prepare a complete report on, the need, probable cost, feasible methods of financing, and maintenance of a new service wing for the Parish House within twenty days.” The question is on amending the proposed substitute by adding the words “within twenty days.”

12:85 Brief debate shows that the proposed survey could not be properly carried out in twenty days. Assume that this amendment is voted down.

MEMBER B (who is in favor of the motion to substitute, but fears it will fail unless some time limit is specified—obtaining the floor): I move to amend the substitute by adding “within sixty days.” (Second.)
12:86 The chair states the question on this amendment and (after brief debate) puts it to vote. Assume that the amendment is adopted. In announcing the result, the chair continues:

CHAIR: The ayes have it and the amendment is adopted. The proposed substitute now reads, “Resolved, That the Parish Board be directed to engage… for the Parish House within sixty days.” Are you ready for the question on the motion to substitute?

12:87 After further amendment of the proposed substitute, the chair says:

CHAIR: Are there any further amendments to the proposed substitute? [Pause.] There being none, it is now in order to offer amendments either to the pending resolution or to the proposed substitute.

12:88 When all debate and secondary amendment has concluded, the chair puts to vote the motion to substitute. Both resolutions are read, usually by the chair—the pending resolution first, then the resolution proposed as a substitute.

CHAIR: The question is on the motion to substitute. The chair will read the pending resolution first, then the resolution proposed as a substitute. The pending resolution is: “Resolved, That the Parish Federation undertake a campaign to raise funds for the construction and equipping of a new service wing for the Parish House.” The resolution proposed as a substitute is: “Resolved, That the Parish Board be directed to engage appropriate professional consultants to make a survey of, and prepare a complete report on, the need, probable cost,… within sixty days.” The question is: Shall the resolution last read be substituted for the pending resolution? Those in favor of the motion to substitute, say aye…. Those opposed, say no….

CHAIR: The ayes have it and the motion to substitute is adopted. The question is now on the resolution: [reading the resolution directing the employment of professional consultants].

Or:

CHAIR: The noes have it and the motion to substitute is lost. The question is now on the resolution: [reading the resolution for a fundraising campaign].

12:90 Regardless of which resolution is now pending, there may be further debate. If the motion to substitute has been adopted, the resolution now pending is in the position of a paragraph that has been inserted, and it can no longer be amended during the same session except by adding nonmodifying matter. On the other hand, if the motion to substitute has been lost, the resolution for the fund drive can be further amended; but in determining whether an amendment now offered presents a new question and can therefore be admitted during the same session, account must be taken of any motions to amend that were voted on before the motion to substitute was introduced, or while it was pending.

12:91 Friendly Amendments. The term “friendly amendment” is often used to describe an amendment offered by someone who is in sympathy with the purposes of the main motion, in the belief that the amendment will either improve the statement or effect of the main motion, presumably to the satisfaction of its maker, or will increase the chances of the main motion’s adoption. Regardless of whether or not the maker of the main motion “accepts” the amendment, it must be opened to debate and voted on formally (unless adopted by unanimous consent) and is handled under the same rules as amendments generally (see 33:11–19).
Filling Blanks

12:92 Filling blanks, although not a form of amendment in itself, is a closely related device by which an unlimited number of alternative choices for a particular specification in a main motion or primary amendment can be pending at the same time. In effect, it permits an exception to the rule (12:13) that only one primary and one secondary amendment can be pending at a time, and in certain cases it has distinct advantages.

12:93 In amending by the ordinary method, a maximum of three alternatives can be pending at once, and the last one moved must be voted on first. In filling blanks, the number of alternatives is not limited; members have an opportunity to weigh all choices before voting and to vote on them in a fair and logical order. Among cases adapted to such treatment are main motions or primary amendments containing names of persons or places, dates, numbers, or amounts.

12:94 The basic procedure for filling blanks is as follows: After a blank in a pending motion has been created by any of the methods described below, members suggest alternatives to fill the blank, and these are stated by the chair. When debate on the suggestions has ended (or, if the pending motion is undebatable, when no more suggestions are offered), the assembly decides, by majority vote, which suggestion(s) shall fill the blank. The vote that fills a blank does not decide the question that contained the blank. As soon as the blank has been filled, the chair states the question on the adoption of the completed motion, which remains pending.

12:95 Creating a Blank. A blank to be filled can be created in one of three ways:
a) A member can offer a motion or an amendment containing a blank: for example, “Resolved, That Lodge No. 432 renovate the headquarters at a cost not to exceed $______”; or an amendment to a main motion can propose “to add ‘provided that estimates be received on or before ______.’”
b) A member can move that a blank be created. For example, assume that the pending resolution is: “Resolved, That Lodge No. 432 renovate the headquarters at a cost not to exceed $300,000.” Any member can move “to create a blank by striking out of the pending resolution the sum ‘$300,000.’” If such a motion is adopted, the specification struck out to create the blank automatically becomes one of the proposals for filling it—as “$300,000” in the example. Although the motion to create a blank may appear to resemble a motion to amend by striking out and inserting, it is in fact an incidental motion (see 6:15). It is not in order to create a blank in a motion on which the Previous Question has been ordered. The motion to create a blank requires a second, but it is neither debatable nor amendable; it can also be made and voted on while a primary or a secondary amendment relating to the subject specification is pending. For example, assuming the same pending resolution as above, the identical motion to create a blank by striking out “$300,000” can be made while a primary amendment “to strike out ‘$300,000’ and insert ‘$350,000’” is also pending. Adoption of the motion to create a blank in such a case (before the amendment is voted on) disposes of the amendment (which is thereafter ignored) and causes both specifications—the one in the pending resolution and the corresponding one in the amendment—to become proposals for filling the blank; as “$300,000” and “$350,000” in the example.
c) The chair can suggest the creation of a blank, as follows: “The chair suggests creating a blank by striking out ‘$300,000.’ If there is no objection, a blank will be created. [Pause.] There is no objection; the blank is created.” If a member objects, the chair puts the question to a vote, treating the question just as he would treat a motion to create a blank made as described above.

12:96 Making Suggestions to Fill a Blank. When a blank exists or has been created, the chair calls for suggestions, by asking for them in a manner appropriate to the particular question, such as by asking, “How many members shall the committee consist of?”; or, “In the pending resolution relating to the renovation of the headquarters, the amounts $350,000 and $300,000 have been proposed to fill the blank specifying the maximum cost. Are there any further suggestions?” Any number of members can then suggest different names, places, numbers, dates, or amounts for filling the blank. A member need not be recognized by the chair to make a suggestion unless he or she wishes to speak in debate on it at the same time (see below). No second is required. As soon as a member has made a suggestion (or, if the member had obtained the floor, as soon as the member has yielded the floor), the chair repeats the member’s suggestion and calls for further suggestions.

12:97 No member can suggest more than one proposal for filling a blank—or, when the blank can be filled with multiple suggestions, such as in a motion to appoint members of a committee, more than the number allowed for in the blank. In the latter case, a member cannot make more than one suggestion at a time, if any objection is made, but must wait until after all other members have had the same opportunity to make their suggestions.

12:98 Debate on the Suggestions. Proposals to fill a blank in a debatable motion are debatable. When there is no response to the chair’s call for further suggestions, the chair asks, “Are you ready for the question?” or “Is there any debate?” To speak in debate, a member must first be recognized by the chair. The member may then speak in favor of or against a suggestion made previously or make a new suggestion and speak in favor of it.

12:99 As a consequence of the rules stated in the preceding paragraphs, debate on the comparative merits of the different suggestions may take place both concurrently with the making of suggestions and after all suggestions have been made. In any event, in this debate the underlying question is that of choosing the suggestion(s) that shall fill the blank, and each member is therefore permitted to speak no more than twice per day on that question, regardless of the number of suggestions made. When no further suggestions are offered, and there is no further debate, a vote is taken on the suggestions, as described below.

12:100 Proposals to fill a blank are not amendable.

12:101 Motions to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate or for the Previous Question can be applied to the consideration of suggestions, and when voting on the suggestions has been ordered by adoption of either of these motions, no further suggestions for filling the blank may be made at the time the order goes into effect. However, if a member obtains the floor and moves the Previous Question before a reasonable opportunity to make suggestions has been given, the chair must call for suggestions before stating the motion for the Previous Question.

12:102 Voting on the Suggestions. The suggestions for filling a blank can be voted on by any of the regular methods (4:35ff., 45:11ff.), in which case each of the proposals is voted on, in turn, as a separate question. (The order in which suggestions are voted on in particular cases is discussed below.) As soon as one of the suggestions (or the proper number of suggestions that will fill the blank) receives a majority vote, the chair declares the blank thereby filled, and no vote is taken on any remaining suggestions.

12:103 Alternatively, the assembly may direct that voting be by ballot or roll call (see 30; 45:18ff.), in which case each member marks or announces his or her preference for the choice (or choices) that shall fill the blank—which need not be confined to the suggestions previously made—and the blank is filled by the choice receiving a majority of the votes cast (or the proper number of choices receiving a majority that receive the largest number of votes; cf. 46:33). Voting by ballot or roll call is seldom used except in the case of names, however, unless there is keen competition—for example, among several cities seeking a convention. When names are being voted on, the ballot has an advantage in more truly revealing the will of the voting body; frequently when the vote is by voice, those whose names are voted on first are more likely to be elected.

12:104 It should be noted that the vote that fills a blank does not decide the main question or other pending question that contained the blank. When the blank is filled, the chair must immediately state the question on the adoption of the completed motion.

12:105 Normally, blanks in a pending motion should be filled before the motion itself is voted on. However, if the pending motion is included in an adopted order for the Previous Question, that order must be carried out even if the blank has not yet been filled—and even if no suggestions have been offered (note, however, that a reasonable opportunity to make suggestions must always be given; see 12:101). This may happen, for example, when two thirds of those voting are confident that the motion will be rejected in any case. But if the motion is actually adopted with an unfilled blank, the assembly immediately proceeds to fill it, and no new subject (except a privileged one) may be introduced before the motion is thereby completed.

12:106 Filling Blanks by Unanimous Consent. If no more suggestions are offered than the number required to fill the blank, then unless the voting is to be by ballot or roll call, those suggestions are deemed inserted by unanimous consent, and no vote is taken on inserting them. This procedure is especially common when filling a blank with names (see below).

12:107 Filling a Blank with Names. The following principles apply to the process of filling a blank with one or more names:

a) The procedure for filling a blank with one name is practically the same as for making nominations. The chair repeats each name as it is proposed, and finally takes a vote on each in that same order, until one receives a majority.

b) If the blank is to be filled with more than one name and no more are suggested than are required, the names are deemed inserted by unanimous consent (cf. 46:40 and 50:13(b)).

c) If more names are suggested than are required, the chair takes a vote on each in the order of its proposal until enough to fill the blank have received a majority vote. The names remaining in the list as proposed are ignored, since the assembly has decided which names shall fill the blank.

d) If the number of names is not specified, the chair takes a vote on each name suggested; and all names approved by a majority vote are inserted.

12:108 Filling a Blank with Amounts of Money. Sometimes the particular nature of the blank determines the order in which proposals for filling it should be put to vote. Typical instances of this kind are blanks to be filled with amounts of money. In such cases it is advisable, whenever a logical order is apparent, to arrange the proposed entries so that the one least likely to be acceptable will be voted on first, and so on. New supporters may then be gained with each succeeding vote until a majority in favor of one entry is reached.

12:109 As an example of the procedure for filling a blank with an amount of money, assume that a resolution to renovate the headquarters “at a cost not to exceed $_____” is pending, and that it is proposed to fill the blank with the following amounts: $350,000, $250,000, $400,000, and $300,000. The character of this measure—to spend money—indicates that the amounts should be arranged and voted on in order from the highest to lowest. If $400,000 is rejected, the vote is taken next on $350,000; and if that is not adopted, the chair puts the question on $300,000. If that amount is adopted, no vote is taken on $250,000, and the chair immediately says, “The amount of $300,000 fills the blank. The question is now on the resolution: ‘Resolved, That... at a cost not to exceed $300,000.’” Note that if the smallest sum had been voted on first, it might have been adopted, with the result that those who preferred the added advantages possible through a larger expenditure would have been cut off from considering larger sums.

12:110 On the other hand, suppose that the motion or resolution is “to sell the headquarters for an amount not less than $______.” In the case of such a motion—to accept a sum of money in settlement—the amounts being considered should be arranged and voted on in order from the smallest to the largest. Thus, those who are willing to sell for the smallest amount, and some additional members, will be willing to sell for the next larger sum, and so on, until the smallest sum for which the majority is willing to sell is reached.

12:111 Filling a Blank with Places, Dates, or Numbers. When a blank is to be filled with a place, date, or number, a choice of methods for arranging and voting on the proposals can be made as follows:

a) Voting on the suggestions in the order in which they are offered, as when filling a blank with names.

b) Voting on the proposals in the order of their probable acceptability, beginning with the least popular choice, as when filling a blank with an amount.

c) (If there is no clear-cut reason why either increasing or decreasing order would be preferable), voting first on the largest number, longest time, or most distant date, and so on.

The particular circumstances must determine the order to be used.

12:112 If an amount has been struck out in order to create a blank, that amount is voted on in its proper place in the logical sequence among the other amounts. If a name has been struck out to create a blank, however, it comes first in the order of names to be voted on.

12:113 (For further examples of both creating and filling a blank, see 13:7(6), 13:8, 13:12, 13:26, 27:4, 31:3.)

13:1 The subsidiary motion to Commit or Refer is generally used to send a pending question to a relatively small group of selected persons—a committee—so that the question may be carefully investigated and put into better condition for the assembly to consider.

13:2 The motion to Commit also has three variations whose object is not to turn the main question over to a smaller group, but to permit the assembly’s full meeting body to consider it with the greater freedom of debate that is allowed in committees—that is, with no limit on the number of times a member can speak. These forms of the motion are:

   a) to “go into a committee of the whole”;
   b) to “go into quasi committee of the whole” (or, to “consider as if in committee of the whole”); and
   c) to “consider informally.”

13:3 “Informal consideration” is the simplest of the three methods and is usually the best in ordinary societies whose meetings are not large (see 52:24–27).

13:4 The term recommit is applied to a motion that proposes to refer a question a second time, either to the same committee that previously considered it or to a different one.

13:5 All of the rules in this section, except when stated to the contrary, apply equally to variations (a), (b), and (c) above, and to a motion to recommit.

13:6 When a motion proposes to assign a task or refer a matter to a committee when no question is pending, such a motion is not the subsidiary motion to Commit, but is a main motion. It is an incidental main motion if the assignment or referral is pursuant to a subject on which the assembly has already taken some action; but it is an original main motion if the matter to be assigned or referred relates to a new subject.
The subsidiary motion to Commit or Refer:

1. Takes precedence over the main motion, over the subsidiary motions to Postpone Indefinitely and to Amend, and over the incidental motions for Division of a Question and for Consideration by Paragraph or Seriatim. It takes precedence over a debatable appeal that adheres to the main question (or a point of order that adheres to the main question and has been referred by the chair to the judgment of the assembly and that is debatable when so referred, 23:2(2)), if no motions other than those named in the preceding sentence are pending or involved in the appeal or point of order; and it also takes precedence over a debatable nonadhering appeal or point of order to which it is applied. It yields to the subsidiary motions to Postpone Definitely, to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, for the Previous Question, and to Lay on the Table; to a motion to Amend that is applied to it; to all privileged motions; and to all applicable incidental motions.

2. Can be applied to main motions, with any amendments or motions for Division of a Question or Consideration by Paragraph or Seriatim that may be pending; can be thus applied to orders of the day (18, 41) or questions of privilege (19) while they are actually pending as main motions, and such an application is independent of, and does not affect, any other matter that they may have interrupted; can be applied to debatable appeals (or points of order referred by the chair to the judgment of the assembly that are debatable when so referred, 23:2(2)), but if such an appeal or point of order adheres (10:35) to the main question (that is, if it must be decided before the main question is decided), the motion to Commit can be applied to the appeal or point of order only in connection with the main question, which also goes to the committee (see also 13:19); and can be applied to nonadhering debatable appeals (or points of order submitted to the judgment of the assembly) separately, without affecting the status of any pending questions not involved in the appeal or point of order. It cannot be applied to an undebatable appeal. It cannot be applied to the motion to Reconsider alone—that is, it cannot be applied to a motion to reconsider a main question; and if a main question is committed while a motion to reconsider an amendment is pending or has been made but not yet taken up, such a motion to Reconsider is thereafter ignored. It cannot be applied to any subsidiary motion, except that its application to a main question also affects any motions to Amend that may be pending, as noted above. It cannot be moved after the adoption of a motion to close debate on the main question at a definite hour or to limit the total time allowed for debate; but it remains in order if only a limitation on the length of speeches is in force (see 15). Motions to Amend, to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, and for the Previous Question can be applied to it without affecting the main question. The motion to Commit cannot be definitely postponed or laid on the table alone, but when it is pending the main question can be definitely postponed or laid on the table, and in such a case, the motion to Commit is also postponed or carried to the table. It cannot be postponed indefinitely.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is debatable. The debate can extend only to the desirability of committing the main question and to the appropriate details of the motion to Commit, as explained below, however, and not to the merits of the main question.

6. Is amendable as follows: in the case of a standing committee, as to the committee to which the main question is to be referred; in the case of a special committee, as to the committee’s composition and manner of selection; and in the case of any form of committee, as to any instructions the committee is to follow. It can be amended so as to change from any one of the five forms of the motion (listed in 13:12) to another, or a blank can be created (12:92–113) and the suggested forms voted on in the order given in 13:12.

7. Requires a majority vote.

8. An affirmative vote on the motion to Commit can be reconsidered if the committee has not begun consideration of the question. Thereafter, if the assembly wishes to take the question out of the hands of the committee, the motion to Discharge a Committee (36) must be used. A negative vote on the motion to Commit can be reconsidered only until such time as progress in business or debate has been sufficient to make it essentially a new question. Thereafter, the motion can be renewed (see 38:7).
Further Rules and Explanation

13:8 Necessary Details of the Motion. The motion to Commit usually should include all necessary details:

a) If the main question is to be considered in a committee of the whole, or in quasi committee of the whole (“as if in committee of the whole”), or if it is to be considered informally, the motion should specify which of these methods is to be used.

b) If the main question is to be sent to a standing committee (see 50), the motion should specify the name of the committee.

c) If the main question is to go to a special (select, or ad hoc) committee (see 50), the motion should specify the number of committee members, and the method of their selection unless the method is prescribed by the bylaws or rules of the assembly; or, if preferred, the motion can name the members of the special committee. (The word special, or select, or ad hoc, is not generally used in a motion to refer to a special committee; the motion is worded, for example, “to refer the question to a committee of five to be appointed by…” See also forms of the motion in 13:25–26.)

d) Instructions to the committee can also be included in the motion to Commit, whether the committee is to be a standing or a special one, or a committee of the whole. These instructions, which are binding on the committee, may involve such matters as when the committee is to meet, how it is to consider the question, whether it is to employ an expert consultant, and when it is to report. The committee can be given “full power” to act for the society in a specific case and can be authorized to spend money or even to add to its own membership. The motion to Commit requires a majority vote for its adoption even when it contains instructions that suspend, modify, or conflict with rules of order that would otherwise apply to meetings of the committee. (See 9:35 regarding the adoption of instructions authorizing a committee to hold electronic meetings.)

Although these details can be changed by ordinary amendments, they can often be handled more efficiently by treating them as in filling blanks (12:92–113, 13:26).

13:9 Dilatory Motion to Commit. The chair has a duty to rule out of order, as dilatory, any motion to Commit that is obviously absurd or unreasonable—such as one that (because of the time involved or any other reason) would have the effect of defeating the purpose of the main question.

13:10 Alternative Procedures When the Motion Is Incomplete. When a motion to Commit merely lacks essential details—for example, when the motion is made simply “to refer the main question to a committee”—the chair should not rule it out of order. Instead, these two courses are open:

a) Members can offer suggestions or formal amendments to complete the required details, or the chair can call for them.

b) The chair can put the motion to Commit to vote at once in its simple form.

The second alternative is appropriate if no one is seeking recognition and the chair believes that the motion to Commit is not likely to be adopted, in which case time spent in completing the details would be wasted. Opponents of the motion to Commit may try to bring about the same result (that is, obtaining an immediate vote on the referral) by moving the Previous Question on it (see 16). If the necessary two thirds (of those voting) vote to order the Previous Question on an incomplete motion to Commit, the motion is almost certain to be rejected, whatever details might be added.

13:11 In the event that any of the above procedures results in the adoption of an incomplete motion “to refer the question to a committee,” the details must be completed as described in the following paragraphs. In such a case, no new subject (except a privileged one) can be introduced until the assembly has decided all of these related questions. In completing the details, the member who made the motion to commit has no preference in recognition, since he or she could have included any desired specifications in that motion.

13:12 Completing an Incomplete Motion to Commit. In completing a motion that simply refers “the main question to a committee”—either while the motion to Commit is pending or after it is adopted—the chair first asks, “To what committee shall the question be referred?” If only one suggestion is made, he assumes that this is the will of the assembly, and he states that it is inserted into the motion to Commit. But if different proposals are made, either in the form of primary and secondary amendments or simply as suggestions, the chair treats them as proposals to fill a blank (12:92–113) and puts them to vote in the following order until one receives a majority: (1) committee of the whole; (2) quasi committee of the whole (or “as if in committee of the whole”); (3) consider informally; (4) standing committees, in the order in which they are proposed; and (5) special (select, or ad hoc) committees, the one containing the largest number of members being voted on first. A proposal to recommit to the same standing or special committee that previously considered the question is voted on before other proposals for standing or special committees are voted on.

13:13 If it is decided that the committee is to be a special one, the chair then asks—unless the rules provide the method—“How shall the committee be appointed?” Again, if only one suggestion is made, it is inserted by unanimous consent, but if different methods are suggested or moved, they are voted on in the following order: (1) election by ballot; (2) nominations from the floor (“open nominations”) with viva-voce election; (3) nominations by the chair; and (4) appointment by the chair (see also 50:11ff.). The first of these methods of selection that receives a majority vote is then inserted into the motion to Commit and the remainder are ignored.

13:14 If the motion to Commit lacks any other detail, the chair proceeds in a similar fashion to obtain completion of the motion. As soon as it is completed, if it is a pending motion to Commit, the chair states the question on it, thus opening it to additional debate during which any member can move—or the chair himself can suggest—that it be amended by adding instructions. By a majority vote, instructions can also be added to a motion to Commit that is being completed after its adoption.

13:15 Naming Members to a Special Committee. A standing or special committee may include, or even have as its chairman, one or more persons who are not members of the assembly or the society; but if the chair appoints the committee, the names of all such nonmembers being appointed must be submitted to the assembly for approval, unless the bylaws, the rules of the assembly, or the motion to appoint the committee specifically authorizes the presiding officer to appoint nonmembers (see also 50:12, 50:13(d)). When a motion to refer to a special committee has been adopted, no business except privileged matters can intervene until selection of the committee members is completed—except that if the chair is to appoint the committee, he can, if he wishes and time permits, state that he will announce the names of its members later. In such a case, however, the committee must be left with reasonable time to accomplish its purpose after the names of its members have been announced for the record and any non–society members have been approved in a meeting of the assembly as necessary under the rule stated at the beginning of this paragraph. The committee cannot act before such an announcement of its membership is made, unless otherwise authorized by the assembly, which may be done in the motion establishing the special committee or by a later incidental main motion (which can be adopted by a majority vote).

13:16 Although it is not necessary to place on a special committee the member who made the motion to Commit, it is usual to do so when such a person is interested and qualified. For a discussion of the appropriate size and personnel of committees under various circumstances, see 50:18.

13:17 Designating the Committee Chairman. If the chair appoints or nominates the committee, he has the duty to select its chairman—which he does by naming that person to the committee first—and the committee cannot elect another. The chair should not state the name of any committee member until he has decided his preference for chairman. The chair should specifically mention as chairman the first committee member he names, but if he neglects to state this fact, the designation nevertheless is automatic unless the first-named member immediately declines the chairmanship (which the member can do, and remain on the committee). If the first-named member declines to serve as chairman, the chair then names his next choice for this position. If the committee’s task is heavy and will require some time to complete, it often is advisable to appoint a vice-chairman. The anomalous title “co-chairman” should be avoided, as it causes impossible dilemmas in attempts to share the functions of a single position.

13:18 If the committee is named by a power other than the chair (such as the assembly or the executive board), the body that elects the committee members has the power, at the time the appointments are made, to designate any one of them as chairman. If a chairman is not designated when the committee is appointed, the committee has the right to elect its own chairman. In the latter case, the first-named member has the duty of calling the committee together and of acting as temporary chairman until the committee elects a chairman. Since such a committee may confirm its first-named member in the chairmanship, it is important that this person be qualified and dependable.

13:19 Effect on Motions Adhering to a Referred Question. If a motion to Postpone Indefinitely is pending when the main motion is referred to a committee, the motion for indefinite postponement is dropped from further consideration. On the other hand, any pending amendments, motions for Division of a Question or Consideration by Paragraph or Seriatim, and adhering debatable appeals (or points of order submitted to the judgment of the assembly) go to the committee with the main motion, and are reported with it. (No question can be referred to a committee while an undebatable appeal or point of order is pending.) If, at the time a main motion is committed, a motion to reconsider an adhering subsidiary or incidental motion is pending or has been made but not yet taken up, the motion to Reconsider is thereafter ignored.

13:20 Freedom of Action After Referral. Since the purpose of referring a motion to a committee is generally to allow for a more thorough consideration of the matter, greater freedom of action is obtained once the committee commences its deliberations, as follows: The usual prohibition against introducing a motion to Amend that raises the same question of content and effect as one already decided by the assembly at the same session (cf. 12:25) no longer applies. Therefore, a committee to which a resolution or other motion has been referred is free to consider, and recommend for adoption, its own amendments to the referred motion, or a recommendation for definite or indefinite postponement (11, 14), without regard to whether or not the assembly, by either adopting or rejecting the same or related amendments or motions prior to the referral, had effectively voted against making such changes or taking such action. Likewise, when a committee reports on a motion referred to it—even if to the same meeting that made the referral—the assembly itself is free to consider any such amendments, or motions for definite or indefinite postponement, whether considered by the committee or not. (In all cases, however, any amendments actually pending at the time of referral are sent to the committee with the main motion, and, when the committee reports, they must be disposed of by the assembly before any additional amendments of the same degree may be considered; see 51:36–52.)

13:21 Effect on Subsequent Debate and Methods of Voting. If consideration of a referred question is resumed in the assembly on the same day on which it was referred, any members who have exhausted their right to debate (that is, those who have already spoken twice on the question that day, unless the assembly has a special rule providing otherwise) cannot speak on it again that day without permission of the assembly (by a two-thirds vote or unanimous consent; see 15, 43). Speeches made in committee of the whole, in quasi committee of the whole, or during informal consideration, however, do not count against a member’s right to debate the same question when it is further considered by the assembly under the regular rules. When a question is referred to a committee, any orders limiting or extending the limits of debate (15) or for the Previous Question (16) are thereby exhausted, so that when the question is brought back from the committee, debate in the assembly takes place according to the regular rules, even if at the same session in which the motion to Commit was adopted. For the rules relating to the exhaustion of an order prescribing the method of voting on a question, see 30:7.

13:22 Subsequent Instructions. After a question has been referred to a committee and at any time before the committee submits its report, even at another session, the assembly by a majority vote can give the committee additional instructions in reference to the referred question (see also 13:8(d)).

13:23 Vacancies in a Committee. The power to appoint a committee includes the power to fill any vacancy that may arise in it. The resignation of a member of a committee should be addressed to the appointing power, and it is the responsibility of that power to fill the resulting vacancy (see also 47:57–58). Unless the bylaws or other governing rules provide otherwise (see 50:14, 62:16), the appointing authority has the power to remove or replace members of the committee: If a single person, such as the president, has the power of appointment, he has the power to remove or replace a member so appointed; but if the assembly has the power of selection, removal or replacement can take place only under rules applicable to the motions to Rescind or Amend Something Previously Adopted (see 50:14). Committee members are presumed to serve until their successors are appointed.
13:24 Procedure When a Committee Reports. For the procedure when a committee submits its report on a referred question, see 51; see also 12:77–78.
Form and Example

13:25 The motion to Commit or Refer may be made in many forms. The following are typical: “I move to refer the motion to a committee”; “I move to recommit the resolution”; “I move that the motion be referred to the Social Committee”; “I move that the resolution be referred to a committee of three to be appointed by the chair” [or “nominated by the chair,” or “elected from open nominations”]; “I move that the question be referred to the Executive Board with full power”; “I move to refer the resolution to a committee of seven, the chairman to be Mr. Brownley, six members to be elected by ballot from open nominations, and the committee to be instructed to report at the April meeting”; “I move that the Club now resolve itself into [or “go into”] a committee of the whole to consider the resolution”; “I move that the resolution be considered in quasi committee of the whole” [or “considered as if in committee of the whole”]; and “I move that the motion be considered informally.”

13:26 Assume that a resolution is pending which, after debate, apparently requires careful amendment before the assembly will be willing to act on it. However, the assembly is pressed for time.

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move that the resolution be referred to a committee to be appointed by the chair. (Second.)

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded that the resolution be referred to a committee to be appointed by the chair. [Pause.] Are you ready for the question? [No response.] How many members shall the committee consist of?

MEMBER B (obtaining the floor): I move to amend the motion to commit by inserting after the word “committee” the words “of three.” (Second.)

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to amend the motion by inserting after the word “committee” the words “of three.”

MEMBER C (obtaining the floor): I move to amend the amendment by striking out “three” and inserting “seven.” (Second.)

CHAIR: If there is no objection, the chair suggests that the number of committee members be decided upon by the method of filling blanks. [Pause.] There is no objection and it is so ordered. It has been suggested that the committee be composed of seven and also three members. Are there additional suggestions?

MEMBER D (calling from his seat): I suggest five.

CHAIR: Five is also suggested. Are there other suggestions? [No response.] If not, the different numbers of members suggested for the proposed committee are seven, five, and three. These will be voted on in descending order. Those in favor of seven members, say aye…. Those opposed, say no…. The noes have it and the number seven is not adopted. Those in favor of five members, say aye…. Those opposed, say no…. The ayes have it and the number five is chosen for the committee membership. The question is now on the motion “to refer the resolution to a committee of five to be appointed by the chair.” [Pause. No response.] Those in favor of referring the resolution to such a committee, say aye…. Those opposed, say no. … The ayes have it and the motion is adopted. The chair appoints Mr. Johnson as chairman, Dr. Donaldson, Mrs. Applegarth, Mr. Frank, Miss Dillon.
§14. POSTPONE TO A CERTAIN TIME (OR DEFINITELY)

14:1 The subsidiary motion to Postpone to a Certain Time (or Postpone Definitely, or Postpone) is the motion by which action on a pending question can be put off, within limits, to a definite session, day, meeting, or hour, or until after a certain event. (The expression “to defer” should be avoided, since it is often subject to vague usage.) This motion can be moved regardless of how much debate there has been on the motion it proposes to postpone. A question may be postponed either so that it may be considered at a more convenient time, or because debate has shown reasons for holding off a decision until later. This motion should not be confused with Postpone Indefinitely, which, as explained earlier (11), does not actually postpone the pending question, but kills it.

14:2 At the time when a postponed question is due to come up, there may be another question pending, or other business of a higher priority than the postponed question, that would delay its consideration, as fully explained in 41. In its simple and usual form, the motion to postpone a question makes it a general order, which cannot interrupt pending business. To give the question being postponed a special type of priority that will enable it to interrupt the consideration of other business at the specified time, the motion to Postpone may, by a two-thirds vote, be adopted in a form that makes the question a special order. (See Time at Which a Postponed Question Is Taken Up Again, 14:13–17, and the illustrations under Form and Example, 14:20–22.)

14:3 When a motion proposes to postpone a matter that is not pending—for example, the hearing of a committee’s report—such a motion is not the subsidiary motion to Postpone, but is an incidental main motion (10). If the effect would be to change action already taken by the assembly, as, for example, “to postpone for three weeks the dinner scheduled for October 15,” such a motion is a particular case of the motion to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35).
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

14:4 The subsidiary motion to Postpone to a Certain Time:

1. Takes precedence over the main motion; over the subsidiary motions to Postpone Indefinitely, to Amend, and to Commit; and over the incidental motions for Division of a Question and for Consideration by Paragraph or Seriatim. It takes precedence over a debatable appeal that adheres to the main question (or a point of order that adheres to the main question and has been referred by the chair to the judgment of the assembly and which is debatable when so referred, 23:2(5)), if no motions other than those named in the preceding sentence are pending or involved in the appeal or point of order; and it also takes precedence over a debatable nonadhering appeal or point of order to which it is applied. It takes precedence over a debatable motion to Reconsider when it is in order to apply it to that motion under the conditions stated in Standard Characteristic 2 below. It yields to the subsidiary motions to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, for the Previous Question, or to Lay on the Table; to a motion to Amend that is applied to it; to all privileged motions; and to all applicable incidental motions.

2. Can be applied to main motions, with any motions to Postpone Indefinitely, Amend, or Commit or for Division of a Question or Consideration by Paragraph or Seriatim that may be pending; can be thus applied to orders of the day (14:13–17; 41) or questions of privilege (19) while they are actually pending as main motions, and such an application is independent of, and does not affect, any other matter that they may have interrupted; can be applied to debatable appeals (or points of order referred by the chair to the judgment of the assembly that are debatable when so referred, 23:2(5)), but if such an appeal or point of order adheres (10:35) to the main question (that is, if it must be decided before the main question is decided), the motion to Postpone can be applied to the appeal or point of order only in connection with the main question, which is thus also postponed (see also 14:18); can be applied to nonadhering debatable appeals (or points of order submitted to the judgment of the assembly) separately, without affecting the status of any pending questions not involved in the appeal or point of order; and can be applied to an immediately pending, debatable motion to Reconsider (37) when it is in order to postpone the question or series of adhering questions containing the motion(s) to be reconsidered, in which case all such questions and adhering motions are postponed with the motion to Reconsider. It cannot be applied to an undebatable appeal or to an undebatable motion to Reconsider; and it cannot be applied to any subsidiary motion, except that its application to a main question also affects any motions to Postpone Indefinitely, Amend, or Commit that may be pending, as noted above. It cannot be moved after the adoption of a motion to close debate on the main question at a definite hour or of a motion to limit the total time allowed for debate; but it remains in order if only a limitation on the length of speeches is in force (see 15). Motions to Amend, to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, and for the Previous Question can be applied to it without affecting the main question. The motion to Postpone cannot be laid on the table alone, but when it is pending the main question can be laid on the table, carrying to the table also the motion to Postpone. It cannot be postponed indefinitely or committed.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.
5. Is debatable; but debate is limited in that it must not go into the merits of the main question any more than is necessary to enable the assembly to decide whether the main question should be postponed and to what time.

6. Is amendable as to the time to which the main question is to be postponed, and as to making the postponed question a special order (see 14:13–17; 41).

7. Requires a majority vote in its simple and usual form. If (as originally moved or as a result of amendment) it makes a question a special order, however, the motion to Postpone then requires a two-thirds vote, because it suspends any rules that will interfere with the question’s consideration at the time specified. An amendment to the motion to Postpone requires only a majority vote, even if it would add a provision to make the postponed question a special order and would consequently change to two thirds the vote necessary for adoption of the motion to Postpone.

8. An affirmative vote on the motion to Postpone can be reconsidered. A negative vote on the motion to Postpone can be reconsidered only until such time as progress in business or debate has been sufficient to make it essentially a new question. Thereafter, the motion can be renewed (see 38:7).
Further Rules and Explanation

14:5 Limits on Postponement and Their Relation to Meeting and Session. Rules limiting the time to which a question can be postponed are related to the terms meeting and session (8), as follows:

14:6 In a case where more than a quarterly time interval (see 9:7) will elapse between meetings (for example, in an annual convention of delegates or in a local society that holds only an annual meeting), a question cannot be postponed beyond the end of the present session. In cases where no more than a quarterly time interval will elapse between sessions, a question can be postponed until, but not beyond, the next regular business session. For example, in a society that holds regular business meetings on the same day of each week, a question cannot, at one meeting, be postponed for longer than a week.

14:7 If it is desired to postpone a question to a time between regular meetings, it is necessary first to provide for an adjourned meeting, which is a continuation of the session scheduling it; then the question can be postponed to that meeting. If a motion to postpone a question to a regular meeting is already pending, the privileged motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn (22) can be used to set an adjourned meeting, and the motion to Postpone can then be amended so that the proposed postponement will be to the adjourned meeting. Some societies have frequent sessions for social or cultural purposes at which business may be transacted, and also hold a session every month or quarter especially for business. In such societies these rules apply particularly to the regular business sessions, to which questions can be postponed from the previous regular business session or from any intervening meeting.
When the time to which a question has been postponed arrives and the question is taken up, it can be postponed again if the additional delay will not interfere with the proper handling of the postponed motion.

Neither the motion to Postpone to a Certain Time nor any amendment to it is in order if the effect would be the same as that of the motion to Postpone Indefinitely—that is, if it would kill the measure. For example, a motion to postpone until tomorrow a pending question of accepting an invitation to a banquet tonight cannot be recognized as a motion to Postpone to a Certain Time. The chair must either rule that this motion is not in order or, if the motion to Postpone Indefinitely is in order at the time, state the motion as such. The same would apply to a motion to postpone a question from one regular business session to the next in cases where the next business session will not be held within a quarterly time interval (see 9:7).

Rule Against Postponement of a Class of Subjects. As already noted, the subsidiary motion to Postpone can be applied only to a question that is actually pending; but an individual item of business that is not pending can, when appropriate, be postponed by means of a main motion.

It is not in order, either through a subsidiary motion or a main motion, to postpone a class of business composed of several items or subjects, such as reports of officers or reports of committees (see Order of Business, 41); but each report can be postponed separately as it is announced or called for. If it is desired to reach an item immediately but it falls at a later point in the regular order of business, the assembly, by a two-thirds vote or by unanimous consent (4:58–63), can adopt a motion to “suspend the rules and take up” the desired question or, equivalently, “to pass” one or more items or classes of subjects in the order of business. After a question taken up out of its proper order by such a suspension of the rules has been disposed of, the regular order of business is resumed at the point where it was left off (see 25).

14:12 Postponement of a Subject That the Bylaws Set for a Particular Session. A matter that the bylaws require to be attended to at a specified session, such as the election of officers, cannot, in advance and through a main motion, be postponed to another session. It can be taken up at any time when it is in order during the specified session (that is, either as originally convened or at any adjournment of it); and it can be postponed to an adjourned meeting in the manner explained above, after first adopting, if necessary, a motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn. The adjourned meeting, as already stated, is a continuation of the same session. The procedure of postponing such a matter to an adjourned meeting is sometimes advisable, as in an annual meeting for the election of officers on a stormy night when, although a quorum is present, the attendance is abnormally small. If the matter has actually been taken up during the specified session as required, it also may be postponed beyond that session in accordance with the regular rules for the motion to Postpone. It is usually unwise to do so, however, unless completing it during the session proves impossible or impractical.

14:13 Time at Which a Postponed Question Is Taken Up Again. A postponed question becomes an order of the day for the session, day, meeting, or hour to which it is postponed. It cannot be taken up before the time for which it is set, except by reconsidering (37) the vote on the motion to Postpone, or by suspending the rules by a two-thirds vote. The postponed question is taken up either at the specified time or later, as follows:

14:14 Orders of the day consist of general orders and special orders. If the motion to Postpone does not make the postponed question a special order, it becomes a general order, which cannot interrupt pending business even if the time for which it is set has arrived or passed. By a two-thirds vote, however, a question can be postponed and made a special order, giving it priority over general orders as well as the ability to interrupt pending business. If it is desired to reserve an entire meeting—or as much of it as necessary—for the consideration of a single subject, a matter can be made the special order for a meeting (see 41:57).

14:15 When set for a session, day, or meeting but not for a particular hour, special orders and general orders usually have their established places in the order of business (see 41:18–26 and 41:46).

14:16 The full rules regarding the priority of orders of the day, and their relation to each other and to the order of business, are given in 41.

14:17 When the appointed time has been reached for a postponed question to be taken up, and as soon as no other business of a higher priority interferes, the chair states the question as pending. (For examples, see 14:22, 41:19, and 41:24.) Therefore, no further motion is normally needed to bring the question before the assembly; however, if the chair fails to state the question at the correct time, any member may then demand that the postponed question be taken up as ordered, by making a Call for the Orders of the Day (18).

14:18 Effect on Motions Adhering to a Postponed Question. When a main motion is postponed, one or more of the subsidiary motions to Postpone Indefinitely, Amend, and Commit or incidental motions for Division of a Question and Consideration by Paragraph or Seriatim may be pending. All such adhering motions are postponed with the main question, and when consideration of that question is resumed at the specified time, the business is in the same condition, so far as possible, as it was immediately before the postponement, with the exceptions noted in the next paragraph. Similarly, when a main motion is postponed, it also carries with it any adhering debatable appeals (24) or adhering points of order (23) that the chair has submitted to the judgment of the assembly and that are then debatable. (No question can be postponed while an undebatable appeal or point of order is pending.)

14:19 Effect on Subsequent Debate and Methods of Voting.
When consideration of a postponed question is resumed at a later session, any orders limiting or extending the limits of debate or for the Previous Question that were adopted at the original session are exhausted (see 15:18, 16:11–12), and debate takes place according to the regular rules. But when consideration is resumed at the same session—even on another day, as may happen in a convention—all such applicable orders remain in effect. Except for the effect of an unexhausted order limiting or closing debate as just stated, when a question is taken up on a different day from the one on which it was postponed, the right of members to debate it begins over again, as if the question had not previously been debated; that is, each member can again speak twice to each debatable question, regardless of whether the member had already done so before the postponement (see 43). For the rules relating to the exhaustion of an order prescribing the method of voting on a question, see 30:7.
Form and Example

14:20 The form used in making this motion depends on the desired object:

a) Simply to postpone the question to the next meeting, when it will have priority over new business: “I move to postpone the motion [or “that the question be postponed”] to the next meeting.”

b) To specify an hour before which the question will not be taken up (unless by a two-thirds vote or through reconsideration), and when it will come up automatically as soon as no business is pending and any remaining matters that have priority over it have been disposed of: “I move that the resolution be postponed until 3 P.M.” [or “… until 9 P.M. at the meeting scheduled for February 15”].

c) To postpone consideration of a motion until after a certain event in a meeting, when it will immediately be taken up (unless a special order intervenes): “I move to postpone the question until after the address by our guest speaker.”

d) To ensure that the question will come up at the next meeting and will not be crowded out by other matters: “I move that the question be postponed to the next meeting and be made a special order.” (Two-thirds vote required for adoption.)

e) To ensure that the matter will come up at precisely a certain hour, even if it interrupts pending business: “I move that the resolution be postponed and be made a special order for 3 P.M. tomorrow.” (Two-thirds vote required for adoption.)

f) To postpone a subject—such as a revision of the bylaws—to an adjourned meeting at which the entire time can be devoted to it if necessary, a motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn must first be made and adopted, and then the motion to Postpone may be made in this form: “I move that the question be postponed and made the special order for the adjourned meeting set for next Tuesday evening.” (Two-thirds vote required for adoption.)

14:21 Assume that a controversial resolution is pending at a convention and that many of the delegates who are most interested and best informed on the subject will not be able to be present until tomorrow.

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move to postpone the resolution until eleven o’clock tomorrow morning. (Second.)

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to postpone the resolution until eleven o’clock tomorrow morning. [Pause.]

MEMBER B (after obtaining the floor and stating that in his opinion further consideration of the resolution should under no circumstances be delayed beyond 11 A.M. the next day): I move to amend the motion to postpone, by adding “and make it a special order.” (Second.)

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to amend the motion to postpone the resolution until eleven o’clock tomorrow morning by adding “and make it a special order.” [Debate, if any.] The question is on amending the motion to postpone by adding “and make it a special order.” Those in favor of the amendment, say aye…. Those opposed, say no…. The ayes have it and the amendment is adopted. The question now is on the motion, as amended, to postpone the resolution until eleven o’clock tomorrow morning and make it a special order. This motion now requires a two-thirds vote. [Pause.] Are you ready for the question? [Pause. No further debate.] Those in favor of the motion to postpone the resolution until eleven o’clock tomorrow morning and make it a special order will rise…. Be seated. Those opposed, rise…. Be seated. There are two thirds in the affirmative and the motion is adopted. The resolution is a special order for 11 A.M. tomorrow. The next item of business is…
If the amendment to make a special order is rejected, the chair proceeds in the usual manner to take a voice vote on the \textit{unamended} motion to postpone. If the motion to postpone is not adopted, he again states the question on the resolution. But if the resolution \textit{has} been made a special order for the following day at 11 A.M., as in the above example, then at the appointed time the chair says:

\textbf{CHAIR:} It is now eleven o’clock. The following resolution was made a special order for this time: “\textit{Resolved, That…}” The question is on the adoption of the resolution….
§15. LIMIT OR EXTEND LIMITS OF DEBATE

15:1 The subsidiary motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate is one of the two motions by means of which an assembly can exercise special control over debate on a pending question or on a series of pending questions. (The other motion serving such a purpose is the Previous Question, 16. Neither of these motions is allowed in committees; see 50.)

15:2 The motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate can limit debate by: (1) reducing the number or length of speeches permitted, without including specific provision for closing debate; or (2) requiring that, at a certain later hour or after debate for a specified length of time, debate shall be closed. It can extend the limits of debate by allowing more and longer speeches than under the regular rules (see 43:8–13). It cannot impose an immediate closing of debate, which requires a different motion—the Previous Question.

15:3 When an assembly adopts a motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, it is said to adopt an “order” taking such action. (The word order as applied in this sense should not be confused with the technical terms order of the day, general order, and special order as used in 3, 14, and 41.) When an order limiting or extending the limits of debate finally ceases to be in force as relates to all the motions it affected, the order is said to be “exhausted” (see 15:18).

15:4 If a motion proposing to change the regular limits of debate (for any length of time or during the consideration of one or more particular subjects) is made while no question is pending, such a motion is not the subsidiary motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, but is an incidental main motion (although it requires a two-thirds vote for its adoption, just as the subsidiary motion does).
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

15:5 The subsidiary motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate:

1. Takes precedence over all debatable motions. It yields to the subsidiary motions for the Previous Question and to Lay on the Table; to a motion to Amend that is applied to it; to all privileged motions; and to all applicable incidental motions.

2. Can be applied to any immediately pending debatable motion, to an entire series of pending debatable motions, or to any consecutive part of such a series beginning with the immediately pending question. (It therefore can be made only while a debatable motion is immediately pending. If a series of debatable questions is pending and an undebatable incidental motion is immediately pending, the latter must be disposed of before any motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate can be made.) Motions to Amend and (for the purpose of stopping amendment) the motion for the Previous Question can be applied to it without affecting the main question. The motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate cannot be laid on the table alone, but when it is pending the main question can be laid on the table, carrying to the table also the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is not debatable.

6. Is amendable, but any amendment, like the motion itself, is undebatable.

7. Requires a two-thirds vote—because it suspends the rules, and because limiting debate takes away the basic rights of all members to full discussion and may restrict a minority’s right to present its case.

8. An affirmative vote on the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate can be reconsidered, without debate, at any time before the order limiting or extending limits of debate is exhausted (see 15:18). If the order has been partially carried out, only the unexecuted part can be subject to reconsideration. A negative vote on the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate can be reconsidered only until such time as progress in business or debate has been sufficient to make it essentially a new question. Thereafter, the motion can be renewed (see 38:7).
Further Rules and Explanation

15:6 Effect on Pending and Subsequent Motions. This motion’s effect upon other pending and subsequent motions is closely related to its position in the order of precedence of motions (5) and further depends on the nature of its specific provisions, as explained below. Any relevant provisions can be included in the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate by its maker or, while the motion is pending, can be added or modified by amendment (12).

15:7 Pending Motions to Which It Applies. If, at the time the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate is made, the immediately pending question is one among a consecutive series of pending debatable questions, the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate can be applied, as noted in Standard Characteristic 2 above, to the immediately pending question, to any consecutive part of the series beginning with the immediately pending question, or to the entire series. If the motion does not specify to which of these questions it is to apply, then only the immediately pending question is affected.

15:8 Subsequent Motions to Which It Applies. Unless otherwise specified in the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, its effect on the debate of motions that may subsequently become pending is as follows: An order limiting debate applies not only to the motion(s) on which the limitation is ordered, but also to any debatable subsidiary motions, motions to Reconsider, or debatable appeals that may become pending subsequently while the order is in force. On the other hand, an order extending limits of debate—or one that both limits and extends the limits of debate, such as by limiting the length of each speech to two minutes while allowing each member to speak three times the same day on the question—applies only to the debate of the pending motion(s) on which it is ordered.

15:9 Effect on the Making of Subsidiary Motions. While a motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate is pending, its precedence prevents the making of subsidiary motions of lower rank (Postpone Indefinitely, Amend, Commit, Postpone to a Certain Time). After a limitation or extension on debate has been ordered, however, its effect on which subsidiary motions can be made depends on the particular form in which the order was made.

15:10 Limitations (or extensions) that do not close debate. If the limitation or extension that has been ordered does not provide for closing debate—for example, if the order was “that debate be limited to one speech of five minutes for each member,” as in Form and Example (a) below—it has no effect on what subsidiary motions can be made.

15:11 Limitations that close debate on the main motion. After the adoption of an order that does provide a time for closing debate on the main question—either at a specified hour or after debate for a specified length of time, as in Form and Example (b) or (f) below—motions to Commit or to Postpone to a Certain Time are not in order, since providing a time for closing debate implies that at that time the question will be voted on. If the assembly decides, while the order is in effect, that it wishes to commit or postpone the main motion, then it may reconsider (37) and reverse the vote establishing the order or, by a two-thirds vote, it may adopt a new limitation or extension of debate that has no such restriction. If motions to Commit or to Postpone were already part of a series that was pending when such an order was adopted, however, the remaining questions may be postponed or committed at the time those motions come to a vote.

15:12 When the allotted time under such an order has expired, no further debate on any pending question is allowed, no further amendments or subsidiary motions other than Lay on the Table (or a superseding motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate; see below) can be offered, and all pending questions are voted on immediately. In making an order that provides a time for closing debate on the main motion, sometimes it is specified that the question shall be put at that time, although the effect is the same whether or not this is explicitly provided.

15:13 Limitations that close debate on the main motion without limiting the making of subsidiary motions. If the assembly wishes only to limit the time devoted to the question without preventing motions to Commit or Postpone from being made during that time, the order can specify, for example, “that debate on the pending resolution be limited to twenty minutes, during which time all applicable secondary motions shall remain in order.”

15:14 Other limitations or extensions. If it is desired to order a limitation or extension of debate whose effect is other than as described above, this can be specified in the order, such as in Form and Example (e) below.

15:15 Interruptions While It Is in Effect. Regardless of the form of an order to limit or extend the limits of debate, the main question and any adhering motions can be laid on the table while the order is in effect.

15:16 It should be noted that there can be a significant difference in effect between (a) an order that closes debate at a particular hour and (b) one that limits debate to a specified length of time. In the first case, if consideration of the question to which the order applies is interrupted, such as by the question’s being laid on the table, and is resumed after the specified hour has passed (but during the same session, so that the order has not been exhausted; see below), no further debate is allowed. In the second case, however, any time consumed while the question is lying on the table, or during other interruptions unrelated to the question to which the order applies (such as consideration of orders of the day (18, 41) or unrelated questions of privilege (19)), does not diminish the amount of time allowed for debate on the question.

15:17 Adoption of a Superseding Limitation or Extension. Unlike the case of main motions and lower-ranking subsidiary motions (Postpone Indefinitely, Amend, Commit, Postpone), the adoption of one motion limiting or extending debate in a certain way does not prevent another such conflicting motion from being in order. A motion to set different limitation(s) or extension(s), or to change from one to the other, or to order the Previous Question (16), can be made at any time that it is in order under the order of precedence of motions, until the pending questions affected have been finally disposed of. The reason is that the two-thirds vote necessary for the adoption of any motion to modify the limits of debate also fulfills the requirement for suspending the rules (25).

15:18 Conditions for Exhaustion of Its Effect. An order limiting or extending limits of debate is exhausted (that is, no longer applies): (1) when all of the questions on which it was imposed have been voted on; (2) when those questions affected by the order and not yet voted on have been either referred to a committee or postponed indefinitely; or (3) at the conclusion of the session in which the order was adopted—whichever occurs first. If any of the questions to which the order applies are postponed definitely or laid on the table, and are taken up again later during the same session, the unexecuted part of the order remains in effect. Any questions affected by an order modifying limits of debate that in any way go over to the next session—or that are referred to a committee and reported back, even in the same session in which committed—become open to debate under the regular rules. An order limiting or extending limits of debate applies to reconsiderations of the affected questions before, but not after, exhaustion of the order.
Form and Example

15:19 The forms in which this motion may be made depend on the desired object, as follows:

a) To reduce or increase the number or length of speeches: “I move that debate be limited to one speech of five minutes for each member”; or “… that Mr. Lee’s time be extended three minutes”; or “I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Lee’s time…” (see 4:58–63).

b) To provide a time for closing debate on the main question and taking the vote on all pending questions: “I move that at 9 P.M. [or “after twenty minutes”] debate on the resolution be closed.” (Under such a limitation, motions to Commit or Postpone to a Certain Time will no longer be in order.)

c) To limit time spent in debate on a secondary motion, such as an amendment: “I move that debate on the pending amendment be limited to twenty minutes.”

d) To limit the time devoted to the question without preventing motions to Commit or Postpone from being made during that time: “I move that debate on the pending resolution be limited to twenty minutes, during which time all applicable secondary motions shall remain in order.”

e) To fix the hour for closing debate without cutting off further amendments: “I move that debate on the pending resolution be closed at 5 P.M., after which time members may continue to offer amendments, which shall then be undebatable.”

f) To combine several of the above objects: “I move that ________ and ________ [the leaders on the two sides] each be allowed twenty minutes, which may be divided between two speeches, and that other members be limited to one speech of two minutes each, provided that all pending questions shall be put to a vote at 4 P.M.” (see also example in 59:82).

15:20 The form of stating the question on this amendable but undefatable motion is:

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded that no later than 9 P.M. debate be closed and the question on the resolution be put. The motion to limit or extend limits of debate is not debatable, but it can be amended. [Pause.] Are you ready for the question on [or, “Are there any amendments to”] the motion to limit debate?

The words at the end of the last sentence, “the motion to limit debate,” can be modified to suit the particular form in which the motion was made.

15:21 Unless the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate is adopted by unanimous consent (4:58–63), the chair puts it to a vote taken by rising, as in the example shown for a motion to postpone a question and make it a special order, in 14:21. In announcing the result, the chair states the parliamentary situation as it then exists:

CHAIR (after taking a rising vote): There are two thirds in the affirmative and the motion is adopted. The resolution will therefore be put to a vote no later than 9 P.M. and debate cannot continue beyond that hour. The question is on [stating the immediately pending question].
§16. PREVIOUS QUESTION

(Immediately to close debate and the making of subsidiary motions except the motion to Lay on the Table)

16:1 The Previous Question is the motion used to bring the assembly to an immediate vote on one or more pending questions; its adoption does this with certain exceptions.

16:2 Adopting or “ordering” the Previous Question:

1) immediately closes debate on, and stops amendment of, the immediately pending question and such other pending questions as the motion may specify (in consecutive series; see Standard Characteristic 2); and

2) prevents the making of any other subsidiary motions except the higher-ranking (5) Lay on the Table.¹¹

The adoption of an order for the Previous Question does not prevent the making of privileged or incidental motions (6) as applicable, and, strictly speaking, it does not prevent a special order set for a particular hour (14, 41) from interrupting the pending business (see also 16:10).

16:3 The motion for the Previous Question has nothing to do with the last question previously considered by the assembly and has a long history of gradually changing purpose.

16:4 The Previous Question is not allowed in committees (50).
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

16:5 The subsidiary motion for the Previous Question:

1. Takes precedence over all debatable or amendable motions to which it is applied, and over the subsidiary motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate; and, if adopted, it supersedes the effect of an unexhausted order limiting or extending debate, with respect to the motions to which it is applied. It yields to the subsidiary motion to Lay on the Table, to all privileged motions, and to all applicable incidental motions.

2. Can be applied to any immediately pending debatable or amendable motion; to an entire series of pending debatable or amendable motions; and to any consecutive part of such a series, beginning with the immediately pending question. (Under this rule it can be applied to motions that are amendable but not debatable,\(^\text{12}\) for the purpose of stopping amendment; see page t47.) It supersedes any earlier order for the closing of debate at a future time and can be applied while such an order is in effect. In practice, this motion usually is made in an unqualified form, such as “I move the previous question,” and then it applies only to the immediately pending question. In its qualified form, however, it can be applied to include consecutively any series beginning with the immediately pending question. For example, the following motions might be pending: (a) a resolution; (b) an amendment to the resolution; (c) a motion to refer the resolution and its pending amendment to a committee; and (d) an immediately pending motion to postpone all of these questions to a definite time. In this case, an unqualified motion for the Previous Question will apply only to (d). Such a motion can be qualified to apply to
(d) and (c); to (d), (c), and (b); or to (d), (c), (b), and (a). It cannot include only (d) and (b); only (d), (b), and (a); only (d), (c), and (a); or only (d) and (a); and no motion for the Previous Question excluding the immediately pending question (d) can be made until (d) has been voted on. No subsidiary motion can be applied to the Previous Question, except that when it is pending the main question can be laid on the table, carrying to the table also all adhering motions, including the motion for the Previous Question.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.
4. Must be seconded.
5. Is not debatable.
6. Is not amendable. However, it has a special characteristic that permits an effect similar to amendment when the motion is applied while a series of questions is pending. When a motion for the Previous Question is immediately pending in such a case, it can be made again with more or fewer pending questions included (subject to the restrictions shown in Standard Characteristic 2, above), before the first motion for the Previous Question is voted on. The procedure resembles filling blanks (see 12:92–113) except that each of the motions must be made by a member who has obtained the floor, and each must be seconded.13 For example, if one member has made this motion in the unqualified form when a series of questions is pending (so that it would apply only to the question immediately pending at that time), another member can move it on part of the series and still another can move it on all pending questions. The vote is taken first on the motion that would order the Previous Question on the largest number of motions; if this fails, then on the next smaller number, and so on, until one is adopted (by a two-thirds vote), or until all of the motions for the Previous Question are rejected.
7. Requires a two-thirds vote. (If a motion for the Previous Question fails to gain the necessary two-thirds vote, debate continues as if this motion had not been made.) In ordinary bodies, the requirement of a two-thirds vote for ordering the Previous Question is important in protecting the democratic process. If this rule were not observed, a temporary majority of only one vote could deny the remaining members all opportunity to discuss any measure that such a majority wished to adopt or kill.

8. An affirmative vote on the motion for the Previous Question can be reconsidered before any vote has been taken under the order for the Previous Question, but (in contrast to the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate) it cannot be reconsidered after the order has been partly executed; see also 16:13–16. A negative vote on the motion for the Previous Question can be reconsidered only until such time as progress in business or debate has been sufficient to make it essentially a new question—that is, only until such time as it is reasonable to assume that debate or action on any of the motions involved may have made more members desire to vote immediately on some or all of the questions still pending. Thereafter, it can be renewed (see 38:7).

16:6 Equal Application of Rules to Nonstandard Forms Such as “Call for the Question.” A motion such as “I call for [or “call”] the question,” “I demand the previous question,” “I move to close [or “end”] debate,” or “I move we vote now” is simply a motion for the Previous Question made in nonstandard form, and it is subject to all of the rules in this section. Care should be taken that failure to understand this fact does not lead to violation of members’ rights of debate.

16:7 Sometimes the mere making of a motion for the Previous Question or “call for the question” may motivate unanimous consent to ending debate. Before or after such a motion has been seconded, the chair may ask if there is any objection to closing debate. If member(s) object or try to get the floor, he must ask if there is a second to the motion or call; or, if it has already been seconded, he must immediately take a vote on whether to order the Previous Question. But regardless of the wording of a motion or “call” seeking to close debate, it always requires a second and a two-thirds vote, taken separately from and before the vote(s) on the motion(s) to which it is applied, to shut off debate against the will of even one member who wishes to speak and has not exhausted his right to debate (see 4:32, 43:8–13).

16:8 Exemption of Undebated Preamble from the Previous Question Unless Separately Ordered. When a resolution having a preamble (one or more explanatory clauses beginning “Whereas,...”) is pending, if the Previous Question is ordered on the resolution before consideration of the preamble has been reached (10:16ff., 12:23, 28:7), the order does not apply to debate and amendment of the preamble, to which the assembly proceeds before voting on the resolution. After the chair has declared the preamble open to debate and amendment in such a case, the entire resolution can be brought to an immediate vote, if desired, by then ordering the Previous Question on the preamble.

16:9 Voting on a Series of Motions Under the Previous Question; Interruption of Execution. When the Previous Question is ordered on a series of pending motions as explained above under Standard Characteristic 2, they are voted on in order of rank beginning with the immediately pending question—that is, in reverse of the order in which they were made. If the series includes motions to Postpone Definitely, to Commit, or to Postpone Indefinitely and one of these motions is adopted, further voting stops—regardless of how many of the remaining questions were, or were not, included under the order for the Previous Question. But if voting is not stopped in such a manner, then, when all of the motions on which the Previous Question was ordered have been voted on, consideration of any questions still pending resumes under the regular rules.

16:10 If a question or series of questions (including motions on which the Previous Question has been ordered) ceases to be the pending business before all of the motions affected by the order have been voted on, execution of the order is said to be interrupted. Interruption of the execution of an order for the Previous Question may occur as follows:

• If a motion to Postpone, to Commit, or to Postpone Indefinitely on which the Previous Question has been ordered is adopted (as in the preceding paragraph) in a case where one or more of the remaining questions were also included under the order, execution of the order is thus interrupted after it has been partly carried out.

• Before or after an order for the Previous Question has been partly carried out, as already noted, it is also possible for its execution to be interrupted as a result of the question(s)’s being laid on the table, or by the intervention of a special order set for a particular hour (14, 41), a question of privilege (19), a recess (8, 20), or an adjournment (8, 21). (If the hour set for a special order, a recess, or an adjournment has arrived and the Previous Question has been ordered on one or more pending motions, however, there usually will be no objection to the chair’s putting them all to a vote in succession before he announces the matter that intervenes.)

16:11 Exhaustion of the Previous Question. The Previous Question is said to be exhausted (in reference to a particular order for it) when all of the motions on which it was ordered have been finally disposed of, or when any motions not yet finally disposed of are no longer affected by the order. The conditions for exhaustion of the Previous Question are the same as for an order limiting or extending limits of debate—that is: (1) when all motions on which the Previous Question was ordered have been voted on; (2) when those not yet voted on have either been committed or postponed indefinitely; or (3) at the end of the session in which the Previous Question was ordered—whichever occurs first. After the Previous Question is exhausted, any remaining questions that come up again are open to debate and amendment just as if there had been no order for the Previous Question.

16:12 If the execution of an order for the Previous Question is interrupted and if the motion or motions that were pending come up again later, the rules in the foregoing paragraph apply as follows:

• If the questions were referred to a committee and are later reported, the Previous Question is exhausted and the motions are open to debate and amendment, even if it is during the same session.
• But if the interruption of execution occurred by any other means than referral and the questions come up again during the same session, the order remains in effect; all motions on which the Previous Question was ordered must be voted on immediately (unless a reconsideration of the order is possible and a motion to reconsider it has been made, or is then made; see below).
• If the questions do not come up again until a later session, the Previous Question is always exhausted, regardless of how the interruption of execution occurred.

16:13 Reconsideration of a Vote That Has Ordered the Previous Question. As noted in Standard Characteristic 8, a vote that has ordered the Previous Question can be reconsidered before, but not after, any of the motions affected by the order have been voted on. Consequently, it will frequently happen that a motion to reconsider an affirmative vote on the Previous Question itself can be made only in the brief moment after the vote ordering the Previous Question is completed and before the first vote is taken under the order.

16:14 If the execution of an order for the Previous Question was interrupted before any vote was taken under the order, and if the questions come up again during the same session, a motion to reconsider the order (if not made earlier) can be made only in the moment after the chair has announced these questions as the pending business and before any of them are voted on. In addition, the regular time limits for making a motion to Reconsider apply (see 37).

16:15 It should be noted that if a motion or series of motions that is under an order for the Previous Question comes up after having been postponed, there can never be a reconsideration of the order. The reason is that the motion to Postpone can only have been made before the Previous Question was ordered, so that the order for the Previous Question will always have been partly executed by the vote that caused the postponement.

16:16 In practice, if a motion to reconsider an affirmative vote on the Previous Question prevails, the vote that adopted the motion to Reconsider is also presumed to have carried out the reconsideration and to have reversed the vote that is reconsidered. That is, the Previous Question is now presumed to be rejected and is not voted on again, for this reason: in such a case, only members opposed to the Previous Question would vote to reconsider it after it had been adopted; consequently, if a majority have voted for reconsideration, it will be impossible to obtain a two-thirds vote in favor of the Previous Question.

16:17 Reconsideration of a Vote While the Previous Question Is in Effect. An order for the Previous Question does not prevent the making of a motion to Reconsider, nor does it prevent the assembly from taking up a motion to Reconsider that was made either before or after the Previous Question was ordered. Whether or not debate is in order during reconsideration depends on when the reconsideration takes place. If a motion to Reconsider becomes pending while the Previous Question is in effect, the motion to Reconsider is undebatable and the motion to be reconsidered cannot be debated or amended. But if the reconsideration occurs after the Previous Question is exhausted, the motion to Reconsider and the question to be reconsidered are no longer affected by the Previous Question.

16:18 Effect on Appeals. An appeal is undebatable if it is made after the Previous Question has been moved or ordered and before the order is exhausted.
16:19 Effect on Subsequent Motions Generally. The general rules as to the effect of an unexhausted order for the Previous Question on subsequent motions that would normally be debatable or amendable are as follows:

• While one or more motions on which the Previous Question has been ordered remain pending, the order also applies to any other motions that may take precedence over these pending questions. (The rules stated in the two preceding paragraphs—relating to reconsiderations and appeals—are applications of this principle.)

• But if a question of privilege is raised and is admitted for immediate consideration (see 19), or if a special order set for a particular hour intervenes, these questions are independent of an unexhausted order for the Previous Question applying to business that they interrupt.
Form and Example

16:20 The forms used in making this motion include: “I move the previous question” (to apply only to the immediately pending question); “I move [or “call for”] the previous question on the motion to commit and its amendment”; “I move the previous question on all pending questions”; and so on. Calls of “Question!” by members from their seats are not motions for the Previous Question and are disorderly if another member is speaking or seeking recognition.

16:21 In stating the question on this undebatable, unamendable motion, the chair does not pause or ask, “Are you ready for the question?” but puts the question for a rising vote on the motion for the Previous Question immediately, as shown below. Similarly, in announcing an affirmative result, he at once states the question on the motion that is then immediately pending.

16:22 As a first example, assume that a series of several debatable and amendable motions is pending.

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move the previous question [or, if it is desired that the order affect more than just the immediately pending question, “I move the previous question on…,” specifying the motions]. (Second.)

CHAIR: The previous question is moved and seconded on [naming the motions].

16:23 If the assembly is not familiar with the use of the Previous Question, the chair should at this point explain it. In any case, the chair then proceeds to take the vote:

CHAIR: Those in favor of ordering the previous question on [repeating the motion or motions], rise…. Be seated. Those opposed, rise…. Be seated.
Assume two thirds vote in favor of the Previous Question. The result is announced as follows:

CHAIR: There are two thirds in the affirmative and the previous question is ordered on [naming again the motions to which the order applies]. The question is now on the adoption of the motion to... [stating in full the immediately pending question]. Those in favor... [and so on, putting to vote in proper sequence all motions on which the Previous Question has been ordered].

If less than two thirds vote in the affirmative, the chair announces the result of the vote on the motion for the Previous Question as follows:

CHAIR: There are less than two thirds in the affirmative and the motion for the previous question is lost. The question is now on... [stating the question on the immediately pending motion]. Debate may now resume. [The chair does not say, “Are you ready for the question?” here, since the assembly has just shown that it is not ready.]

The following example shows the forms used in handling alternative motions for the Previous Question that specify different numbers of pending questions in a series, as described under Standard Characteristic 6.

Assume that a resolution, an amendment to the resolution, and a motion to Commit are pending (in which case the motion to Commit is the immediately pending question).

MEMBER X (obtaining the floor): I move the previous question. (Second.) [In this case only the motion to Commit is affected.]
CHAIR: The previous question is moved and seconded on the motion to commit. Those in favor of ordering...
MEMBER Y (quickly rising and interrupting the chair): Mr. President.
CHAIR: For what purpose does the member rise?
MEMBER Y: I move the previous question on all pending questions.
CHAIR: The previous question is also moved on all pending questions. The question is now on the motion for the previous question on all pending questions. Those…

MEMBER Z (quickly rising): Mr. President.

CHAIR: For what purpose does the member rise?

MEMBER Z: I move the previous question on the motion to commit and on the amendment to the resolution. (Second.)

CHAIR: The previous question is also moved and seconded on the motion to commit and on the amendment to the resolution. The question is first, however, on the motion to order the previous question on all pending questions. Those in favor of ordering… [and so on. Alternative motions for the Previous Question are voted on in order beginning with the one that would apply to the largest number of pending questions. Therefore, after admitting Member Y’s motion, the chair starts to put the question on it first; but after admitting Member Z’s, he returns to taking a vote on Member Y’s. If one of these motions for the Previous Question is adopted, any remaining ones are ignored.]

16:28 If a member wishes to make a higher-ranking motion or to move a reconsideration while a motion for the Previous Question is pending or after the Previous Question has been ordered, he seeks limited recognition by rising and interrupting the chair just as in the example above.
§17. LAY ON THE TABLE

(To interrupt the pending business so as to permit doing something else immediately)

17:1 The motion to Lay on the Table enables the assembly to lay the pending question aside temporarily when something else of immediate urgency has arisen or when something else needs to be addressed before consideration of the pending question is resumed, in such a way that:

- there is no set time for taking the matter up again;
- but (until the expiration of time limits explained in 17:8) its consideration can be resumed at the will of a majority and in preference to any new questions that may then be competing with it for consideration.

This motion is commonly misused in ordinary assemblies—in place of a motion to Postpone Indefinitely (11), a motion to Postpone to a Certain Time (14), or other motions. Particularly in such misuses, it also is known as a motion “to table.”

17:2 By adopting the motion to Lay on the Table, a majority has the power to halt consideration of a question immediately without debate. Such action violates the rights of the minority and individual members if it is for any other purpose than the one stated in the first sentence of this section. In ordinary assemblies, the motion to Lay on the Table is not in order if the evident intent is to kill or avoid dealing with a measure. If a time for resuming consideration is specified in making the motion, it can be admitted only as a motion to Postpone (14), in which case it is debatable (see also 17:13–19).
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

17:3  The subsidiary motion to Lay on the Table:

1. Takes precedence over the main motion, over all other subsidiary motions, and over any incidental motions that are pending when it is made. It yields to all privileged motions, and to motions that are incidental to itself.

2. Can be applied to main motions, with any other subsidiary motions that may be pending; can be thus applied to orders of the day (14, 41) or questions of privilege (19) while they are actually pending as main motions, and such an application is independent of, and does not carry to the table, any other matter that they may have interrupted; can be separately applied to debatable appeals that do not adhere (10:35) to the main question (or to nonadhering points of order referred by the chair to the judgment of the assembly that are debatable when so referred), and this application has no effect on the status of any other questions that may be pending; can be applied to adhering appeals—whether debatable or undebatable—only by laying the main question on the table, in which case the appeal and all other adhering motions go to the table also; and can be applied to an immediately pending motion to Reconsider (37), whenever Lay on the Table would be applicable if the motion to be reconsidered were immediately pending, and in such a case, it carries to the table also the motion to be reconsidered, or the series of questions adhering to the latter motion. It cannot be applied to an undebatable appeal that does not adhere to the main question; and it cannot be applied to any subsidiary motion except in connection with application to the main question. No motion or motions can be laid on the table apart from motions which adhere to them, or to which they adhere; and if any one of them is laid on the table, all such motions go to the table together. The motion to Lay on the Table can be made while an order limiting debate or an order for the Previous Question is in force (see also below). No subsidiary motion can be applied to the motion to Lay on the Table.

Since the motion to Lay on the Table can be applied only to a question that is actually pending, a class or group of main questions such as orders of the day, unfinished business, or committee reports cannot be laid on the table as a unit. (An item of business can be reached in such a case, however, by methods that are explained in 17:14 and 41:38.)

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.
4. Must be seconded.
5. Is not debatable. It is proper for, and the chair can ask, the maker of this motion to state his reason first, however, as: “Our speaker must catch an early flight,” or “Laying this question aside temporarily will ensure adequate time to consider the next item of business, which must be decided at this meeting.” (The urgency and the legitimate intent of the motion can thus be established; but mentioning its purpose imposes no requirement as to when or whether the assembly will take the question from the table. An essential feature of this motion is that it cannot be qualified in any way and that, so long as the question remains on the table, the decision as to when—or if—it will be taken up is left open. For the limitations on the length of time that a question can lie on the table, see 17:8.)
6. Is not amendable.
7. Requires a majority vote.
8. An affirmative vote on the motion to Lay on the Table cannot be reconsidered, because it is easier and more direct to move to take the question from the table (see below). A negative vote on the motion to Lay on the Table can be reconsidered only until such time as the motion can be renewed. As explained in 17:11, renewal of the motion to Lay on the Table is permitted only when either (a) progress in business or debate has been sufficient to make it essentially a new question, or (b) something urgent has arisen that was not known when the assembly rejected this motion; see 38:7.
Further Rules and Explanation

17:4 Laying a Question on the Table and Taking It from the Table. Rules affecting the motion to Lay on the Table are closely related to the motion to Take from the Table (34), as follows:

17:5 Adopting a motion to Lay on the Table places on the table—that is, in the care of the secretary—the pending question and everything adhering to it. Thus, if a resolution with a proposed amendment and a motion to Commit are pending and the resolution is laid on the table, all of these questions go to the table at the same time and, if taken from the table, all will return together. (But a proposed amendment to anything previously adopted—existing bylaws, for example—is a main motion and when laid on the table does not carry with it what it proposes to amend.)

17:6 After a question has been laid on the table, it can be taken from the table by a majority vote as soon as the interrupting business is disposed of—or at some later time before the limits for taking it from the table have expired (see below)—whenever no question is pending, provided that business of the same class as the question on the table, or unfinished business, general orders, or new business, is in order.

17:7 When a question is taken from the table, everything is in the same condition, so far as possible, as it was when laid on the table, except as the rules relating to amendment, debate, and voting may be affected when the question is taken up on another day or at a later session, as noted in 34 (see Status of a Question Taken from the Table, 34:6–7).

17:8 A question that has been laid on the table remains there and can be taken from the table during the same session (8), or, if the next regular business session will be held before a quarterly time interval has elapsed (see 9:7), also until the end of the next regular session. If not taken from the table within these time limits, the question dies, although it can be reintroduced later as a new question. (For additional rules regarding the meetings at which a question can be taken from the table, see Time Limits on Taking a Question from the Table, 34:3.)

17:9 Status of a Question Lying on the Table. Since a motion that has been laid on the table is still within the control of the assembly (38:8), no other motion on the same subject is in order that would either conflict with, or present substantially the same question as, the motion that is lying on the table. To consider another motion on the same subject, it is necessary first to take the question from the table and then to move the new proposal as a substitute, or to make whatever other motion is appropriate to the case.

17:10 Additional Steps That May Be Required When Laying a Question on the Table. Laying a question on the table with the idea of attending to something else does not suspend any rules or set aside an order of business that may interfere with doing the thing desired at the time. Taking up the desired business may require an additional motion after the question has been laid on the table (see Suspend the Rules, 25; Taking Up Business out of Its Proper Order, 41:37–39).

17:11 Renewal of the Motion to Lay on the Table; Laying a Question on the Table Again. A motion to Lay on the Table that has been voted down can be renewed, or a question that has been taken from the table can be laid on the table again, subject to the following condition in either case: A motion made the same day to lay the same question on the table is in order only after material progress in business or debate has been made, or when an unforeseen urgent matter requires immediate attention. (This rule is a consequence of the fact that the rejection of a motion to Lay on the Table or the taking of a question from the table means that the assembly wishes to consider the matter at that time.) Motions to Recess (20) or to Adjourn (21) that have been made and lost do not justify a new motion to lay the same question on the table, but the renewal might be justified after a vote on an important amendment or on a motion to Commit.

17:12 Laying the Pending Questions on the Table After Debate Has Been Closed. If debate has been closed by ordering the Previous Question or by the expiration of the time to which debate was limited, then up until the moment of taking the last vote under the order, the questions still before the assembly can be laid on the table. Thus, while a resolution and an amendment are pending, if the Previous Question is ordered on both motions, it is in order to lay the resolution on the table, carrying with it the adhering amendment. If the amendment had already been voted on, it would likewise have been in order to lay the resolution on the table.

17:13 Misuses of the Motion. As stated at the beginning of this section, the motion to Lay on the Table is subject to a number of incorrect uses that must be avoided.16

17:14 It is not in order to move to lay a pending question on the table if there is evidently no other matter requiring immediate attention. However, if members who command a majority wish to bring up a measure out of its order but lack the two thirds required to suspend the rules to do so, they may lay each intervening matter on the table in succession, until the desired matter is reached. This is proper because their evident object is not to suppress without debate the items laid on the table, but instead to advance consideration of something they consider more urgent. (See also 41:38.) At a special meeting, it is dilatory (39) and not in order to move to lay on the table the matter for which the meeting has been called.

17:15 The motion to Lay on the Table is often incorrectly used and wrongly admitted as in order with the intention of either killing an embarrassing question without a direct vote, or of suppressing a question without debate. The first of these two uses is unsafe if there is any contest on the issue; the second is in violation of the fundamental principle of parliamentary law that only a two-thirds vote can rightfully suppress a main question without allowing free debate.

17:16 If the majority were to lay a question on the table, erroneously supposing that it thereby becomes dead, some of those who voted with the majority might leave before the time of final adjournment and the minority might all stay. The real minority might thus become a temporary majority, take the question from the table, and act upon it in the absence of many interested parties. They also might take the question from the table at the next session in cases where that session is held at least within the next quarterly time interval (see 9:7).

17:17 Correct Procedures in lieu of Misuses. In the situations that give rise to improper use of the motion to Lay on the Table, the correct procedures are as follows:

17:18 If it is desired to dispose of a question without a direct vote, the suitable method is to use the motion to Postpone Indefinitely. If it is desired to do this without further debate, the motion to Postpone Indefinitely can be followed immediately by a motion for the Previous Question. A motion that has been indefinitely postponed is killed for the remainder of the session, but is no more difficult to renew at a later session than any other motion that is subject to such renewal (38:3(2)).

17:19 If it is believed that any discussion of a particular original main motion might do harm, the proper course is to raise Objection to the Consideration of the Question (26) before its consideration has begun. For cases where Postpone (14) is the proper motion in lieu of an incorrectly used motion to Lay on the Table, see “Form and Example,” below.
Form and Example

17:20 Forms used in making this motion are: “I move to lay the question on the table”; or “I move that the resolution be laid on the table.” (It is preferable to avoid moving “to table” a motion, or “that the motion be tabled.”)\(^\text{17}\)

17:21 This motion, as explained earlier, is undebatable and cannot be qualified in any way. In moving it, a member can mention its intended purpose or name a time at which he plans to move that the question be taken from the table, but he cannot move to lay a question “on the table until after the completion of…,” or, “on the table until 2 P.M.” Rather than always ruling that such a motion is not in order, however, the chair should properly treat it as a motion “to postpone the question until…”; that is, he should state the motion as admitted in that form unless the motion to Postpone is not in order at the time.

17:22 Since the motion to Lay on the Table can be neither debated nor amended, the chair puts it to a vote immediately after stating the question on it, as follows:

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to lay the pending question(s) on the table. As many as are in favor of laying the pending question(s) on the table, say aye.... Those opposed, say no.... [and so on, as in the examples already given for motions requiring a majority vote for adoption].

17:23 For certain limited purposes not involving debate or amendment—such as to make a privileged motion or a motion to Reconsider (37)—a member can claim the floor while the motion to Lay on the Table is pending. To do so, the member rises and interrupts the chair by calling out “Mr. President!”— immediately after the chair has said, “It is moved and seconded to lay the pending question(s) on the table,” and before the vote is taken. The chair grants the member limited recognition by answering, “For what purpose does the member rise?”

17:24 After a question has been laid on the table, if further action by the assembly is needed to reach the desired business, the chair immediately says, for example, “Is there a motion to suspend the rules that interfere with hearing the speaker at this time?” (Or, “The chair will entertain a motion to…”)

1. Upon the reconsideration of a vote that postponed a main motion indefinitely, both the main motion and the motion to Postpone Indefinitely will become pending, the motion to Postpone Indefinitely becoming the immediately pending question.

2. Secondary amendments must not be confused with secondary motions, a much more general concept explained in 5:3ff.

3. It should be noted that the application of the word “delete” to any form of amendment is not a preferred parliamentary usage, but the shortened expression “to strike” is acceptable.

4. A motion to strike out a paragraph from one place and insert it in a different place is also possible. Such a motion is not a motion to substitute; it is similar to the second of the two types of motions to strike out and insert (applying to words) discussed in 12:58–59. The wording of the paragraph cannot be materially amended by a motion of this type or by any secondary amendments to it. However, once such a motion has been adopted, the transferred paragraph may be amended by any of the usual forms.

5. For an exception, see 12:47.

6. It is thus possible to introduce a proposed “substitute for a substitute,” which cannot be amended, since it is a secondary amendment.

7. If the members are familiar with the procedure for handling motions to substitute, the chair may omit this sentence.

8. Such freedom of action as provided in this paragraph is not obtained, however, by informal consideration (13:3, 52:24–27).

9. It should be noted that a similar rule applies to the subsidiary motion to Lay on the Table (see 17:3(2), 17:14, 41:38).

10. Under an order that provides a time for closing debate on a secondary motion or a consecutive series of secondary motions without affecting the main motion, this restriction does not apply.

11. In practice it is seldom appropriate to move to lay a pending question or series of questions on the table after the Previous Question has been ordered on them; but a legitimate need to do so may sometimes arise, particularly in a large assembly if the vote(s) are to be taken by a method such as by ballot, standing for a count, or roll call (see also 45, and Misuses of the Motion to Lay on the Table, 17:13–16).

12. An example of such a motion is the motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate (15).

13. For the form to be followed by the chair in granting limited recognition to a member who seeks the floor at such a time, see 16:27.

14. Although the rules of the United States House of Representatives permit the Previous Question to be ordered by a majority vote, there are differences between the conditions in that body and in the ordinary organization that should be understood. Because of another House rule, an order for the Previous Question does not actually bring a measure to an immediate vote in Congress unless it has already been debated. If no discussion of the measure has taken place on the floor of the House, forty minutes’ debate is allowed after adoption of the Previous Question—twenty minutes for each of the opposing sides. These rules derive from the great volume of business and the fact that under the two-party system of government by elected representatives, opposing sides often become nearly equal. At the same time, this system creates special conditions that make it unlikely that there will be unfair use of the power to curtail debate.
The United States Senate does not admit the Previous Question, although it permits debate to be limited by means of a motion for cloture.

15. When the Previous Question has been ordered on a number of motions, the order is said to be partly executed (or partly carried out) if one or more, but not all, of these motions have been voted on. When all of the motions specified in the order have been voted on, it is fully executed.

16. Some misuses of the motion to Lay on the Table probably arise from a misunderstanding of the practice of the United States House of Representatives, where this motion has gradually become converted to a special purpose that is not applicable in ordinary assemblies. The press of legislation in the House is so great that only a fraction of the bills introduced each year can be considered. With this volume of work under the two-party system in such a large body, the majority must be given power to suppress a measure without debate, and the agenda must be tightly regulated. The House rules therefore do not allow a question to be taken from the table without first suspending the rules by a two-thirds vote. Consequently, when a matter is laid on the table in the House it is virtually killed.

17. In the United States, the word “table” used as a verb often suggests the improper application of the motion to Lay on the Table, as explained in 17:13–16. In British usage, on the other hand, the same expression has an entirely different meaning and refers not to a subsidiary motion but to the introduction of a proposed resolution or document to be placed among items of business waiting to be considered.
CHAPTER VII

PRIVILEGED MOTIONS
§18. CALL FOR THE ORDERS OF THE DAY

(To demand to take up the proper business in order)

18:1 A Call for the Orders of the Day is a privileged motion by which a member can require the assembly to conform to its agenda, program, or order of business, or to take up a general or special order that is due to come up at the time (14, 41), unless two thirds of those voting wish to do otherwise.

18:2 Taking up business in the prescribed order is of substantial importance, especially in conventions—which must follow a closely regulated schedule with much of the underlying work taking place off the convention floor in conferences and committees. For business to receive proper consideration, officers, committee members, and the delegates who are principally involved in major questions must be able to know the approximate times at which subjects will come up.

18:3 If the presiding officer consistently performs his duty of announcing the business to come before the assembly in its proper order, there will be no occasion for calling for the orders of the day. But the chair may fail to notice that the time assigned for a general or special order has arrived, or he may skip an item in the order of business by mistake, or delay announcing a special order set for that time because he thinks the assembly is so interested in the pending question that it does not yet wish to take up the special order. In these cases, any member has the right to call for the orders of the day.¹ The call must be simply “for the orders of the day” and not for a specified one, as this motion is only a demand that the proper schedule of business—whatever it is—be followed. In other words, while the member may remind the chair of what is scheduled, he cannot by this call obtain consideration of an order of the day that does not have first priority for consideration at that time.
18:4  The privileged Call for the Orders of the Day:

1. Takes precedence over all motions except (a) other privileged motions and (b) a motion to Suspend the Rules (25) that relates to the priority of business—although it can interrupt a pending question only if the neglect of a special order is involved (see below). It yields to all other privileged motions, and to any applicable incidental motions that may arise and that must be disposed of before it is disposed of. Except when a special order must be taken up, this call also yields to a motion to Reconsider or to the calling up (37) of a motion to Reconsider that has been made previously.

2. Is not applied to any motion, but is applicable as follows: (a) when the agenda, program, or order of business is being varied from; (b) when a general order that is in order at the time is not being taken up; or (c) when the time for considering a special order has arrived or passed and it is not being taken up. (For a statement of the precise times at which a Call for the Orders of the Day is in order, see below.) No subsidiary motion can be applied to this call.

3. If in order at the time, is in order when another has the floor, even if it interrupts a person speaking.

4. Does not require a second.

5. Is not debatable. (But the member making the call can remind the chair of the matter that is required to be taken up at the time.)

6. Is not amendable.

7. Upon a call by a single member the orders of the day must be enforced, except that a two-thirds vote can set them aside. (That is, the orders of the day can be set aside: either by a vote of two thirds in the negative on a question put by the chair as to the assembly’s desire to proceed to the orders of the day; or by a vote of two thirds in the affirmative on a motion by a member to extend the time for considering the pending question, or to suspend the rules and take up the desired question; see below.)

8. Cannot be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation

18:5 Times When a Call for the Orders of the Day Is in Order.
The particular conditions under which a Call for the Orders of the Day is in order are as follows:

- Referring to cases (a) and (b) under Standard Characteristic 2, which do not involve the neglect of a special order: As soon as it is evident that the agenda, program, or order of business is being varied from, or that the time for the consideration of a postponed motion has arrived or passed, a Call for the Orders of the Day is in order whenever no question is pending. In such a case where no special order is involved, if a member starts to make a motion departing from the correct order of business, or if the chair announces a wrong item, the call must be made before any motion is stated by the chair; otherwise, it cannot be made until after the motion has been disposed of.

- Referring, on the other hand, to case (c) under Standard Characteristic 2: If the chair does not immediately announce a special order when the time set for its consideration has arrived, a Call for the Orders of the Day can be made at once—even while another question is pending, unless the pending question is itself a special order that was made before the one set for the present time was made (see 14, 41). From the time when a particular special order becomes the proper order of business and until it is announced, a Call for the Orders of the Day is in order.

18:6 A Call for the Orders of the Day cannot be made in a committee of the whole (see 52).

18:7 Status of an Order of the Day as a Main Motion. In contrast to the privileged Call for the Orders of the Day, an order of the day which such a call may bring before the assembly is itself invariably a main motion, and when it is announced and pending, it is debatable and amendable, and all of the other rules governing main motions apply to it. The orders of the day as a whole cannot be laid on the table or postponed, but an individual order of the day when actually pending can be so disposed of. As soon as the orders of the day that have interrupted business that was pending are completed, the interrupted business is taken up again at the point at which it was discontinued.

18:8 Setting Aside the Orders of the Day. When the orders of the day are called for, the chair can, and ordinarily should, immediately either interrupt or conclude consideration of the pending question (in accordance with the rules in 41) and proceed to take up the business prescribed for the present time. But sometimes the chair or a member may sense that the assembly would prefer to continue consideration of the presently pending question or take up another matter first. In such cases, the assembly by a two-thirds vote can set aside the orders of the day, as follows:

a) At the initiative of the chair: Instead of announcing the orders of the day when they are called for, the chair can put the question on proceeding to them: “The orders of the day are called for. The orders of the day are [identifying the business that is in order]. The question is: Will the assembly proceed to the orders of the day? As many as are in favor of proceeding to the orders of the day… [and so on, taking a rising vote].” Since to refuse to proceed to the orders of the day is an interference with the order of business similar to suspending the rules, two thirds in the negative are required to vote down this question and refuse to take up the orders of the day. Once the assembly has refused to proceed to the orders of the day, they cannot be called for again until the pending business is disposed of.

b) At the initiative of a member: When the orders of the day are called for or announced, a member can move (depending on the case) “that the time for considering the pending question be extended” a certain number of minutes, or “that the rules be suspended and” the desired question be taken up (see 25). These motions require a two-thirds vote in the affirmative for their adoption, since they change the order of business, agenda, or program.
Form and Example

18:9 The form of the motion is as follows: To call for the orders of the day, a member rises and, addressing the chair without waiting for recognition, says, “Mr. President, I call for the orders of the day,” or “Madam President, I demand the regular order.” The member can, if necessary, remind the chair of the matter set for that time.

18:10 Assume that at yesterday’s meeting of a convention, a resolution was postponed and made a special order for 11:30 A.M. today. That time has now arrived, but a member is speaking on a pending question.

MEMBER A (rising and addressing the chair): Madam President, I call for the orders of the day.

CHAIR: The orders of the day are called for. Yesterday the convention postponed the resolution relating to tax reform to 11:30 A.M. today, and made it a special order. It is now 11:30. The question is on the resolution, “Resolved, That…”

18:11 After consideration of the resolution is completed, the former business is resumed where it was left off:

CHAIR: When the orders of the day were called for, the convention was considering the resolution “Resolved, That…” Mr. Henley had the floor at that time. The chair recognizes Mr. Henley.
§19. RAISE A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

19:1 To Raise a Question of Privilege is a device that permits a request or main motion relating to the rights and privileges of the assembly or any of its members to be brought up for possible immediate consideration because of its urgency, while business is pending and the request or motion would otherwise not be in order. (For types and examples of questions of privilege, see 19:7–17.)

19:2 This device operates as follows: A member rises and addresses the chair saying that he “rises to a question of privilege…” (as explained in 19:8), and the chair immediately directs the member to state his question of privilege; the chair must then rule (subject to appeal, see 24) whether the request or motion is in fact a question of privilege and, if so, whether it is urgent enough to interrupt the pending business.

19:3 It is important to understand the distinction between the device Raise a Question of Privilege and the question of privilege itself. The point to be decided in connection with the former is whether a certain question shall be admitted for consideration with the status and priority of the latter. The “raising” of a question of privilege is governed by rules appropriate to the device’s high rank in the order of precedence of motions. When a question of privilege is taken up after it has been raised and has been admitted by the chair, however, depending on the form in which it was introduced, it is handled as a request (32, 33), or it is treated as a main motion and is debatable and amendable and can have any subsidiary motion applied to it—regardless of whether it interrupted, or awaited the disposal of, the pending business. Questions of privilege can also be introduced while no motion is pending, either as requests or by being moved and seconded just as any other main motion; in that case, the device of “raising” a question of privilege does not enter in.

19:4 Questions of privilege or motions growing out of them should not be confused with “privileged motions” (or “privileged questions”). The latter comprise the five highest-ranking motions in the order of precedence, among which Raise a Question of Privilege is assigned a position.

19:5 The eight characteristics below apply only to the device of raising a question of privilege; that is, to a member’s obtaining recognition to state his urgent motion or request while business is pending, and to the chair’s ruling on the question’s admissibility as noted above (and described in 19:8–10).
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

19:6 The privileged device Raise a Question of Privilege:

1. Takes precedence over all other motions except the three higher-ranking privileged motions to Recess, to Adjourn, and to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn. It yields to these three privileged motions, and to any applicable incidental motions that may arise and that must be disposed of before it is disposed of.

2. Cannot be applied to any other motion, and no subsidiary motion can be applied to it.

3. Is in order when another has the floor if warranted by the urgency of the situation. (In such cases, the raising of a question of privilege is in order after another has been assigned the floor and before he has begun to speak; it cannot interrupt a member who is actually speaking unless the object of the question of privilege would otherwise be defeated—as it would be, however, in each of the two examples at the end of this section, 19:11–17. The raising of a question of privilege cannot interrupt voting or verifying a vote.)

4. Does not require a second, as relates to raising the question of privilege; that is, no second is required at any step in the process unless (after the chair has directed the member to state his question of privilege) the member states it in the form of a motion; such a motion must be seconded.

5. Is not debatable; that is, there can be no debate as to admitting the request or motion that has been raised as a question of privilege. (See, however, 19:9, allowing a brief description of the situation.) In contrast, a main motion that is pending after having been admitted as a question of privilege is debatable.
6. Is not amendable; that is, the motion to Amend is not applicable to the process of raising a question of privilege. (But a main motion that is pending after having been admitted as a question of privilege can be amended.)

7. Is ruled upon by the chair. No vote on the question’s admissibility is taken unless the chair’s ruling is appealed (24).

8. The chair’s ruling on whether to admit the request or motion that has been raised as a question of privilege cannot be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation

19:7 Types of Questions of Privilege. Questions of privilege are of two types: (1) those relating to the privileges of the assembly as a whole; and (2) questions of personal privilege. If the two come into competition, the former take precedence over the latter. Questions of the privileges of the assembly may relate to its organization or existence; to the comfort of its members with respect to heating, ventilation, lighting, and noise or other disturbance; to the conduct of its officers and employees, or of visitors; to the punishment of its members; or to the accuracy of published reports of its proceedings; etc. A motion to go into executive session (9) is a question of the privileges of the assembly. Questions of personal privilege—which seldom arise in ordinary societies and even more rarely justify interruption of pending business—may relate, for example, to an incorrect record of a member’s participation in a meeting contained in minutes approved in his absence, or to charges circulated against a member’s character.

19:8 Steps in Raising and Disposing of a Question of Privilege. In raising a question of privilege, a member rises, addresses the chair without waiting for recognition, and says, “I rise to a question of privilege affecting the assembly,” or “… to a question of personal privilege.”

19:9 The chair, even if he has assigned the floor to another person, directs the member to state his question of privilege. Depending on the case, the member then either (a) describes the situation briefly and asks that it be remedied, or (b) if he believes that the matter will require formal action by the assembly, makes a motion covering his question of privilege, and another member seconds it. The chair at his discretion can ask a member to put into the form of a motion a question of privilege that the member has stated as a request. Unless the point is simple enough to be promptly adjusted (as in the first example, below) or unless it is in the form of a motion and is not seconded, the chair rules whether the question is a question of privilege, and, if so, whether it is of sufficient urgency to warrant interruption of the existing parliamentary situation. From this ruling an undebatable appeal can be taken.

If the motion made as a question of privilege is seconded, and if the chair admits it as such and decides that it should be entertained immediately, he states the question on it and proceeds as with any other main motion. When the question of privilege has been disposed of, business is resumed at exactly the point at which it was interrupted. If a member had the floor when the question of privilege was raised, the chair assigns him the floor again.
Form and Example

19:11 The forms used in raising a question of privilege include: “I rise to a question of privilege affecting [or “relating to”] the assembly” (or “to a question of the privileges of the assembly”), and “I rise to a question of personal privilege.” The preceding forms should always be adhered to in cases where it is necessary to interrupt a person speaking. When a question of the privileges of the assembly is raised in a small meeting without interrupting a speaker, a variation such as “A question of privilege, Mr. President!” is permissible.

19:12 The following is an example of a question relating to the privileges of the assembly that can be stated as an informal request and that can be routinely adjusted by the chair:

19:13 Assume that, while an important speech is in progress at a meeting in a large hall with upper windows, workmen begin to operate jackhammers in an alley beside the building. Member A rises and interrupts, addressing the chair:

MEMBER A: Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege affecting the assembly.

CHAIR: The gentleman will state his question.

MEMBER A: Mr. President, I don’t think we’re going to be able to hear unless some of the windows are closed.

CHAIR: Will one of the ushers ask the building engineer to have the windows closed on the left side. May we have the sound turned up a little until the windows are closed.

19:14 The next example illustrates a question of the privileges of the assembly requiring a formal motion which interrupts pending business. In an ordinary society these occasions are rare, but in a convention or large assembly a situation of unforeseen complications may cause such a motion to become appropriate.

19:15 Assume that, to hear a prominent speaker, an association has opened one of its meetings to the public. Because of the speaker’s commitments at a later hour, his address was given first, preceding the business meeting—which was expected to be brief and routine. But Member X has surprised this meeting by introducing a resolution dealing with a delicate matter of obvious importance that may call for prompt action by the association.

19:16 Member Y, sensing that consideration of this question should be kept within the organization, interrupts Member X’s speech on the pending resolution by rising “to a question of privilege relating to the assembly.” As directed by the president, he states the question of privilege:

MEMBER Y: Mr. President, I believe this is a question we should consider privately. With apologies to our guests, I move to go into executive session. (Second.)

CHAIR: The chair rules that the question is one of privilege to be entertained immediately. It is moved and seconded to go into executive session.

19:17 Debate or amendment follows, if needed; then the question is put to a vote. If the motion is adopted, the president expresses appreciation to guests. As soon as they have left, he states the resolution that was interrupted by the question of privilege, and recognizes Member X, who had the floor.
§20. RECESS

20:1  A recess is a short intermission in the assembly’s proceedings, commonly of only a few minutes, which does not close the meeting and after which business will immediately be resumed at exactly the point where it was interrupted. A recess may be taken, for example, to count ballots, to secure information, or to allow for informal consultation.

20:2  The privileged motion to Recess (or to Take a Recess) is a motion that a recess begin immediately, made while another question is pending.

20:3  A motion to recess that is made when no question is pending (whether the recess is to begin immediately or at a future time) is a main motion, and the eight characteristics given below do not apply to it. Consequently, a motion to recess is privileged only when another question is pending; and a motion to take a recess at a future time is in order only when no question is pending.

20:4  The eight characteristics below apply only to the privileged motion to Recess.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

20:5 The privileged motion to Recess:

1. Takes precedence over the main motion, over all subsidiary and incidental motions, and over all privileged motions except those to Adjourn and to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn. It yields to motions to Amend or for the Previous Question that are applied to it, and it yields to the privileged motions to Adjourn and to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn (but in the cases where motions to adjourn or to set a time for meeting again are “not privileged” — that is, are main motions — it takes precedence over these motions; see 21 and 22). It also yields to any applicable incidental motions that may arise and that must be disposed of before the motion to Recess is voted on.

2. Is not applied to any motion. Motions to Amend can be applied to it. The Previous Question can also be applied to it to prevent amendments being moved, although this situation rarely arises in ordinary societies. No other subsidiary motion can be applied to it.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is not debatable. (But see 43:31–32 regarding allowable explanation of an undebatable motion.)

6. Is amendable as to the length of the recess; any such amendment is undebatable.

7. Requires a majority vote.

8. Cannot be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation

20:6 Declaring a Recess When It Has Been Provided For in the Agenda or Program. If a recess is provided for in the adopted agenda or program of a convention or other meeting, the chair, without further action by the assembly, announces the fact and simply declares the assembly in recess when the specified time arrives. If the chair does not announce the recess at the scheduled time, a member can call for the orders of the day (18), thereby demanding that the recess be declared.

20:7 Postponing the Time for Taking a Scheduled Recess. The time for taking a scheduled recess can be postponed by a two-thirds vote if, when that time arrives, the assembly does not wish to recess. In the latter event, the taking of the recess is treated just as any other order of the day that is due to be taken up, and it can be set aside by any of the procedures described in 18:8.
Form and Example

20:8 Forms in which this motion may be made are: “I move that the meeting recess [or “take a recess”] until 2 P.M.”; “I move to recess for ten minutes”; or “I move to recess until called to order by the chair.”

20:9 If such a motion is adopted, the chair announces the result as follows:

CHAIR: The ayes have it and the meeting stands recessed [or, “in recess”] for fifteen minutes [rapping once with the gavel, if desired].

20:10 At the end of the specified time, the chair gains the attention of the assembly and begins:

CHAIR: The convention [or “meeting”] will come to order. The time of recess has expired. The question is on the resolution… [Or, if the recess was taken following the vote on a question or an election but before the result had been announced, the first business would be the announcement of the vote.]

21:1 To adjourn means to close the meeting (8). A motion to adjourn may be a privileged or a main motion depending on a number of conditions. The motion to adjourn that commonly occurs in meetings of ordinary societies is the privileged motion. The adoption of any motion to adjourn closes the meeting immediately unless the motion specifies a later time for adjourning (but if it does specify such a time it is not a privileged motion).

21:2 The privileged motion to Adjourn (which is always moved in an unqualified form with no mention of a time either for adjourning or for meeting again) is a motion to close the meeting immediately, made under conditions where some other provision for another meeting exists (so that the adjournment will not have the effect of dissolving the assembly), and where no time for adjourning the present meeting has already been set. In such a case, regardless of whether business is pending, a majority should not be forced to continue in session substantially longer than it desires, and even if no business is pending, a decision as to whether to close the meeting should not be allowed to consume time. For this reason, when there is provision for another meeting and no time for adjourning is already set, an unqualified motion “to adjourn” is afforded sufficiently high privilege to interrupt the pending question and, on adoption, to close the meeting before the pending business is disposed of. And for the same reason, such a motion has the unique characteristic that, even if it is made while no question is pending, it is not debatable or amendable and it remains subject to all of the rules governing the privileged motion to Adjourn (except those that relate to making the motion while business is pending; see Standard Descriptive Characteristics). Under the conditions just described, a motion to Adjourn is therefore said to be “privileged” or to be “a privileged motion” even when no question is pending.

21:3 A motion to adjourn is always a privileged motion except in the following cases:

1) When the motion is qualified in any way, as in the case of a motion to adjourn at, or to, a future time.
2) When a time for adjourning is already established, either because the assembly has adopted a motion or a program setting such a time, or because the order of business, the bylaws, or other governing rules prescribe it.
3) When the effect of the motion to adjourn, if adopted, would be to dissolve the assembly with no provision for another meeting, as is usually the case in a mass meeting or the last meeting of a convention.

Under any of conditions (1) through (3) above, a motion to adjourn is not privileged and is treated just as any other incidental main motion. Consequently, a motion to adjourn at or to a future time is always out of order while business is pending in any assembly; and any motion to adjourn at all is out of order while business is pending under either of conditions (2) or (3)—which, however, do not commonly apply to meetings of ordinary societies.

21:4 In ordinary societies having bylaws that provide for several regular meetings during the year and having no fixed hour for adjournment, a motion “to adjourn,” when unqualified, is always a privileged motion. In meetings of these organizations, such a motion to Adjourn is in order regardless of whether business is pending; and even when business is not pending, this motion is undebatable and is subject to the rules given below.
21:5 The following eight characteristics apply only to the privileged motion to Adjourn.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

21:6 The privileged motion to Adjourn:

1. Takes precedence over all motions except the privileged motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn; but it is not in order while the assembly is engaged in voting or verifying a vote, or before the result of a vote has been announced by the chair, except that, in the case of a vote taken by ballot, a motion to Adjourn is in order after the ballots have been collected by the tellers and before the result has been announced. It yields to the privileged motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn (but it takes precedence over a motion to set a time for meeting again in the cases where such a motion is “not privileged”—that is, is a main motion; see 22). It also yields to any applicable incidental motions that may arise and that must be disposed of before the motion to Adjourn is voted on; but an incidental motion that can wait may not be entertained after a motion to Adjourn has been made.

2. Is not applied to any motion, and no subsidiary motion can be applied to it.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is not debatable (see 21:10–12, however).

6. Is not amendable.

7. Requires a majority vote.

8. Cannot be reconsidered (but see 21:13 regarding its renewal).
Further Rules and Explanation

21:7 Effect of Adjournment on Pending Business or on an Uncompleted Order of Business. Except as the assembly may have adopted rules providing otherwise, the effect of an adjournment on a pending motion or an uncompleted order of business is as follows:

a) When the adjournment does not close the session (as when an adjourned meeting (9) has been set, or in any meeting of a convention except the last one): Business is immediately resumed at the next meeting at the point where it left off, except that there may first be brief opening ceremonies or reading of the minutes (see 41).

b) When the adjournment closes the session in an assembly having its next regular business session within a quarterly time interval (see 9:7), and having no members whose terms of membership expire before the next regular session (for example, in ordinary clubs and societies that hold frequent “regular meetings”): The complete order of business is followed at the next regular session. If a question was pending at the time of adjournment, it is taken up as the first item under unfinished business (or under special orders, if it was a special order)—resuming the question at exactly where it was previously interrupted. Any general or special order that was not reached is also taken up under unfinished business or under special orders, respectively (see 41).

c) When the adjournment closes a session in a body that will not have another regular session within a quarterly time interval (see 9:7), or closes a session that ends the term of all or some of the members (as may happen in an elected legislative assembly or in a board): Matters temporarily but not finally disposed of, except those that remain in the hands of a committee to which they have been referred (see 9:8–11), fall to the ground. They can, however, be introduced at the next session, the same as if they had never before been brought up.

21:8 Adjournment of Bodies Without Regularly Scheduled Meetings. The adjournment of a mass meeting or the last meeting of a convention dissolves the assembly unless provision has been made whereby it will, or may, be later reconvened. When adjournment would dissolve an assembly, the motion to adjourn is a main motion. A motion to close the session in an assembly that will thereby be dissolved, or will not meet again for a long time unless called into authorized special session under the bylaws or other governing rule, is often referred to as a motion to “adjourn sine die,” which means to “adjourn without day” (see also 8:2(6)). If the bylaws of an organization provide for the calling of a special convention after the regular convention session has been held, this assembly should meet as a distinct session with a body of delegates and alternates that must be chosen anew under provisions established in the bylaws. However, program items normally associated with conventions of the organization need not be provided for.

21:9 If a board or committee meeting is adjourned without any provision having been made for future meetings, the next meeting is held at the call of the chairman (see also 50:21–22). Consequently, since there usually is no fixed hour for adjournment, the unqualified motion to adjourn is usually privileged in boards or committees. When a special committee has completed the business referred to it, however, it “rises” and reports, which is equivalent to the main motion to adjourn sine die (or without day).

21:10 Parliamentary Steps That Are in Order While the Privileged Motion to Adjourn Is Pending, or After the Assembly Has Voted to Adjourn. Although the privileged motion to Adjourn is undebatable, the following parliamentary steps are in order while it is pending:

• to inform the assembly of business requiring attention before adjournment;
• to make important announcements;
• to make (but not to take up)7 a motion to reconsider a previous vote;
• to make a motion to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes (37:46–52);
• to give notice of a motion to be made at the next meeting (or on the next day, in a session consisting of daily meetings) where the motion requires previous notice (see 10:44–51); and
• to move to set a time for an adjourned meeting (9, 22) if there is no meeting scheduled for later within the same session.

21:11 Any of the above steps that are desired should be taken care of earlier, if possible; but there may sometimes be no such opportunity, particularly in a convention or a session of several meetings that is following an adopted agenda or program (41), or in cases where a meeting of an ordinary society adjourns before completing its regular order of business. If any matters of the types listed above arise after it has been moved to adjourn, the chair should state the facts briefly, or a member who rises and addresses the chair for the purpose may do so—or make the necessary motion or give the desired notice—before the vote is taken on the motion to Adjourn. If something requires action before adjournment, the member who moved to adjourn can be requested to withdraw his motion.

21:12 Regardless of the type of motion by which it is voted to adjourn, the meeting is not closed until the chair has declared that the meeting “is adjourned” (or “stands adjourned”), and members should not leave their seats until this declaration has been made. After it has been voted to adjourn but before the chair has declared the meeting adjourned, it is still in order to take any of the steps listed above (in 21:10), if necessary. In announcing an affirmative vote on a motion to adjourn, the chair should usually pause before declaring the meeting adjourned, saying: “The ayes seem to have it. [Pausing and resuming slowly:] The ayes have it, and the meeting is adjourned.” The pause affords time for members to demand a division (29) on the vote to adjourn, or to take any of the other steps just described. If the chair learns, immediately after declaring the assembly adjourned, that a member seeking the floor for one of these purposes had risen and addressed the chair before the adjournment was declared, then, since the adjournment was improper and this breach was promptly noted, the chair must call the meeting back to order—but only long enough for the purpose for which the member legitimately sought the floor.

21:13 Legitimate Renewal of the Privileged Motion and Its Abuses. Since a motion to Adjourn may be voted down because a majority wish to hear one speech or take one vote, this motion must be renewable as soon as there has been any progress in business or even material progress in debate. But this privilege of renewal and the high rank of the motion are sometimes abused to the annoyance of the assembly. The chair should therefore refuse to entertain a motion to Adjourn that is obviously made for obstructive purposes—for example, when a motion to Adjourn has just been voted down and nothing has taken place since to indicate that the assembly may now wish to close the meeting. If a member who has not properly obtained the floor calls out, “I move to adjourn,” such a call cannot be entertained as a motion except by unanimous consent (see Dilatory Motions, 39).

21:14 Cases Where the Assembly Can Adjourn Without a Motion. If an hour for adjourning a meeting within a convention or other session of more than one meeting has been scheduled—either in an agenda or program or by the adoption of a motion setting a time—no motion to adjourn is necessary when that hour arrives. The chair simply announces the fact and declares the meeting adjourned, as described for a recess in 20:6. If the assembly does not then wish to adjourn, the matter is handled as a case of setting aside the orders of the day, as explained in 18:8 (see also 41:56). If such a meeting wishes to adjourn earlier, it is done by a main motion, which, however, can be adopted by a majority vote (see 21:3). The rules stated above regarding parliamentary steps that are in order after it has been voted to adjourn are applicable in this case also.

21:15 When it appears that there is no further business in a meeting of an ordinary local society that normally goes through a complete order of business (41) at each regular meeting (9), the chair, instead of waiting or calling for a motion to adjourn, can ask, “Is there any further business?” If there is no response, the chair can then say, “Since there is no further business, the meeting is adjourned.”
Form and Example

21:16  The following forms may be used for either a privileged or a main motion: “I move to adjourn,” or “I move that the meeting [“now”] adjourn.” Additional forms in order as a main motion are: “I move that the club now adjourn to meet at 8 P.M. on April 10,” or “I move that the convention adjourn sine die [or “adjourn without day”].”

21:17  Assume that while a resolution is pending in a regular monthly meeting of a local society, a member obtains the floor and moves to adjourn, and the motion is seconded. Since this motion is privileged and therefore undebatable, the chair immediately puts the question.

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to adjourn. Those in favor, say aye [continuing to take the vote as described in 4:37].

21:18  If the motion is adopted, the chair announces the result and declares the meeting adjourned (first making sure that no member is seeking the floor, as described in 21:12). If the motion is lost, the chair, after announcing the result, immediately restates the resolution that was pending when the motion to Adjourn was made.

21:19  After the pending resolution has been disposed of, or if there has been sufficient debate to show that the assembly now wishes to adjourn, a new motion to adjourn is in order. If such a motion is made and seconded and there is no other business, the chair, if he senses a general desire to adjourn, can suggest unanimous consent (4:58–63), as follows:

CHAIR: If there is no objection, the meeting will now adjourn. [Pause.] Since there is no objection, the meeting is adjourned.
21:20 The adjournment may be signaled by a single rap of the gavel, if desired.
§22. FIX THE TIME TO WHICH TO ADJOURN

22:1 The object of the motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn (also referred to as the motion to “fix the time for an adjourned meeting”) is to set the time, and sometimes the place, for another meeting to continue business of the session, with no effect on when the present meeting will adjourn.

22:2 A motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn is in order only if at the time it is offered there is no meeting scheduled for later within the same session. If there is such a meeting, additional meetings within the same session may be set by a motion either to Suspend the Rules (25) or to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35), namely, the previously adopted agenda or program for the session.

22:3 A motion to fix the time to which to adjourn is privileged only when it is made while a question is pending.

22:4 If a motion to fix the time to which to adjourn is made in any assembly when no question is pending, it is in order and is debatable and subject to all of the other rules applicable to main motions. If feasible, any desired motion to fix the time to which to adjourn should be made while no other question is pending. But situations may arise in which immediate establishment of the time for an adjourned meeting is important, yet there is no opportunity to make a main motion. The privileged motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn can then be used.

22:5 The following eight characteristics apply only to the privileged motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

22:6 The privileged motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn:

1. Takes precedence over all other motions. It yields to motions to Amend or for the Previous Question that are applied to it and yields to any applicable incidental motions that may arise and that must be disposed of before the motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn is voted on. The privileged motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn can be moved even after the assembly has voted to adjourn, provided that the chair has not yet declared the assembly adjourned.

2. Is not applied to any motion. Motions to Amend can be applied to it. The Previous Question can also be moved on it to prevent amendments, although this seldom serves a useful purpose.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is not debatable. (But see 43:31–32 regarding allowable explanation of an undebatable motion, as in the example beginning 22:14.)

6. Is amendable as to the date, hour, or place; such amendments are undebatable.

7. Requires a majority vote.

8. Can be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation

22:7 Provisions as to Time and Place. In an organized society, the adjourned meeting scheduled by adoption of this motion (privileged or main) must be set for a time before that of the next regular meeting. When the assembly has no fixed place for its meetings, the motion should include the place as well as the time of the adjourned meeting.

22:8 If an assembly holding regularly scheduled business meetings adjourns to meet “at the call of the chair,” an adjourned meeting called accordingly is a continuation of the same session; but, if no such meeting is held before the next regular session, the adjournment of the previous session becomes final retrospectively as of the date the last meeting adjourned, and the chair’s authority to call an adjourned meeting expires.

22:9 Effect of the Motion. Whether introduced as a privileged or a main motion, the effect of this motion is to establish an adjourned meeting—that is, another meeting that will be a continuation of the session at which the motion is adopted. Unlike a special meeting, an adjourned meeting does not require notice, although it is desirable to give such notice if feasible. An adjourned meeting should not be confused with a special meeting, which is a separate session called, in ordinary societies, as prescribed by the bylaws.

22:10 Because of the nature of the situations that give rise to use of the privileged motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn, adoption of this motion is often followed by immediate introduction of a motion to Postpone, or of the privileged motion to Adjourn, depending on the purpose, as shown in the examples below. At the adjourned meeting, except for the reading of the minutes, business will be taken up from the point at which the previous meeting adjourned or at which questions were postponed.

22:11 It should be noted that the adoption of this motion does not adjourn the present meeting or set a time for its adjournment; thus, it has no direct effect on when the present meeting shall adjourn, and is very different from a motion to fix the time at which to adjourn (which is always a main motion).
Form and Example

22:12 Forms in which this motion may be made are: “I move that when this meeting adjourns, it adjourn to meet at 2:00 P.M. tomorrow”; “I move that when this meeting adjourns, it stand adjourned to meet at 8:00 P.M. on Wednesday, April 2, at the Riggs Hotel”; or “I move that on adjournment, the meeting adjourn to meet at the call of the chair.”

22:13 In announcing an affirmative result, the chair says, for instance, “The ayes have it. When the meeting adjourns this evening, it will adjourn to meet at 2 P.M. tomorrow.”

22:14 As a first example, assume that a number of members wish to set up an adjourned meeting to deal with an involved pending question, so that the remaining order of business can be completed now.

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): Madam President, I believe the pending resolution will require longer discussion than we have time for this evening. I move that when the meeting adjourns, it adjourn to meet here next Tuesday at 8:15 P.M. (Second.)

22:15 The chair states the question on this motion. Amendment as to time and place is possible, but no debate is in order. The chair then puts to vote the motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn. After announcing the result—whether adoption or rejection—she says that the question is on the resolution, which she rereads or indicates by descriptive title. If the motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn has been adopted, Member A rises once more.

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move to postpone the pending resolution to the adjourned meeting set for next Tuesday evening. (Second.)
The motion to postpone is considered in the usual manner. If it is adopted, the chair continues:

CHAIR: The ayes have it and the resolution is postponed to the adjourned meeting. The next item of business is...

As a second example, assume that the motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn is to be made with a view to immediate adjournment to a specified time, when this purpose cannot be reached by a main motion:

At the annual meeting of a society, the hour is growing late. A controversial bylaw amendment is pending, on which a strong minority is determined to continue debate.

MEMBER X (obtaining the floor): I move that when this meeting adjourns, it adjourn to meet at the same time tomorrow evening.
(Second.)

The motion is treated as in the first example. If it is adopted, Member X, after the question has been restated on the pending bylaw amendment, again rises and addresses the chair.

MEMBER X (obtaining the floor): I move that the club now adjourn.
(Second.)

The chair states the question on the motion to Adjourn and immediately puts it to vote. If it is adopted, the chair announces the result, as follows:

CHAIR: The ayes have it and the club stands adjourned until eight o’clock tomorrow evening.
Footnotes to Chapter VII

1. When a convention adopts a program that includes an agenda for the business session together with the times for events outside of business meetings, the events outside the business meetings are not subject to a Call for the Orders of the Day.

2. The term question of privilege is applied to any request or motion relating to the rights and privileges of the assembly or its members, whether or not it is introduced by means of the device Raise a Question of Privilege.

3. For an explanation of the distinction between recess and adjournment, see 8, especially 8:7.

4. In state or national organizations where subordinate units choose delegates each time an annual or biennial convention is held, each convention is a separate assembly, since it is made up of a different body of delegates.

5. When much time may be consumed in counting ballots, it is generally better to take a recess, but the assembly can adjourn if it has previously appointed a time for the next meeting. In any case, the result of the ballot vote should be announced as soon as business is resumed.

6. In the case of an adopted motion which is the subject of a motion to Reconsider that was not finally disposed of, it is only the motion to Reconsider that falls to the ground, and the adopted motion then goes into effect.

7. Because of time limits on moving a reconsideration, a motion to Reconsider is allowed to be made and recorded (but not to be considered) while a motion to Adjourn is pending, or even after it has been voted to adjourn and before the chair has declared the assembly adjourned. A motion to Reconsider that is made at such a time normally must wait to be called up at a later meeting, unless it is made before the motion to Adjourn is voted on and that motion is withdrawn or voted down. If the reconsideration is moved after it has been voted to adjourn and it appears to require immediate attention, however, the chair must then retake the vote on the motion to Adjourn (see unique characteristics of the motion to Reconsider, 37:8).
CHAPTER VIII

§23. POINT OF ORDER

23:1 When a member thinks that the rules of the assembly are being violated, he can make a Point of Order (or “raise a question of order,” as it is sometimes expressed), thereby calling upon the chair for a ruling and an enforcement of the regular rules.

See 6:15ff. for a list of these motions and a description of their characteristics as a class.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

23:2  A Point of Order:

1. Takes precedence over any pending question out of which it may arise. It yields to all privileged motions and (if it adheres to pending question(s), 10:35) it yields to a motion to lay the main question on the table, in cases where these motions are in order at the time according to the order of precedence of motions. Except for yielding to the motion to Lay on the Table when it adheres to pending question(s) as just stated, it does not yield to any subsidiary motion so long as it is handled in the normal manner—that is, by being ruled upon by the chair without debate. Consequently, under this normal procedure:

- If a point of order which adheres to pending question(s) is raised while any one of the six lower-ranking subsidiary motions is immediately pending, no other subsidiary motion except Lay on the Table can be made until the point of order is disposed of; but in such a case, Lay on the Table or any privileged motion can be moved and must be considered before the point of order is ruled upon.

- If a point of order which does not adhere to pending question(s) is raised while any subsidiary motion is immediately pending, no subsidiary motion can be made until the point of order is disposed of, but any privileged motion can be moved and must be considered first.

- With reference to either of the above cases, on the other hand, if a motion to Lay on the Table or a privileged motion is pending and a point of order arises out of the parliamentary situation existing then, the point of order is disposed of first, although it can be interrupted by a still higher-ranking privileged motion.
In cases where the chair, being in doubt, refers the point of order to the judgment of the assembly and where the point thereby becomes debatable (see Standard Characteristic 5, below), it—like a debatable appeal (24)—also: yields to the subsidiary motions to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate and for the Previous Question; yields to the motions to Commit and to Postpone Definitely provided that they are in order at the time according to the order of precedence of motions; and yields to incidental motions arising out of itself.

2. Can be applied to any breach of the assembly’s rules. So long as it is handled in the normal manner by being ruled upon by the chair, no subsidiary motion can be applied to it—except that, if it adheres to pending question(s), then (unless the motion to Lay on the Table was already pending when the point of order arose) the main question can be laid on the table while the point of order is pending, and the point of order also goes to the table with all adhering motions. If the chair, being in doubt, refers the point of order to the judgment of the assembly and it thereby becomes debatable (see Standard Characteristic 5, below), the application of subsidiary motions to it is governed by the same rules as stated for debatable appeals under Standard Characteristic 2, 24:3(2).

3. Is in order when another has the floor, even interrupting a person speaking or reading a report if the point genuinely requires attention at such a time (see Timeliness Requirement for a Point of Order, 23:5).

4. Does not require a second.

5. Is not debatable—but, with the chair’s consent, a member may be permitted to explain his point and knowledgeable or interested members can be heard by way of explanation. If the chair submits the point to a vote of the assembly, the rules governing its debatability are the same as for an Appeal (see 23:19; see also 24:3(5)).
6. Is not amendable.
7. Is normally ruled upon by the chair. No vote is taken unless the chair is in doubt or his ruling is appealed.
8. Cannot be reconsidered; that is, the chair’s ruling on a point of order cannot be reconsidered. If the chair submits the point to a vote of the assembly, however, the vote of the assembly can be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation

23:3 Grounds for a Point of Order. It is the right of every member who notices a breach of the rules to insist on their enforcement. If the chair notices a breach, he corrects the matter immediately; but if he fails to do so—through oversight or otherwise—any member can make the appropriate Point of Order. The presiding officer may wish to engage in brief research or consult with the parliamentarian before ruling, and may allow the assembly to stand at ease (see 8:2(4)) while he does so. In any event, when the presiding officer has made a ruling, any two members can appeal (one making the appeal and the other seconding it), as described in 24.1.

23:4 If a member is uncertain as to whether there is a breach on which a point of order can be made, he can make a parliamentary inquiry of the chair (see 33:3–5). In ordinary meetings it is undesirable to raise points of order on minor irregularities of a purely technical character, if it is clear that no one’s rights are being infringed upon and no real harm is being done to the proper transaction of business.

23:5 Timeliness Requirement for a Point of Order. The general rule is that if a question of order is to be raised, it must be raised promptly at the time the breach occurs. For example, if the chair is stating the question on a motion that has not been seconded, or on a motion that is not in order in the existing parliamentary situation, the time to raise these points of order is when the chair states the motion. After debate on such a motion has begun—no matter how clear it is that the chair should not have stated the question on the motion—a point of order is too late. If a member is unsure of his point or wishes to hear what the maker has to say on behalf of the motion before pressing a point of order, he may, with the chair’s sufferance, “reserve a point of order” against the motion; but after the maker has spoken, he must insist upon his point of order or withdraw it. Points of order regarding the conduct of a vote must be raised immediately following the announcement of the voting result (see 45:9).

23:6 The only exceptions to the requirement that a point of order must be made promptly at the time of the breach arise in connection with breaches that are of a continuing nature, whereby the action taken in violation of the rules is null and void. In such cases, a point of order can be made at any time during the continuance of the breach—that is, at any time that the action has continuing force and effect—regardless of how much time has elapsed. Instances of this kind occur when:

a) a main motion has been adopted that conflicts with the bylaws (or constitution) of the organization or assembly,

b) a main motion has been adopted that conflicts with a main motion previously adopted and still in force, unless the subsequently adopted motion was adopted by the vote required to rescind or amend the previously adopted motion,

c) any action has been taken in violation of applicable procedural rules prescribed by federal, state, or local law,

d) any action has been taken in violation of a fundamental principle of parliamentary law (25:9), or

e) any action has been taken in violation of a rule protecting absentees, a rule in the bylaws protecting the secrecy of the members’ votes (as on a ballot vote), or a rule protecting a basic right of an individual member (25:7, 25:10–11).

(For particular rules applicable to boards, see 23:9.)

23:7 Remedy for Violation of the Right to Vote. If one or more members have been denied the right to vote, or the right to attend all or part of a regular or properly called meeting during which a vote was taken while a quorum was present, a point of order concerning the action taken in denying the basic rights of the individual members can be raised so long as the decision arrived at as a result of the vote has continuing force and effect. If there is any possibility that the members’ vote(s) would have affected the outcome, then the results of the vote must be declared invalid if the point of order is sustained. If there is no such possibility, the results of the vote itself can be made invalid only if the point of order is raised immediately following the chair’s announcement of the vote. If the vote was such that the number of members excluded from participating would not have affected the outcome, a member may wish, in the appropriate circumstances, to move to Rescind or Amend Something Previously Adopted (35), to move to Reconsider (37), or to renew a motion (38), arguing that comments in debate by the excluded members could have led to a different result; but the action resulting from the vote is not invalidated by a ruling in response to a point of order raised at a later time.

23:8 Remedy for Inclusion of Improper Votes. If the announced result of a vote included votes cast in violation of a fundamental principle of parliamentary law, such as votes cast by nonmembers or by absent members, or multiple votes improperly cast by a single member, a point of order can be raised so long as the decision arrived at as a result of the vote has continuing force and effect. If there is any possibility that the vote(s) would have affected the outcome, the results of the vote must be declared invalid if the point of order is sustained.

23:9 Remedy When Action Taken by an Executive Board Is Null and Void. If the executive board of a society takes action that exceeds the board’s instructions or authority, that conflicts with a decision made by the assembly of the society, or that falls under any of the categories listed in 23:6, a point of order can be raised at a board meeting at any time during the continuance of the breach. If the point of order is sustained, the action must be declared null and void. Alternatively, the society’s assembly can adopt an incidental main motion by majority vote declaring that the board’s action is null and void; or, if it is affecting business at a meeting of the assembly, the board’s action can be declared null and void by a ruling of the chair relating to the affected business or on a relevant point of order raised by a member. It is also possible for the assembly to bring disciplinary measures against the board members who voted for the improper action. If the assembly finds itself in sympathy with the board’s action and the action is one that that assembly could have authorized in advance, the assembly can instead ratify the action as explained in 10:54–57.

23:10 Precedent. The minutes include the reasons given by the chair for his or her ruling (see 48:4(10)). The ruling and its rationale serve as a precedent for future reference by the chair and the assembly, unless overturned on appeal, the result of which is also recorded in the minutes and may create a contrary precedent. When similar issues arise in the future, such precedents are persuasive in resolving them—that is, they carry weight in the absence of overriding reasons for following a different course—but they are not binding on the chair or the assembly. The weight given to precedent increases with the number of times the same or similar rulings have been repeated and with the length of time during which the assembly has consistently adhered to them.

23:11 If an assembly is or becomes dissatisfied with a precedent, it may be overruled, in whole or in part, by a later ruling of the chair or a decision of the assembly in an appeal in a similar situation, which will then create a new precedent. Alternatively, adoption, rescission, or amendment (35) of a bylaw provision, special rule of order, standing rule, or other motion may alter the rule or policy on which the unsatisfactory precedent was based.
Form and Example

23:12 When a member notices a breach of order that may do harm if allowed to pass, he rises and, without waiting for recognition, immediately addresses the chair as follows:

MEMBER A: I rise to a point of order. [Or, “Point of order!”]

23:13 Anyone who is speaking takes his seat. If the point relates to a transgression of the rules of debate, the form used may be:

MEMBER A: Mr. President, I call the gentleman to order.

23:14 The chair then asks the member to state his point of order, or what words in the debate he objects to.

MEMBER A: I make the point of order that...

23:15 On completing his statement, the member resumes his seat. The chair then rules whether “the point of order is well taken” or “is not well taken,” stating briefly his reasons, which are recorded in the minutes. If the chair desires, he can review the parliamentary situation without leaving the chair, but standing, before giving his ruling.

23:16 If the chair’s decision requires any action and no appeal is made, he sees that the necessary action is taken before proceeding with the pending business. Thus, if the point of order relates to a breach of decorum in debate that is not serious, the chair can allow the member to continue his speech. But if the member’s remarks are decided to be improper and anyone objects, the member cannot continue speaking without a vote of the assembly to that effect (see 61:11).
Before rendering his decision, the chair can consult the parliamentarian, if there is one. The chair can also request the advice of experienced members, but no one has the right to express such opinions in the meeting unless requested to do so by the chair.

When the chair is in doubt as to how to rule on an important point, he can submit it to the assembly for decision in some such manner as:

CHAIR: Mr. Downey raises a point of order that the amendment is not germane to the resolution. The chair is in doubt and submits the question to the assembly. The resolution is [reading it]. The proposed amendment is [reading it]. The question is, “Is the amendment germane to the resolution?”

Since no appeal can be made from a decision of the assembly itself, this question is open to debate whenever an appeal would be—that is, the question submitted by the chair to the assembly for decision is debatable except when it relates to indecorum or transgression of the rules of speaking, or to the priority of business, or when an undebatable question is immediately pending or involved in the point of order. As in the case of debate on an appeal (24), when a point of order that is submitted to a vote is debatable, no member can speak more than once in the debate except the chair, who can speak in preference to other members the first time, and who is also entitled to speak a second time at the close of debate.

In the example given above, the question may be put as follows:

CHAIR: Those of the opinion that the amendment is germane, say aye. … Those of the opinion that it is not germane, say no…. The ayes have it and the amendment is in order. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.
Or:

CHAIR:... The noes have it and the amendment is not in order. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

23:21  When a point of order is submitted to a vote of the assembly and the point relates to stopping something from being done, it is usually best to put the question so that an affirmative vote will be in favor of allowing the proceedings to continue as if the point had not been raised. Thus, if a point is made that the chair is admitting a motion which is not in order, the question should be put so that an affirmative result of the vote will mean that the motion is in order—as in the example above, or as follows: “... Those of the opinion that the motion is in order, say aye.... ; etc.” When a member has been called to order because of indecorum in debate, the corresponding form is: “... Those of the opinion that the member should be allowed to resume speaking, say aye....” If the foregoing principle has no clear application to the case, the question can be put so that an affirmative result will uphold the point of order: “... Those of the opinion that the point is well taken, say aye....”

24:1  By electing a presiding officer, the assembly delegates to him the authority and duty to make necessary rulings on questions of parliamentary law. But any two members have the right to Appeal from his decision on such a question. By one member making (or “taking”) the appeal and another seconding it, the question is taken from the chair and vested in the assembly for final decision.

24:2  Members have no right to criticize a ruling of the chair unless they appeal from his decision.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

24:3  An Appeal:

1. Takes precedence over any question pending at the time the chair makes a ruling from which the appeal is made. It yields to all privileged motions (provided that they are in order at the time according to the order of precedence of motions), and it yields to incidental motions arising out of itself. If it is debatable (see Standard Characteristic 5, below), it also yields to the subsidiary motions to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate and for the Previous Question, and yields to the motions to Commit, to Postpone Definitely, and to Lay on the Table, provided that they are in order at the time according to the order of precedence of motions. If it is undebatable and adheres to pending question(s), it does not yield to any subsidiary motion except to Lay on the Table; and if it is undebatable and does not adhere to pending question(s), it yields to no subsidiary motion.

2. Can be applied to any ruling by the presiding officer except that:
   a) if a point of order is raised while an appeal is pending, there is no appeal from the chair’s decision on this point of order, although the correctness of the ruling can be brought up later by a motion covering the case; and
   b) when the chair rules on a question about which there cannot possibly be two reasonable opinions, an appeal would be dilatory and is not allowed.

Rules governing the applicability of subsidiary motions to debatable appeals are as follows: A motion limiting or extending debate or a motion for the Previous Question can be applied to a debatable appeal without affecting any other pending question. Also:
• When a debatable appeal does not adhere to pending question(s)—that is, when the decision on it would in no way affect pending question(s)—such a debatable appeal can have any of the subsidiary motions applied to it except Postpone Indefinitely and Amend.

• But when a debatable appeal adheres to pending question(s)—as in the case of an appeal from a ruling that an amendment is not germane—the subsidiary motions, except the motions affecting debate, cannot be applied to the appeal alone. However, they can be applied to the main question, and if the latter is committed, postponed, or laid on the table, the appeal goes with this main question.

In the case of undebatable appeals:

• When an undebatable appeal does not adhere to pending question(s), no subsidiary motion can be applied to it; however,

• When an undebatable appeal adheres to pending question(s), no subsidiary motion can be applied to it alone; but the main question can be laid on the table, and the appeal then goes to the table with the main question and all adhering motions.

3. Is in order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is debatable, unless it (a) relates to indecorum or a transgression of the rules of speaking; (b) relates to the priority of business; or (c) is made when an undebatable question is immediately pending or involved in the appeal. When an appeal is debatable, no member is allowed to speak more than once except the presiding officer—who need not leave the chair while so speaking, but should stand. The first time the chair speaks in debate on the appeal, he is entitled to preference over other members seeking recognition. He can answer arguments against the decision or give additional reasons by speaking a second time at the close of the debate. He may announce his intention to speak in rebuttal and ask if there are others who wish to speak first. Even when the appeal is not debatable, the chair can, when stating the question on it, give the reasons for his decision without leaving the chair.

6. Is not amendable.

7. A majority or a tie vote sustains the decision of the chair on the principle that the chair’s decision stands until reversed by a majority. If the presiding officer is a member of the assembly, he can vote to create a tie and thus sustain his decision.

8. Can be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation

24:4 Appropriateness of Appeal. If a member disagrees with a ruling of the chair affecting any substantial question, he should not hesitate to appeal. The situation is no more delicate than disagreeing with another member in debate. In the case of serious questions when proponents and opponents appear nearly equal, a presiding officer may welcome an appeal from his decision. By relieving the chair of responsibility in a strongly contested situation and placing it on the assembly itself, better relationships are often preserved.

24:5 Applicability Limited to Rulings. As explained in Standard Characteristic 2, an appeal is applicable only to a ruling by the chair.

24:6 No appeal can be made from the chair’s response to a parliamentary inquiry or other query, since such a reply is an opinion rendered by the chair, not a ruling on a question that has actually arisen. For example, if, in answer to a parliamentary inquiry, the chair states that a certain motion would not be in order at the time, this reply is not subject to appeal. But the point can be put at issue before the assembly by making the motion despite the chair’s opinion and, when he rules that the motion is not in order, appealing from the chair’s decision.

24:7 The chair’s judgment as to the more numerous side in a vote, or whether there are two thirds in the affirmative, also is not a ruling and is not subject to appeal. If a member doubts the correctness of such an announced result, however, he should call for a Division (see 29) or move that the vote be counted.

24:8 Timeliness Requirement for an Appeal. If an appeal is to be made, it must be made at the time of the chair’s ruling. If any debate or business has intervened, it is too late to appeal.
Form and Example

24:9  A member desiring to appeal rises and, without waiting to be recognized, addresses the chair as follows:

MEMBER A: I appeal from the decision of the chair. (Second.)
CHAIR: The decision of the chair is appealed from.

24:10  The chair, after stating clearly the exact question at issue, and the reasons for his decision if he thinks an explanation necessary, states the question on the appeal as follows:

CHAIR: The question is: “Shall the decision of the chair stand as the judgment of the assembly [or “club,” “society,” “board,” etc.]?”

Or:

CHAIR: The question is, “Shall the decision of the chair be sustained?”

24:11  The question is not on “sustaining the chair,” because the decision, not the presiding officer, is in question.

24:12  The vote is taken so that the affirmative will be in favor of sustaining the chair’s decision, as follows:

CHAIR: Those in favor of sustaining the chair’s decision, say aye....
Those opposed to sustaining this decision, say no....

24:13  After the result of the vote is announced, business is resumed in accordance with the situation existing after the action on the appeal.
§25. SUSPEND THE RULES

25:1 When an assembly wishes to do something during a meeting that it cannot do without violating one or more of its regular rules, it can adopt a motion to Suspend the Rules interfering with the proposed action—provided that the proposal is not in conflict with the organization’s bylaws (or constitution), with local, state, or national law prescribing procedural rules applicable to the organization or assembly, or with a fundamental principle of parliamentary law.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

25:2 The incidental motion to Suspend the Rules:

1. Can be made at any time that no question is pending. When business is pending, Suspend the Rules takes precedence over any motion if it is for a purpose connected with that motion. It yields to the motion to Lay on the Table and to all privileged motions when these motions are in order at the time according to the order of precedence of motions—except that if it relates to the priority of business it does not yield to a Call for the Orders of the Day. It also yields to incidental motions arising out of itself.

2. Can be applied to any rule of the assembly except bylaws (or rules contained in a constitution or corporate charter). No subsidiary motion can be applied to Suspend the Rules.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is not debatable. (But see 43:31–32 regarding allowable explanation of an undebatable motion.)

6. Is not amendable.

7. Usually requires a two-thirds vote (see below, however). In any case, no rule protecting a minority of a particular size can be suspended in the face of a negative vote as large as the minority protected by the rule.

8. Cannot be reconsidered (see below regarding its renewal).
Further Rules and Explanation

25:3 Object and Effect of the Motion. The object of this motion is to suspend one or more rules applicable to the assembly—such as rules contained in the parliamentary authority, special rules of order, or standing rules—that interfere with proposed action during a meeting. A motion to “take up a question out of its proper order,” or to consider one before a time to which it has been postponed, is an application of the motion to Suspend the Rules (see 14, 41).

25:4 In making the incidental motion to Suspend the Rules, the particular rule or rules to be suspended are not mentioned; but the motion must state its specific purpose, and its adoption permits nothing else to be done under the suspension. Such a motion, for instance, may be “to suspend the rules and take up the report of the Building Committee,” or “to suspend the rules and agree to [that is, to adopt without debate or amendment] the resolution…” When the purpose of a motion to Suspend the Rules is to permit the making of another motion, and the adoption of the first motion would obviously be followed by adoption of the second, the two motions can be combined, as in “to suspend the rules and take from the table (34) the question relating to…” The foregoing is an exception to the general rule that no member can make two motions at the same time except with the consent of the assembly—unanimous consent being required if the two motions are unrelated (see also 10:25, 27:10–11).

25:5 If a motion to Suspend the Rules is adopted and its object is to allow consideration of business that could not otherwise have been considered at the time, the chair immediately recognizes the member who moved the suspension of the rules, to make the appropriate motion that will bring up the desired business. Or, if no further motion is necessary (for example, if the two motions were combined as indicated above, or if the question is one that was postponed), the chair announces the business as pending.

25:6 Renewal of the Motion. If a motion to suspend the rules is voted down, it cannot be renewed by moving to suspend the rules for the same purpose at the same meeting, unless unanimous consent is given. It can, however, be renewed for the same purpose after an adjournment, even if the next meeting is held the same day. Any number of motions to suspend the rules for different purposes can be entertained at the same meeting.

25:7 Rules That Cannot Be Suspended. Rules contained in the bylaws (or constitution) cannot be suspended—no matter how large the vote in favor of doing so or how inconvenient the rule in question may be—unless the particular rule specifically provides for its own suspension, or unless the rule properly is in the nature of a rule of order as described in 2:14. However, a rule in the bylaws requiring that a vote—such as, for example, on the election of officers—be taken by (secret) ballot cannot be suspended so as to violate the secrecy of the members’ votes unless the bylaws so provide (see also Voting by Ballot, 45:18–24). Nothing in a corporate charter can be suspended unless the charter or applicable law so provides.

25:8 No applicable procedural rule prescribed by federal, state, or local law can be suspended unless the rule specifically provides for its own suspension.

25:9 Rules which embody fundamental principles of parliamentary law, such as the rule that allows only one question to be considered at a time (5:4), cannot be suspended, even by a unanimous vote. Thus, since it is a fundamental principle of parliamentary law that the right to vote is limited to the members of an organization who are actually present at the time the vote is taken in a regular or properly called meeting (45:56), the rules cannot be suspended so as to give the right to vote to a nonmember,\textsuperscript{7} or to authorize absentee voting (45:56ff.). Likewise, since it is a fundamental principle that each member of a deliberative assembly is entitled to one—and only one—vote on a question, the rules may not be suspended so as to authorize cumulative voting (46:43).

25:10 Rules protecting absentees cannot be suspended, even by unanimous consent or an actual unanimous vote, because the absentees do not consent to such suspension. For example, the rules requiring the presence of a quorum, restricting business transacted at a special meeting to that mentioned in the call of the meeting, and requiring previous notice of a proposed amendment to the bylaws protect absentees, if there are any, and cannot be suspended when any member is absent.\textsuperscript{8}

25:11 Rules protecting a basic right of the individual member cannot be suspended. Thus, while generally applicable limits on debate and the making of motions may be imposed by motions such as the Previous Question, the rules may not be suspended so as to deny any particular member the right to attend meetings, make motions or nominations, speak in debate, give previous notice, or vote. These basic rights may be curtailed only through disciplinary proceedings.

25:12 At a regular meeting of an organization that has an established order of business, the assembly cannot, even unanimously, vote to dispense with that order of business (in the sense of voting, in advance of the time when it adjourns, that the order of business shall not be gone through at all at that meeting). If the assembly, by a two-thirds vote, adopts a motion “to dispense with the regular order of business and proceed to”\(^9\) a certain subject, it has in effect voted to suspend the rules and pass all classes in the order of business which normally would precede that subject (see 41:37–39). In such a case, when the matter taken up out of its proper order has been disposed of, even if it has consumed as much time as the usual meeting, the chair must return to the regular order of business and call for the items in sequence, unless the assembly then votes to adjourn (see 21).

25:13 Rules that have their application outside of the session which is in progress cannot be suspended. For example, a policy prohibiting total contributions to any one charitable organization in excess of $500.00 in any one calendar year is a rule which has its application outside of a meeting context, and thus cannot be suspended so as to permit the adoption of a motion to make a contribution in excess of the specified amount. (Such a rule can, however, be rescinded or amended; see 35.) Likewise, the rules cannot be suspended in order to permit postponement of a motion to a future session that will be held after the next regular business session or that will be held after more than a quarterly time interval has elapsed.

25:14 Rules Whose Suspension Requires a Two-Thirds Vote. The rules of order of a society, as contained in the manual established by the bylaws as the parliamentary authority, or as included in any special rules of order adopted by the organization (see 2), are rules of parliamentary procedure, the suspension of which requires a two-thirds vote. Some societies call all their rules “standing rules.” But by whatever name a rule is called, if it relates to parliamentary procedure, it requires a two-thirds vote for its suspension.

25:15 Rules That Can Be Suspended by a Majority Vote. An ordinary\(^{10}\) standing rule, as the term is used in this book, is a rule that does not relate to parliamentary procedure as such and refers, for example, to such matters as the use of recording devices at meetings (see 2:23). Standing rules can be suspended by a majority vote. Through an incidental main motion adopted by a majority vote, a standing rule can be suspended for the duration of the current session.

25:16 Suspension of Rules by Unanimous Consent. Frequently, when the matter is clearly not controversial, time may be saved by asking unanimous consent rather than by making a formal motion to suspend the rules. A member who has obtained the floor can say, for example, “Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to offer the courtesy resolutions before we receive the report of the special committee.” The chair then asks if anyone objects and, if so, proceeds to take a vote on suspending the rules, just as if a formal motion had been made.
Form and Example

25:17 The usual form of this motion is:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move that the rules be suspended [or “to suspend the rules”] which interfere with... [stating the object of the suspension]. (Second.)

Or:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move to suspend the rules and take up... (Second.)

25:18 When the object is to adopt a motion without debate or amendment, the form is:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move to suspend the rules and adopt [or “agree to”] the following resolution: “Resolved, That...” (Second.)

25:19 A member moving to suspend the rules can briefly give sufficient information to enable the members to vote intelligently on his undebatable motion. (For the manner of taking a two-thirds vote, see 4:38–39 and provisions (d), (e), and (g) in 4:49.) In announcing an affirmative result, the chair says, for example,

CHAIR: There are two thirds in the affirmative and the rules are suspended for the purpose of... The chair recognizes Mrs. Watkins.

25:20 If such a motion does not receive the required two-thirds vote, the main motion can be taken up only in the normal way.
§26. OBJECTION TO THE CONSIDERATION OF A QUESTION

26:1 The purpose of an Objection to the Consideration of a Question is to enable the assembly to avoid a particular original main motion altogether when it believes it would be strongly undesirable for the motion even to come before the assembly.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

26:2   An Objection to the Consideration of a Question:

1. Takes precedence over original main motions and over an unstated subsidiary motion except Lay on the Table. The objection can be raised only before there has been any debate or any subsidiary motion except Lay on the Table has been stated by the chair; thereafter, consideration of the main question has begun and it is too late to object. It does not take precedence over any pending subsidiary motion. It yields to the motion to Lay on the Table, to all privileged motions, and to incidental motions arising out of itself.

2. Can be applied to original main motions (10:3) and to petitions and communications that are not from a superior body. It cannot be applied to incidental main motions. No subsidiary motion can be applied to it alone, but while it is pending the main question can be laid on the table, and the objection then goes to the table with the main question.

3. Is in order when another has the floor, until consideration of the question has begun, as indicated in Standard Characteristic 1, above.

4. Does not require a second.

5. Is not debatable. (But see 43:31–32 regarding allowable explanation of an undebatable motion.)

6. Is not amendable.

7. A two-thirds vote against consideration is required to sustain the objection.

8. A negative vote—that is, a vote sustaining the objection—can be reconsidered, but not an affirmative vote.
Further Rules and Explanation

26:3 Resemblance to Point of Order. An Objection to the Consideration of a Question is similar in some ways to a Point of Order. The presiding officer, on his own initiative, can submit his objection of this kind to a vote, just as he can raise a question of order on his own accord. An Objection to the Consideration of a Question is not used if a main motion is outside the society’s objects as defined in the bylaws or constitution, or outside the announced purpose for which a mass meeting has been called; such a motion is not in order unless the assembly by a two-thirds vote in the affirmative authorizes its introduction (10:26(2)).

26:4 Difference from Objection in Other Context. Objection to the Consideration of a Question should not be confused with an objection to a request for unanimous consent (see 4:58–63).

26:5 Effect of the Objection. If an objection to consideration is sustained, the main motion is dismissed for that session and cannot be renewed during the same session except by unanimous consent or by reconsideration of the vote on the objection. If the objection is not sustained, consideration of the main motion proceeds as if no objection had been made. Even if the objection is sustained, the same main motion can be introduced at any succeeding session.

26:6 Reconsideration of a Vote That Has Sustained the Objection. As noted in Standard Characteristic 8, a vote sustaining an objection to consideration can be reconsidered. The motion to reconsider such a vote is undebatable and requires a majority vote for its adoption, and it can be taken up or called up only when no other motion is pending. If the motion to Reconsider is adopted, it is also presumed to have overturned the objection, and the chair immediately states the question on the main motion whose consideration had been objected to, without again putting the objection to a vote. (The reason for this abbreviated procedure is that only the members who wish to consider the main question would vote to reconsider the objection to its consideration; consequently, if a majority have voted for reconsideration of the objection, this implies that there are less than two thirds who wish to prevent consideration of the main question.)

26:7 Manner of Putting the Question. When the objection is put to a vote in its correct form (see Form and Example, below), members are asked to vote for or against consideration of the question objected to (not for or against sustaining the objection). Therefore, those who wish to prevent consideration of the question vote in the negative. The objection is sustained if there are at least twice as many negative as affirmative votes.
Form and Example

26:8 A member rises, even if another has been assigned the floor, and without waiting to be recognized, addresses the chair as follows:

MEMBER A: Mr. President, I object to the consideration of the question [or “resolution,” “motion,” etc.].

The chair responds:

CHAIR: The consideration of the question is objected to. Shall the question be considered? Those in favor of considering it, rise.... Be seated. Those opposed to considering the question, rise.... Be seated. There are two thirds opposed and the question will not be considered.

Or, if the objection is not sustained, the announcement of the vote may be worded as follows:

CHAIR: There are less than two thirds opposed and the objection is not sustained. The question is on the resolution, “Resolved, That...”

26:9 In putting the objection to vote, the chair must be careful not to say, “Shall the objection be sustained?” This would reverse the effect of affirmative and negative votes and might cause confusion.
§27. DIVISION OF A QUESTION

27:1 When a motion relating to a single subject contains several parts, each of which is capable of standing as a complete proposition if the others are removed, the parts can be separated to be considered and voted on as if they were distinct questions—by adoption of the motion for Division of a Question (or “to divide the question”).

27:2 There are also certain motions which must be divided on the demand of a single member, in which case a formal motion to divide is not used (see 27:10–11). The eight characteristics below apply only to the incidental motion for Division of a Question.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

27:3 The incidental motion for Division of a Question:

1. Takes precedence over the main motion and over the subsidiary motion to Postpone Indefinitely. If applied to an amendment, it also takes precedence over that amendment; but a motion to divide the main question cannot be made while an amendment to the main question is pending. It yields to all subsidiary motions except Postpone Indefinitely, Amend, and Limit or Extend Limits of Debate; to all privileged motions; and to all applicable incidental motions. Although it is preferable to divide a question when it is first introduced, a motion to divide can be made at any time that the main motion, an amendment which it is proposed to divide, or the motion to Postpone Indefinitely is immediately pending—even after the Previous Question has been ordered.

2. Can be applied to main motions and their amendments, if they are susceptible to division (see below). No subsidiary motion can be applied to it alone except Amend and (for the purpose of stopping its amendment) the Previous Question; but while it is pending the main question can be committed, postponed, or laid on the table, and it then undergoes the same process with the main question.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is not debatable. (But see 43:31–32 regarding allowable explanation of an undebatable motion.)

6. Is amendable.

7. Requires a majority vote.

8. Cannot be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation

27:4 Specification of the Manner in Which the Question Is to Be Divided. The motion to divide must clearly state the manner in which the question is to be divided. While the motion to divide is pending, another member can propose a different division by moving an amendment. If several different proposals are made, they are treated as filling blanks; that is, they are voted on in the order in which they were proposed unless they suggest different numbers of questions, in which case the largest number is voted on first (12:92–113). Usually, however, little formality is involved in dividing a question, and it is arranged by unanimous consent.

27:5 Motions That Cannot Be Divided. A motion cannot be divided unless each part presents a proper question for the assembly to act upon if none of the other parts is adopted, and unless the effect of adopting all of the parts will be exactly the same—no more, no less—as adoption of the compound main question. Thus, if it is moved to establish a committee and give it instructions, this motion is indivisible because, should the part establishing the committee fail, the part giving the committee instructions would be absurd. Similarly, if a single motion proposes a series of amendments to something previously adopted (35)—existing bylaws, for example—and all of the individual amendments must be made, if any one of them is made, in order for the document being amended to be coherent, then the motion cannot be divided. For the same reason, multiple conforming amendments to a pending motion, as described in 12:15, cannot be divided.

27:6 Another type of motion that cannot be divided is one whose parts are not easily separated. The division cannot require a rewriting of the resolution beyond an essentially mechanical separation of it into the required parts. If possible, the division should be carried out by no more than a renumbering of phrases or clauses, prefacing each part with the formal word(s), “That,” “Resolved, That,” or “Ordered, That,” dropping conjunctions where necessary, or replacing pronouns with the nouns for which they stand, with or without the definite article “the,” as required. Depending on how the compound main motion or resolution is worded, however, it may sometimes be necessary to repeat words in more than one part which, in the main motion, appear only once and apply to more than one element of the proposed division. Also needed in this connection may be slight corrections in syntax or phrase structure in order to render each part as a complete grammatical sentence free of awkward wording. These adjustments are permissible provided care is taken to preserve exact logical equivalence of statement and no new language is introduced.

27:7 For example, suppose that the following resolution is pending: “Resolved, That the Society congratulate its member Ernest Dunn on his novel Crestwood, and that three copies be purchased for the Society’s library.” Suppose also that a member wishes to divide the question so as to consider the purchase of the books separately. The first divided part obviously would be, “Resolved, That the Society congratulate its member Ernest Dunn on his novel Crestwood.” The second part, with the wording adjusted no more than necessary to avoid awkwardness, would have to read, “Resolved, That three copies of the novel Crestwood by the Society’s member Ernest Dunn be purchased for the Society’s library.” The phrasing of the second part involves both types of modification described in the last three sentences of the preceding paragraph.

27:8 As indicated in this subsection, if separating the elements of action in a proposed resolution would require recasting the parts more than described above, the resolution cannot be divided.

27:9 Striking Out Part of an Indivisible Motion or Series of Motions. When a question is indivisible and a member is opposed to a portion of it, he can seek the desired result by moving to strike out (12) the part to which he is opposed. In like manner, when a series of resolutions is proposed as a substitute for another series, the substitute series is indivisible if the several resolutions are not completely parallel, but a motion can be made to strike out of the series any of the component resolutions before the vote is taken on whether to make the substitution.

27:10 Motions That Must Be Divided on Demand. Sometimes a series of independent resolutions or main motions dealing with different subjects is offered in one motion. In such a case, one or more of the several resolutions must receive separate consideration and vote at the request of a single member, and the motion for Division of a Question is not used. Such a demand (which should not be confused with a demand for a division of the assembly—that is, for a rising vote) can be made even when another has the floor, as in, “Mr. President, I call for a separate vote on Resolution No. 3.” This demand must be asserted before the question on adopting the series has actually been put to vote.

27:11 Similarly, a series of amendments to a pending main motion (or to a lengthy primary amendment, such as a substitute) may be offered in one motion. Unless these amendments meet the standard for conforming amendments given in 12:15, any member may demand a separate vote on one or more of them. After the others have been voted on together, the amendment(s) on which separate votes were requested are disposed of.
Form and Example

27:12 Referring to the example relating to Ernest Dunn’s novel Crestwood in 27:7, a motion to divide the question may be made either by stating the proposed parts in their entirety or by using a shorter description of how the division is to be made, if it is perfectly clear.

27:13 In the first instance, the motion would be made thus:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): Madam President, I move to divide the resolution into two parts as follows: [repeating them as shown in the example in 27:7]. (Second.)

The question as to whether to divide the resolution is voted on first. In this case, the chair would doubtless use unanimous consent.

27:14 Under the shorter form of the motion, it may be made instead as follows:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): Madam President, I move to divide the resolution so as to consider separately the question of purchasing the books. [Or, “… so that the question of purchasing the books be considered separately.”] (Second.)

The procedure is then the same as in the first case.

27:15 If the motion for the division prevails, the chair states each of the separated resolutions in full as it is considered.
§28. CONSIDERATION BY PARAGRAPH OR SERIATIM

28:1 A report or long motion consisting of a series of resolutions, paragraphs, articles, or sections that are not totally separate questions can be considered by opening the different parts to debate and amendment separately, without a division of the question. If the chair does not follow such a course of his own accord and the assembly wishes to do so, the procedure can be ordered by adopting a motion to Consider by Paragraph (or to Consider Seriatim). Several distinct main motions on different subjects cannot be considered seriatim if a single member objects.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

28:2 The incidental motion for Consideration by Paragraph or Seriatim:

1. Takes precedence over the main motion and over the subsidiary motion to Postpone Indefinitely. If applied to an amendment, it also takes precedence over that amendment; but it cannot be applied to the main question while an amendment to the main question is pending. It yields to all subsidiary motions except Postpone Indefinitely, Amend, and Limit or Extend Limits of Debate; to all privileged motions; and to all applicable incidental motions.

2. Can be applied to main motions and amendments of such length and structure that the method is appropriate. No subsidiary motion can be applied to it alone except Amend and (for the purpose of stopping its amendment) the Previous Question; but while it is pending the main question can be committed, postponed, or laid on the table, and it then undergoes the same process with the main question.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is not debatable. (But see 43:31–32 regarding allowable explanation of an undebatable motion.)

6. Is amendable.

7. Requires a majority vote.

8. Cannot be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation

28:3 Effect of Consideration by Paragraph. The effect of considering a document by paragraph or seriatim is as follows: If a member exhausts his right to debate under the usual rules on one part, his right to debate begins over again as each succeeding part is opened to debate and amendment; yet no vote on adoption is taken until there has been opportunity to perfect all the parts by amendment. Keeping all subdivisions of the series open until one final vote avoids the possibility of complications which would result—especially in the case of bylaws—if amendments to later paragraphs necessitated changes in others that had already been adopted.

28:4 Cases in Which the Chair Normally Applies the Method. In adopting a set of bylaws or the articles of a platform, consideration by paragraph is the normal and advisable procedure, followed as a matter of course unless the assembly votes to do otherwise. The chair, on his own initiative, can apply this method to any elaborate proposition susceptible to such treatment, unless he thinks the assembly wishes to act on the question as a whole; or the manner of consideration can be settled by unanimous consent. Should the chair neglect this, a member can move “that the resolution be considered by paragraph” (or “seriatim”).

28:5 Motion to Consider as a Whole. If the chair suggests consideration by paragraph and a member feels that time could be saved by acting on it as a whole, the member can move “that it be considered as a whole.” This motion is governed by standard descriptive characteristics identical to those for Consideration by Paragraph or Seriatim.

28:6 Procedure for Consideration by Paragraph. The procedure in considering by paragraph or seriatim is as follows: The member who moved the adoption of the document, the secretary, or the presiding officer (as the chair may decide) reads the first subdivision, and it is explained by its proponent. The chair then asks, “Is there any debate or amendment to this paragraph [or “section,” etc.]?” When there is no further debate or amendment to the first paragraph, each succeeding one is taken up. Amendments are voted on as they arise, but no paragraph as amended is acted upon (as to final adoption or rejection) at that time. After all parts have been considered, the chair opens the entire document to amendment. At this time additional parts can be inserted, or parts can be struck out, or any one of them can be further amended. It is not necessary to amend the numbers of articles, sections, or other subdivisions. It is the duty of the secretary to make all such corrections where they become necessary (see 57:18–19).

28:7 If there is a preamble, it is treated in the same way before the final vote. Then the entire document is acted upon in a single vote. If the Previous Question is ordered before the preamble has been considered, it does not apply to the preamble unless expressly so stated.

28:8 Application of Subsidiary and Incidental Motions During Consideration by Paragraph. During the consideration of the separate paragraphs, any motion to Postpone Indefinitely, Commit, Postpone, or Lay on the Table can apply only to the entire series or proposition. If a motion to Postpone Indefinitely is made under these circumstances, it is stated by the chair, but is not debated or voted on until the paragraph-by-paragraph phase of consideration is completed and the entire document has been declared open to amendment. This rule is a consequence of two characteristics of the motion to Postpone Indefinitely—that amendments take precedence over it, and that while it is pending the entire main question is open to debate. Motions to Commit, Postpone (definitely), or Lay on the Table, on the other hand, are taken up as they arise; and, if adopted, they affect the entire main question immediately. If or when the main question comes before the assembly again later, the consideration by paragraph or seriatim is resumed at the point where it was interrupted. The Previous Question and Limit or Extend Limits of Debate can be applied to amendments or to the entire document but not to the individual paragraphs.

28:9 If it has been decided to consider divisible material seriatim, even if the material was divisible on the demand of a single member, it is too late to move or demand a division of the question.
Form and Example

28:10 When the chair does not initiate seriatim consideration, this form can be used:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): Mr. President, I move that the resolution [or “the platform,” etc.] be considered by paragraph [or “seriatim”]. (Second.)

28:11 If the chair suggests consideration by paragraph and a member feels that the proposition could be acted upon as a whole, this form may be used:

MEMBER X (obtaining the floor): Madam President, I move that… be considered as a whole. (Second.)
§29. DIVISION OF THE ASSEMBLY

29:1 Whenever a member doubts the result of a voice (viva-voce) vote or a vote by show of hands—either because the result appears close or because he doubts that a representative number of the members present have voted—he can call for a Division of the Assembly, thereby requiring the vote to be taken again by rising.11

29:2 A voice vote retaken by a show of hands is not a Division of the Assembly, since in large assemblies it may be less accurate than a rising vote, and since—even in a small meeting—the rising vote may be more effective in causing a maximum number of members to vote.

29:3 On an inconclusive voice vote in a very small meeting where all present can clearly see one another, if, instead of calling for a Division, a member asks for a show of hands, this is in the nature of a request, and the chair can retake the vote by this method unless a call for a Division is also made. Before or after the vote is thus retaken, however, any member still has the right to demand a Division if he believes it will obtain a more conclusive result.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

29:4 A Division of the Assembly:

1. Takes precedence over any motion on which a vote is being taken or has just been taken. It may be called for from the moment the negative votes have been cast until the announcement of the result is complete, or immediately thereafter (see 45:9). It does not yield to any motion.

2. Can be applied to any motion on which the assembly is called upon to vote by voice or by a show of hands. No subsidiary motion can be applied to it.

3. Is in order when another has the floor and is called for without obtaining the floor.

4. Does not require a second.

5. Is not debatable.

6. Is not amendable.

7. Does not require a vote, since a single member can demand a division.

8. Cannot be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation

29:5 Procedure for Retaking a Vote. When a Division is demanded, the chair immediately takes the vote again, first by having the affirmative rise, then by having the negative rise. If it appears to the chair, when those in the affirmative rise, that the vote will be close, he can count the vote or order it to be counted. If a member desires the vote on the division to be counted, he must make a motion to that effect, which requires a majority vote (see 4:53; 30; 45:14).

29:6 Vote Retaken at Chair’s Initiative. The chair has the responsibility of obtaining a correct expression of the will of the assembly. If he is uncertain of the result of a vote or if he feels that the vote is unrepresentative, the chair can of his own accord take the vote again by a rising vote.

29:7 Dilatory Use. When it is clear that there has been a full vote and there can be no reasonable doubt as to which side is in the majority, a call for a Division is dilatory, and the chair should not allow the individual member’s right of demanding a Division to be abused to the annoyance of the assembly.
Form and Example

While, or immediately after, the chair announces the result of a vote, “The ayes [or “noes”] have it and…,” a member can call for a division from his seat, without obtaining the floor:

MEMBER: Division!

Or:

MEMBER: I call for [or “demand”] a division.

Or:

MEMBER: I doubt the result of the vote.

To such a call in any of these forms, the chair responds:

CHAIR: A division is called for [or “demanded”].

The chair then proceeds to take the rising vote, as shown in 4:38.
§30. MOTIONS RELATING TO METHODS OF VOTING AND THE POLLS

30:1  The object of motions relating to methods of voting and the polls is to obtain a vote on a question in some form other than by voice, by show of hands, or by Division (rising); or to otherwise direct how and when voting is to be conducted. This category includes motions that the vote be taken by ballot, that it be taken by roll call (the yeas and nays), that a standing vote be counted (tellers), or that the vote be taken by an unusual method such as the use of black and white balls or a signed ballot (see 45:46). This category also includes motions relating to the conduct of a vote, such as those closing or reopening the polls, or ordering a recapitulation of a roll-call vote (see 45:51) or a recount (see 45:41).

30:2  A motion in this category is an incidental motion—and subject to the rules given here—only when a motion or election is pending or the vote on it has just been taken or announced; otherwise, it is an incidental main motion.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

30:3 Incidental motions relating to methods of voting and the polls:

1. Take precedence over the motion being voted on or to be voted on. When applied to a vote which has just been taken, they can be moved from the moment the chair has reported the vote (see 4:43(1)) until the announcement of the result is complete, or immediately thereafter (see 45:9). They can be moved while an order for the Previous Question is in effect on the votes to which they apply. They yield to the privileged motions, and to a motion to Lay on the Table moved while the question to which they are applied is pending.

2. Can be applied to any motion on which the assembly is called upon to vote other than another motion relating to the method of voting, or a motion to close or reopen the polls. No subsidiary motion can be applied to them except Amend.

3. Are out of order when another has the floor; but, within the time limits specified in Standard Characteristic 1 above, a member can claim preference in being recognized for the purpose of making one of these motions when applied to a vote that has just been taken.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Are not debatable. (But see 43:31–32 regarding allowable explanation of an undebatable motion.)

6. Are amendable.

7. Require a majority vote, except a motion to close the polls, which requires a two-thirds vote.

8. The vote on a motion ordering that the polls be closed or reopened at a specified time can be reconsidered at any time before the order has been carried out. Otherwise, neither a vote to close the polls nor an affirmative vote to reopen the polls can be reconsidered; the same effect can be obtained by renewal or by the opposite motion. A negative vote on a motion to reopen the polls can be reconsidered within the period during which a motion to reopen the polls could be made originally. Other motions relating to methods of voting can be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation

30:4 Methods of Voting. In practice, the method of taking a vote usually can be agreed upon informally. But when different methods are suggested, they are usually treated not as amendments but as filling blanks, the vote normally being taken first on the one taking the most time. (For ways of voting, see 4:34–56; 45.)

30:5 A member who believes that a secret vote will give a truer expression of the assembly’s will on a pending motion can move that the vote on the motion be taken by ballot. An order that the vote on a main motion be taken by ballot also applies to a vote on whether to postpone the main motion indefinitely. (See also Roll-Call Vote, 45:45ff.

30:6 Retaking a Vote. As explained in 4 (see 4:34–56) and 45 (see 45:11), the regular methods of initially taking a vote are by voice (viva voce), by rising (division), or by show of hands—the latter two of which may also be called for by any member as a means of verifying an inconclusive vote that has just been taken (see 29)—and the chair may order that a vote be counted or that an uncounted vote be retaken as a counted vote. After a question has been voted on in any of these ways, and within the time specified in Standard Characteristic 1 above, the assembly can still order that the vote be taken again by some method other than any of the regular ones (see Other Methods of Voting, 45:17ff.) or that an uncounted vote be retaken as a counted vote. But after a vote has been taken by one of those other methods, or after the assembly has ordered that a counted vote be taken, it is not in order to move that the vote be taken again. It is never in order to move that the vote on a question be taken a second time by the same method.

If the method of voting on a motion is ordered by the assembly (and not prescribed by the assembly’s rules), such an order is exhausted (1) when the question on which it was imposed has been finally disposed of, or (2) at the conclusion of the session in which the order has been adopted—whichever occurs first.

If, after such an order is exhausted, the motion to which it previously applied comes to a vote (for example, during reconsideration or at a subsequent session), the order is no longer in effect. Notwithstanding the exhaustion of this order, however, a motion which has been voted on by ballot must also be voted on by ballot during any reconsideration of it, since no action is in order that would force the disclosure of a member’s vote or views on the matter (see 45:21). Likewise, if the assembly adjourns after balloting for an office has begun but before the election to that office is complete (46:44–45), any additional votes needed to complete the election must also be taken by ballot, even if they are taken at a subsequent session.

30:8 Closing or Reopening the Polls. Motions relating to opening and closing the polls are applicable only with respect to ballot votes. It is usually better to leave it to the chair to close the polls. When the vote is taken by ballot, as soon as the chair thinks that all have voted who wish to, he inquires if all have voted. If there is no response, he declares the polls closed, and the tellers proceed to count the vote.

30:9 If a motion is made to close the polls when the voting has closed naturally, the chair can treat the motion as a unanimous-consent request and declare the polls closed. In any case, a formal motion to close the polls may not be recognized until all have presumably voted. Like motions relating to the close of debate or nominations, the motion to close the polls requires a two-thirds vote.
30:10 If members enter afterward and it is desired to reopen the polls, this can be done by a majority vote.

30:11 The time at which the polls shall be closed or reopened can be specified in the motion, or added by amendment.
§31. MOTIONS RELATING TO NOMINATIONS

31:1 While an election is pending, a member may wish to offer a motion to determine the method of making nominations (when it is not prescribed in the bylaws or rules of order). Members also may wish to offer motions to close or reopen nominations.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

31:2 Incidental motions relating to nominations:

1. Take precedence over the pending election for which nominations are to be made. They yield to the privileged motions, and to the motion to Lay on the Table.
2. Apply to any pending election. No subsidiary motion except Amend\textsuperscript{15} can be applied to them.
3. Are out of order when another has the floor or any member is attempting to make a nomination.
4. Must be seconded.
5. Are not debatable. (But see 43:31–32 regarding allowable explanation of an undebatable motion.)
6. Are amendable.
7. Require a majority vote, except a motion to close nominations, which requires a two-thirds vote because (a) its adoption deprives members of a basic right—to nominate; and (b) the assembly must be protected against attempted abuse of the power to close nominations by a temporary majority.
8. Can be reconsidered, except the motion to close nominations, or an affirmative vote on a motion to reopen nominations. (In the latter cases, the same effect can be obtained by renewal or by the opposite motion.)
Further Rules and Explanation

31:3 Motions to Prescribe Methods of Nominating. If no method of making nominations is designated by the bylaws or rules and the assembly has adopted no order on the subject, anyone can make a motion prescribing the method of nomination for an office to be filled. When different methods are proposed, they can be moved as amendments, but are frequently treated as filling blanks (12:92–113). In that event, the vote is taken on the various suggested methods of nominating, in this order: (a) by the chair; (b) from the floor (sometimes called “open nominations”); (c) by a committee; (d) by ballot; (e) by mail; and (f) by petition (see 46). It should be noted that not all of these methods are appropriate or desirable in average societies.

31:4 Motions to Close or Reopen Nominations. In the average society, a motion to close nominations is not a necessary part of the election procedure and it should not generally be moved. When nominations have been made by a committee or from the floor, the chair inquires whether there are any further nominations; and when there is no response, he declares that nominations are closed. In very large bodies, the formality of a motion to close nominations is sometimes allowed, but this motion is not in order until a reasonable opportunity to make nominations has been given; as noted above, it is out of order if a member is rising, addressing the chair, or otherwise attempting to make a nomination, and it always requires a two-thirds vote. When no one wishes to make a further nomination, the motion serves no useful purpose.

31:5 A legitimate use of the motion to close nominations would be, for example, to end delay of an election by numbers of nominations obviously intended only to honor persons who have no chance of being elected.

31:6 When for any reason it is desired to reopen nominations, this can be done by a majority vote. The closing of nominations—whether or not a formal motion to close them has been adopted—does not limit the making of further nominations at a later session at which the election is held (see also 46:6).

31:7 The time at which nominations shall be closed or reopened can be specified in the motion, or added by amendment.
§32. REQUEST TO BE EXCUSED FROM A DUTY

32:1 Occasionally the bylaws of a society may impose specific duties on members beyond the mere payment of dues. Members may be obligated to attend a certain number of meetings, to prepare talks or papers, to serve on committees, or even to accept office if elected. In these cases, a member cannot, as a matter of right, decline such a duty or demand that he or she be excused from it, but the assembly—except as the bylaws may provide otherwise—can grant the member’s request to be so excused. The request can be granted by unanimous consent, or a motion to grant it, which is debatable and amendable, can be offered.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

32:2 A Request to Be Excused from a Duty:

1. Takes precedence over any motion with whose purpose it is connected and can also be made at any time when no question is pending. A motion on a request that is pending yields to all subsidiary motions except Postpone Indefinitely, to all privileged motions, and to other incidental motions.

2. Can be applied in reference to any motion or parliamentary situation out of which it arises. All subsidiary motions except Postpone Indefinitely can be applied to it.

3. Is in order when another has the floor if it requires immediate attention.

4. Does not require a second except when moved formally by the maker of the request. A motion to grant the request of another member does not require a second since the maker of the request and the maker of the motion—two members—wish the question to be considered.

5. Is debatable.

6. Is amendable.

7. Requires a majority vote, but is frequently settled by unanimous consent.

8. Where the member requesting to be excused from a duty has learned of the action taken on his or her request, only a negative vote can be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation

32:3 If a duty is not compulsory, a member can decline when he is first named to it or, if absent at that time, when he first learns of his election or appointment. At times other than during a meeting, such a notice of declination can be addressed to the secretary or to the appointing power. Since in these cases the duty is not compulsory, no motion to excuse the member is necessary.

32:4 A member who remains silent when presumably aware that he has been named to a duty is regarded as accepting, and he thereby places himself under the same obligations as if he had expressly accepted.

32:5 If a member who has accepted an office, committee assignment, or other duty finds that he is unable to perform it, he should submit his resignation. A resignation is submitted in writing, addressed to the secretary or appointing power; alternatively, it may be submitted during a meeting either orally or in writing. By submitting a resignation, the member is, in effect, requesting to be excused from a duty. The chair, on reading or announcing the resignation, can assume a motion “that the resignation be accepted.”

32:6 The duties of a position must not be abandoned until a resignation has been accepted and becomes effective, or at least until there has been a reasonable opportunity for it to be accepted.

32:7 A request to be excused from a duty essential to the functioning of a society or assembly is a question of privilege affecting the organization of the assembly; and so also is the filling of a vacancy created by the acceptance of a resignation. In such cases, the assembly can proceed immediately to fill the vacancy, unless notice is required or other provision for filling vacancies is made in the bylaws. In the case of a resignation from office, unless the bylaws provide otherwise, the assembly cannot proceed to fill the vacancy immediately since notice is a requirement. But if a member is elected and declines, no notice is required to complete the election immediately or at the next meeting (see 46:46).

32:8 Resignation from Membership. A member in good standing with his dues paid cannot be compelled to continue his membership so that additional obligations are incurred. His resignation should be accepted immediately, and if it is not, he incurs no obligation after his resignation has been sent in, provided he does not avail himself of the privileges of membership. It is different with members who have not paid their dues up to the date of sending in their resignations. Until they have settled their dues, the society is under no obligation to accept their resignations, and thus additional amounts may become due. If their dues are not paid within a reasonable time, instead of accepting their resignations, the society may expel them. A resignation sent in to escape charges need not be accepted. The charges may be preferred, and the trial should proceed the same as if the resignation had not been sent in.
§33. REQUESTS AND INQUIRIES

33:1 In connection with business in a meeting, members may wish to obtain information or to do or have something done that requires permission of the assembly. Any member can make the following types of inquiry or request: (a) Parliamentary Inquiry; (b) For Information; (c) For Permission (or Leave) to Withdraw or Modify a Motion; (d) To Read Papers; and (e) For Any Other Privilege.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

33:2 With respect to the requests and inquiries growing out of the business of the assembly that are listed above, the following rules apply:

1. All take precedence over any motion with whose purpose they are connected, and can also be made at any time when no question is pending. A motion on a request that is pending yields to all privileged motions and to other incidental motions.

2. All can be applied in reference to any motion or parliamentary situation out of which they arise. No subsidiary motion can be applied to any of them.

3. All are in order when another has the floor if they require immediate attention.

4. A Parliamentary Inquiry and a Request for Information do not require a second. The other requests do not require a second, except when moved formally by the maker of the request. A motion to grant the request of another member does not require a second, since two members already wish the question to come up—the maker of the request and the maker of the motion.

5. All are not debatable, although they may be accompanied by brief explanations as necessary (cf. 43:31–32).

6. All are not amendable.

7. No vote is taken on a Parliamentary Inquiry and a Request for Information. The other requests require a majority vote in order to be granted, and are frequently settled by unanimous consent. When it is too late for renewal, unanimous consent is required to grant permission to withdraw a motion to Reconsider (37:10(b)), or to withdraw previous notice of a proposed motion requiring such notice (10:44–51).
8. A Parliamentary Inquiry and a Request for Information are not subject to reconsideration. The vote on a request For Permission to Modify a Motion, To Read Papers, and For Any Other Privilege can be reconsidered. On a request For Permission to Withdraw a Motion, only a negative vote can be reconsidered.
Further Rules and Explanation (with Forms)

33:3 A. Parliamentary Inquiry. A Parliamentary Inquiry is a question directed to the presiding officer to obtain information on a matter of parliamentary law or the rules of the organization bearing on the business at hand. It is the chair’s duty to answer such questions when it may assist a member to make an appropriate motion, raise a proper point of order, or understand the parliamentary situation or the effect of a motion. The chair is not obliged to answer hypothetical questions.

33:4 In making an inquiry, the inquirer arises, and without obtaining the floor, addresses the chair as follows:

MEMBER A: Madam President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. [Or, “A parliamentary inquiry, please.”] CHAIR: The member will state the inquiry.
MEMBER A: Is it in order at this time to move the previous question?

33:5 The chair’s reply to a parliamentary inquiry is not subject to an appeal, since it is an opinion, not a ruling. A member may act contrary to this opinion, however, and may appeal from a resulting adverse ruling by the chair. If an inquiry is made when another member has the floor and an immediate answer is not necessary, the chair can defer a reply until the floor has been yielded.

33:6 B. Request for Information. A Request for Information (also called a Point of Information) is a request directed to the chair, or through the chair to another officer or member, for information relevant to the business at hand but not related to parliamentary procedure.

33:7 It is treated like a parliamentary inquiry, as follows:

MEMBER A: Mr. President, I have a request for information. [Or, “A point of information, please."

CHAIR: The member will state his question.

MEMBER A: Will the convention delegates report at this meeting?

Or:

MEMBER A: This motion calls for a large expenditure. Will the Treasurer state the present balance?

33:8 If information is desired of a member who is speaking, the inquirer, upon rising, may use the following form instead:

MEMBER A: Madam President, will the member yield for a question?

Or:

MEMBER A: Mr. President, I would like to ask the gentleman [or “the member”] a question.

33:9 If the speaker consents to the interruption, the time consumed will be taken out of his allowed time. The chair therefore asks if the speaker is willing to be interrupted, and if he consents, directs the inquirer to proceed. Although the presiding officer generally remains silent during the ensuing exchange, the inquiry, the reply, and any resulting colloquy are made in the third person through the chair. To protect decorum, members are not allowed to carry on discussion directly with one another.

33:10 An inquiry of this kind may also be for the purpose of reminding a speaker of a point to be made in argument, or it may be intended to rebut his position; but it must always be put in the form of a question.

33:11 C. Request for Permission (or Leave) to Withdraw or Modify a Motion. Conditions for withdrawing or modifying a motion depend upon how soon the mover states his wish to withdraw or modify it. Permission for him to do so is required only after the motion to which it pertains has been stated by the chair as pending.

33:12 Before a motion has been stated by the chair, it is the property of its mover, who can withdraw it or modify it without asking the consent of anyone. Thus, in the brief interval between the making of a motion and the time when the chair places it before the assembly by stating it, the maker can withdraw it as follows:

MEMBER A (who made the motion): Madam President, I withdraw the motion.

Or:

MEMBER A (who made the motion): Mr. President, I wish to modify the motion by striking out “demand” and inserting “urge.”

In the same interval also, another member can ask if the maker of the motion is willing to withdraw it or accept a change in it, which suggestion the maker can either accept or reject. In such a case the chair either announces, “The motion has been withdrawn,” or states the question on the modified motion. If a motion is modified, the seconder can withdraw his second. When the seconder withdraws his second to the modified motion, the member who suggested the modification has, in effect, supplied a second.

33:13 After a motion has been stated by the chair, it belongs to the meeting as a whole, and the maker must request the assembly’s permission to withdraw or modify his own motion, according to the rules stated in Standard Characteristics 1–8, above. In such cases the procedure is as follows.

33:14 To withdraw a motion that is before the assembly, the member who made it may use this form:
MEMBER A (who made the motion): Madam President, I ask permission [or “leave”] to withdraw the motion.

33:15 The chair treats this first as a unanimous-consent request. That is, if no one objects, the announcement is:

CHAIR: Unless there is objection [pause] the motion is withdrawn.

If there is an objection, the chair of his own accord can put the question on granting the request, or any member can move “that permission to withdraw the motion be granted.” If a member other than the one making the request made the motion, it does not require a second, since the maker of the motion to grant permission and the maker of the request surely both favor it.

33:16 A request for permission to withdraw a motion, or a motion to grant such permission, can be made at any time before voting on the question has begun, even though the motion has been amended, and even though subsidiary or incidental motions may be pending. Any such motions that adhere to the main motion cease to be before the assembly and require no further disposition if the main motion is withdrawn. Any member can suggest that the maker of a motion ask permission to withdraw it, which the maker can do or decline to do, as he chooses.

33:17 After a question has been divided, one or more of the parts can be withdrawn without affecting the other parts. A motion to Reconsider (37), or a previous notice of a proposed motion requiring such notice (10:44–51), cannot be withdrawn after it is too late for renewal, unless unanimous consent is given.

33:18 After a motion has been withdrawn, the situation is as though it had never been made; therefore, the same motion can be made again at the same meeting.

33:19 To modify a motion after it has been stated by the chair, the maker asks permission to do so, as in the case of withdrawal of a motion. If there is no objection, the chair states the question on the modified motion. If anyone objects, the chair must then determine whether an amendment equivalent to the requested modification would be in order. If not, the modification may not be made unless a motion to suspend the rules is made and adopted. If a motion for such an amendment is in order, the chair can assume it or any member can move it formally. The amendment requires a second if moved by the member who originally made the request. The rules governing consideration of amendments are followed (see 12). A pending motion can be amended only by vote or unanimous consent of the assembly, even if the maker of the motion states that he “accepts” the amendment. (See also treatment of “friendly amendments,” 12:91.)

33:20 D. Request to Read Papers. If any member objects, a member has no right to read from—or to have the secretary read from—any paper or book as a part of his speech without permission of the assembly. This rule is a protection against the use of reading as a means of prolonging debate and delaying business. It is customary, however, to permit members to read short, pertinent, printed extracts in debate so long as they do not abuse the privilege. If a member wishes to do so, he can, while speaking in debate, say, “If there is no objection, I would like to read… [indicating the nature and length of the paper].” The member can then begin to read unless another member objects. In such a case, at any time until the speaker has finished reading, another member can interrupt him by an objection, which must be addressed to the chair. Or, if the speaker desiring to read prefers, he can formally request permission: “Mr. President, I ask permission to read a statement… [briefly describing it, as above]”; and the chair then asks if there is objection. In either case, if there is an objection, the chair can, of his own accord, put the question on granting permission, or any member can move “that permission to read a paper in debate be granted.” This motion requires no second unless moved by the member who made the request. Action of the assembly granting a request to read a paper can be reconsidered at any time until the reading has been concluded.

33:21 The foregoing paragraph applies only to papers or documents that are not before the assembly for action. When any paper is laid before the assembly for action, it is a right of every member that it be read once; and, if there is any debate or amendment, that it be read again before members are asked to vote on it. Except as just stated, no member has the right to have anything read without permission of the assembly. But whenever any member requests that a document that is before the assembly be read—obviously for information and not for delay—and no one objects, the chair normally should direct that it be read. If there is an objection, a majority vote is required to order that it be read. If a member was absent from the hall when the paper under consideration was read—even though absent on duty—he cannot insist on its being read again; in this case, the convenience of the assembly is more important than that of a single member.

33:22 E. Request for Any Other Privilege. When a member desires to make a request not covered by one of the four types explained above—as, for example, a request to address remarks or make a presentation while no motion is pending—he rises, addresses the chair, and, as soon as he catches the presiding officer’s attention, states his request. Although he does not have to wait for recognition and can make his request even though another member has been assigned the floor, he should never interrupt a member speaking unless sure that urgency justifies it. Generally, such matters are settled by unanimous consent or informally, but if there is an objection, a motion can be made to grant the request. If explanation is required, it can be requested or given, but this must not extend into debate. These requests should be treated so as to interrupt the proceedings as little as is consistent with the demands of justice.
Footnotes to Chapter VIII

1. There can be no appeal from a ruling on a point of order that is raised while an appeal is pending.
2. However, see 10:26(1) and the footnote there for exceptions.
3. It should be noted that the latter method of putting the question may often be the opposite of the first method in cases where the first method is applicable. Thus, in the example of a point of order that an amendment is not germane, as shown above, the question is put so that a vote of aye is a vote that the amendment is germane; but in that case, a vote of aye is a vote that the point is not well taken.
4. If the chair made a procedural error in declaring a motion adopted or lost, for example, in declaring that a motion which received a majority vote but not a two-thirds vote was adopted when a two-thirds vote was required under the rules, a point of order may be raised to that effect.
5. Regarding the suspendibility of rules in the nature of rules of order when placed within the bylaws (or constitution), see 2:21. Nothing in a corporate charter can be suspended unless the charter or applicable law so provides.
6. For the classes of rules that an organization or an assembly may adopt, see 2.
7. In contrast, the rules may be suspended to allow a nonmember to speak in debate.
8. An elected or appointed body that lacks the authority to determine its own quorum may not suspend the quorum requirement, even if all members are present.
9. This usage should be avoided.
10. In conventions, the term standing rule is used in a special sense that may include parliamentary rules adopted by the convention (see 59:27ff.).
11. In the earliest forms of this procedure, members in favor of a measure and those opposed were asked to rise from their seats and proceed to the opposite sides of the meeting hall—hence the name, “division.”
12. However, a motion to take a counted vote can be applied to any motion except to another motion to take a counted vote.
13. In principle, the Previous Question can also be applied to them to stop their amendment, though such a case will rarely arise in practice.

14. A motion prescribing the method of nominating is an incidental motion—and subject to the rules given here—only when the election is pending; otherwise, it is an incidental main motion (see 10).

15. See 30:3(2)n14, which also applies to these motions.

17. The procedure of presuming permission to read until objection is raised is applicable only in debate on a pending question.
CHAPTER IX

MOTIONS THAT BRING A QUESTION AGAIN BEFORE THE ASSEMBLY
See 6:25ff. for a list of these motions and a description of their characteristics as a group.

§34. TAKE FROM THE TABLE

34:1 The object of the motion to Take from the Table is to make pending again before the assembly a motion or a series of adhering motions that previously has been laid on the table (see 17).
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

34:2 The motion to Take from the Table:

1. Takes precedence over no pending motion, and therefore cannot be moved while any other question is pending; but, subject to the conditions indicated in the next sentence, it takes precedence over a main motion that has been made but has not yet been stated by the chair. Unless it is moved under a suspension of the rules (25) it must be moved at a time when no program or rule interferes, and while business of the class to which the subject question belongs, or unfinished business, general orders, or new business, is in order; and it cannot interrupt a series of motions connected with taking up a single item of business (see below). It yields to privileged and incidental motions but not to subsidiary ones.

2. Can be applied to any question or series of adhering motions that lies on the table as explained in the first paragraph under Further Rules and Explanation, below. This motion is not in order, however, until some business or interrupting matter has been transacted or dealt with since the question was laid on the table; and if it is moved and voted down, the motion to Take from the Table cannot be renewed until some further business has been transacted. No subsidiary motion can be applied to the motion to Take from the Table.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor; but a member can claim preference in being recognized for the purpose of making this motion ahead of a new main motion, or he can claim the floor for such a purpose after a new main motion has been made but before the new motion has been stated by the chair (see below).

4. Must be seconded.
5. Is not debatable. (But see 43:31–32 regarding allowable explanation of an undebatable motion.)
6. Is not amendable.
7. Requires a majority vote.
8. Cannot be reconsidered. If the motion to Take from the Table is adopted, the question can be laid on the table again should any legitimate need arise to do so, according to the rules stated in 17:11. If the motion to Take from the Table is rejected, it can be renewed each time that any business has been transacted (see 38:7(2)).
Further Rules and Explanation

34:3 Time Limits on Taking a Question from the Table. A question that has been laid on the table remains there and can be taken from the table during the same session (8), or, if the next regular business session will be held before a quarterly time interval has elapsed (see 9:7), also until the end of the next regular session. If not taken from the table within these time limits, the question dies, although it can be reintroduced later as a new question. As long as a question remains on the table, any member can move to take it from the table at a regular meeting, including a meeting that is an adjournment (9) of a regular meeting. At a special meeting, however, a question can be taken from the table only if: (a) it has been laid on the table earlier at the same session, or (b) the call of the special meeting specifies either the particular question that lies on the table or its subject matter.

34:4 Right of Way in Preference to a New Main Motion. In ordinary assemblies a question is supposed to be laid on the table only temporarily, with the expectation that its consideration will be resumed after disposal of the interrupting matter or at a more convenient time. Consequently, as soon as the business or interrupting matter has been disposed of, any member can seek recognition for the purpose of moving to take the question from the table; or, so long as it remains on the table, he can do so at any time under the classes of business listed in Standard Characteristic 1 above—except while another motion is pending or while a series of motions connected with one question is being introduced, as explained in the next paragraph. If the chair recognizes someone else as having risen and addressed the chair first, a member who rose at about the same time to move to take the question from the table should remain standing and say that he rises for this purpose, and the chair then assigns him the floor. Or, even after a new motion has been made but before it has been stated by the chair, a member who quickly rises and says that he does so to move to take the question from the table is entitled to be assigned the floor. The principle is that, if the assembly so desires, a motion already within its control by being only temporarily disposed of (9:7–11, 38:8) has the right of way over a new main motion.

34:5 Even if no question is pending, a motion to Take from the Table cannot interrupt a series of motions connected with bringing up a single item of business, but must wait until the complete series is disposed of. For example, such a series of motions is in process of being dealt with:

- when the assembly has just voted to suspend the rules and permit a certain main motion to be introduced;
- when a question has just been laid on the table for the announced purpose of admitting another motion;
- when a previous action has just been rescinded (35) to enable a conflicting main motion to be made; or
- when a main motion has just been voted down after a member stated in debate that in that event he would offer a different motion covering the case.

In each of the above instances, until the main motion that was specified has been made and disposed of, it is not in order to move to take still another question from the table.

34:6 Status of a Question Taken from the Table. When a question is taken from the table, it is before the assembly, with everything adhering to it, so far as possible (and with the exceptions noted below), exactly as it was when laid on the table. For example, if amendments and a motion to Commit were pending when a resolution was laid on the table, then when it is taken from the table the question is first on the motion to Commit. The same would be true if a motion to Postpone to a Certain Time were adhering to a resolution—that is, the motion to Postpone would become immediately pending—except that if the resolution is not taken from the table until after the time of proposed postponement, the motion to Postpone is ignored. If the question is taken up on the same day that it was laid on the table, members who had exhausted their right of debate cannot speak on the question again; but if on another day, all members have their right to debate renewed with reference to each question being debated under the regular limitations (see 43:12–13). An order for the Previous Question or a limitation or extension of debate is not exhausted, however, if the question to which such an order was applied is taken from the table at the same session, even on another day—as in a convention.

34:7 At the next session any such order is exhausted and the regular rules of debate prevail. For the rules relating to the exhaustion of an order prescribing the method of voting on a question, see 30:7.
Form and Example

34:8 The form used in making this motion is, for example, “I move to take from the table the resolution relating to… and its amendment.”

34:9 If Member A, who has risen to seek the floor for the purpose of making this motion, observes that the chair has recognized another member who rose at about the same time and who apparently intends to make a new main motion, the procedure would be as follows:

MEMBER A (remaining standing and interrupting): Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of moving to take a question from the table.

Upon recognition, Member A then would move “… to take from the table the motion relating to…”

34:10 If Member A did not rise to claim the floor before the chair recognized another member who already has made a new motion, then before this question has been stated by the chair, Member A can quickly rise and address the chair, thus:

MEMBER A: Madam President.
CHAIR: For what purpose does the member rise?
MEMBER A: I rise for the purpose of moving… [and so on, as in the case above].
§35. RESCIND; AMEND SOMETHING PREVIOUSLY ADOPTED

35:1 By means of the motions to Rescind and to Amend Something Previously Adopted—which are two forms of one incidental main motion governed by identical rules—the assembly can change an action previously taken or ordered. Rescind—also known as Repeal or Annul—is the motion by which a previous action or order can be canceled or countermanded. The effect of Rescind is to strike out an entire main motion, resolution, order, or rule that has been adopted at some previous time. Amend Something Previously Adopted is the motion that can be used if it is desired to change only a part of the text, or to substitute a different version.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

35:2 The motions to Rescind and to Amend Something Previously Adopted:

1. Take precedence over nothing, and can therefore be moved only when no other motion is pending. Previous notice (10:44–51) of intent to offer one of these motions at the next meeting can be given while another question is pending, however—provided that it does not interrupt a speaker (see Standard Characteristic 7). These motions yield to subsidiary, privileged, and incidental motions.

2. Can be applied to anything (e.g., bylaw, rule, policy, decision, or choice) which has continuing force and effect and which was made or created at any time or times as the result of the adoption of one or more main motions. (However, see below for actions that cannot be rescinded or amended.) All of the subsidiary motions can be applied to the motions to Rescind and to Amend Something Previously Adopted.

3. Are out of order when another has the floor; but previous notice of intent to offer one of these motions at the next meeting can be given after another member has been assigned the floor, provided that he has not begun to speak.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Are debatable; debate can go into the merits of the question which it is proposed to rescind or amend.

6. Are amendable, by the processes of primary and secondary amendment in any of the forms discussed in 12, as applicable to the particular case. Thus, a motion to Rescind can be amended, for example, by substituting for it a motion to amend what is proposed to be rescinded. But if a motion to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted is amended so that the change proposed by the amended motion then exceeds the scope of a previous notice that was given, the effect of the previous notice is destroyed and the motion can no longer be adopted by a majority vote (see Standard Characteristic 7). When these motions require previous notice (as may be the case with respect to a motion to rescind or amend a provision of the bylaws or a special rule of order), such a motion cannot be amended so as to make the proposed change greater than that for which notice has been given.

7. In an assembly, except when applied to a constitution, bylaws, or special rules of order, require (a) a two-thirds vote, (b) a majority vote when notice of intent to make the motion, stating the complete substance of the proposed change, has been given at the previous meeting within a quarterly time interval or in the call of the present meeting, or (c) a vote of a majority of the entire membership—any one of which will suffice. The same vote is required for the assembly to rescind or amend an action taken by subordinate bodies, such as some executive boards, empowered to act on behalf of the assembly. In a committee, these motions require a two-thirds vote unless all committee members who voted for the motion to be rescinded or amended are present or have received reasonable notice, in which case they require a majority vote. A motion to rescind or amend provisions of a constitution or bylaws is subject to the requirements for amendment as contained in the constitution or bylaws (see 56, 57). If the bylaws or governing instrument contains no provision relating to amendment, a motion to rescind or amend applied to a constitution or to bylaws is subject to the same voting requirement as to rescind or amend special rules of order—that is, it requires (a) previous notice as described above and a two-thirds vote or (b) a vote of a majority of the entire membership.

8. A negative vote on these motions can be reconsidered, but not an affirmative vote.
Further Rules and Explanation

35:3 Right of Any Member to Make the Motions, Without Time Limit. In contrast to the case of the motion to Reconsider, there is no time limit on making these motions after the adoption of the measure to which they are applied, and they can be moved by any member, regardless of how he voted on the original question. When previous notice has been given, it is usual to wait for the member who gave notice of these motions to move them; but if he does not, any member can do so.

35:4 Proposed Amendments Beyond the Scope of the Notice. As noted in Standard Descriptive Characteristic 6 above, when previous notice is a requirement for the adoption of a motion to Rescind or Amend Something Previously Adopted, no subsidiary motion to Amend is in order that proposes a change greater than that for which notice was given. This is always the case, for example, when the bylaws of an organization require previous notice for their amendment, which they should do (56:50–53). It will also be the case, as a practical matter, whenever a majority of the entire membership is not in attendance at the time the vote is taken on a motion to rescind or amend a provision of the constitution or bylaws, or a special rule of order. In either of the situations described above, no subsidiary motion to Amend is in order that proposes a change going beyond the scope of the notice which was given, for the reason that adoption of such a motion will destroy the effect of the notice, and the motion is thus tantamount to a motion to Postpone Indefinitely.

35:5 Series of Amendments to Previously Adopted Text. It is possible to offer and adopt several amendments to previously adopted text by means of a single incidental main motion to Amend Something Previously Adopted governed by the rules in this section and in 10. See 10:25 and 27:5 for the rules governing whether and how such a motion may be divided. (For an example, see 57:3.)

35:6 Actions That Cannot Be Rescinded or Amended. The motions to Rescind and to Amend Something Previously Adopted are not in order under the following circumstances:

a) When it has previously been moved to reconsider the vote on the main motion, and the question can be reached by calling up the motion to Reconsider (37).

b) When something has been done, as a result of the vote on the main motion, that is impossible to undo. (The unexecuted part of an order, however, can be rescinded or amended.)

c) When a resignation has been acted upon, or a person has been elected to or expelled from membership or office, and the person was present or has been officially notified of the action. (The only way to reverse an expulsion is to follow whatever procedure is prescribed by the bylaws for admission or reinstatement. For the case of an election, see 62:16 regarding removal of a person from office.)
Form and Example

35:7 When previous notice has been given, the motions to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted may be made as follows:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): In accordance with notice given at the last meeting, I move to rescind the resolution that authorized additional landscaping of the grounds. [Or “… to amend the resolution… by adding…”] (Second.)

In such a case, a majority vote is sufficient.

35:8 When no notice of the motion to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted has been given, the motions may be made as follows:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move to rescind the motion relating to… adopted at the May meeting. [Or “… to amend the motion… by inserting…”] (Second.)

Without previous notice, the motion requires a two-thirds vote or a majority of the entire membership for its adoption.

35:9 In a great many instances, the motion or resolution originally adopted is not referred to, and only the bylaw, rule, or policy to be rescinded or amended is mentioned. For example:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): In accordance with the notice given in the call of this meeting, I move to amend Article V, Section 3 of the bylaws by striking out subparagraph (c) thereof. (Second.)

35:10 To offer an amendment to change one form of the motion into the other:

35:11 If the motion was made “To amend the motion relating to… adopted at the May meeting… by inserting…”:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move to substitute for the pending motion the following: “To rescind the motion relating to… adopted at the May meeting.”

35:12 If the motion was made “To rescind the resolution that authorized additional landscaping of the grounds”:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move to substitute for the pending motion the following: “To amend the resolution that authorized additional landscaping of the grounds by adding ‘at a cost not to exceed $100,000.’”
Rescind and Expunge from the Minutes

35:13 On extremely rare occasions when it is desired not only to rescind action but also to express the strongest disapproval, a member may move to Rescind and Expunge from the Minutes (or the Record). Adoption of this motion requires an affirmative vote of a majority of the entire membership, and may be inadvisable unless the support is even greater. Even a unanimous vote at a meeting is insufficient if that vote is not a majority of the entire membership. If such a motion is adopted, the secretary, in the presence of the assembly, draws a single line through or around the offending words in the minutes, and writes across them the words, “Rescinded and Ordered Expunged,” with the date and his signature. In the recorded minutes the words that are expunged must not be blotted or cut out so that they cannot be read, since this would make it impossible to verify whether more was expunged than ordered. In any published record of the proceedings, the expunged material is omitted. Rather than expunging, it is usually better to rescind the previous action and then, if advisable, to adopt a resolution condemning the action which has been rescinded.
§36. DISCHARGE A COMMITTEE

36:1  By means of the motion to Discharge a Committee from further consideration of a question or subject, the assembly can take the matter out of a committee’s hands after referring it to the committee and before the committee has made a final report on it, and the assembly itself can consider it.

36:2  So long as a question is in the hands of a committee, the assembly cannot consider another motion involving practically the same question.

36:3  The rules governing this motion are similar to those applying to the motion to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted—of which it is a particular case in certain applications, as explained in 36:10–11.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

36:4 The motion to Discharge a Committee:

1. Takes precedence over nothing, and therefore can be moved only when no other question is pending. Previous notice of intent to offer the motion at the next meeting can be given while another question is pending, however—provided that it does not interrupt a speaker. This motion yields to all subsidiary, privileged, and incidental motions.

2. Can be applied to any main motion, or any other matter, that has been referred to a committee and that the committee has not yet finally reported to the assembly. All of the subsidiary motions can be applied to it.

3. Is out of order when another has the floor; but previous notice of intent to offer this motion at the next meeting can be given after another member has been assigned the floor, provided that he has not begun to speak.

4. Must be seconded.

5. Is debatable; debate can go into the merits of the question in the hands of the committee.

6. Is amendable. For example, the motion can be amended as to the time at which the assembly is to consider the question; or an amendment to the effect that the committee be instructed to report instead of being discharged can be moved as a substitute.

7. Since the motion would change action already taken by the assembly, requires (a) a two-thirds vote, (b) a majority vote when notice of intent to make the motion has been given at the previous meeting within a quarterly time interval or in the call of the present meeting, or (c) a vote of a majority of the entire membership—any one of which will suffice. To prevent business from being delayed by a committee, however, there are two special circumstances under which the motion requires only a majority vote (even without notice): (a) if the committee fails to report within a prescribed time as instructed, and (b) while the assembly is considering any partial report of the committee.

8. A negative vote can be reconsidered, but not an affirmative vote.
Further Rules and Explanation

36:5 Circumstances Justifying the Motion; Alternative Procedures. Action to discharge a committee from further consideration of a question or subject is generally advisable only when the committee has failed to report with appropriate promptness or when, for some urgent reason, the assembly desires to proceed on the matter without further aid from the committee, or wishes to drop the matter.

36:6 If the committee to which the matter was referred has not yet taken it up and if it is not too late to move to Reconsider (the day of its committal or the next business-meeting day), the appropriate motion is to reconsider the vote on the motion of referral, which requires only a majority vote. The motion of referral may have been a subsidiary motion to Commit (13) or a main motion, depending on the case, as explained below.

36:7 Instead of discharging the committee, the assembly can instruct it to report at a reasonable specified time. A motion to do this can be moved as a substitute (see 12) for a pending motion to Discharge a Committee, or it can be introduced as an incidental main motion when no question is pending. If no instruction as to time of reporting has been given previously, this motion requires only a majority vote for adoption. If it changes a previously specified reporting time before that time has arrived, however, the vote required is the same as for the motion to Discharge a Committee.

36:8 No motion to Discharge a Committee is needed when a committee’s final report on a referred question or subject has been received by the assembly, since the committee is then automatically discharged from further consideration of the matter.

36:9 Effect of Discharging a Committee. When a committee is discharged from considering a matter, either by the adoption of a motion to discharge it or by the submission of its final report, the committee continues in existence if it is a standing committee, but ceases to exist if it is a special committee that was appointed to take up the matter. In any case, when a committee is thus discharged, its chairman returns to the secretary of the society all papers relating to the referred matter that were previously entrusted to him.

36:10 When a committee is discharged from further consideration of a question which was pending at the time of its referral and which was referred by means of the subsidiary motion to Commit, the question comes before the assembly automatically at that time (unless the committee is discharged by means of a motion that includes the specification of a later time for considering it). If no later time was specified in the motion, the question can then be postponed, if desired; or if the assembly wishes to drop the matter, the question can be postponed indefinitely. If a motion to Discharge a Committee specifies a later time for considering the question and does not make it a special order, the question comes up under the same conditions as if postponed to that time without making it a special order—that is, it is a general order for the time named. If the motion to Discharge a Committee includes a provision making the question a special order, it requires a two-thirds vote, just as any other motion to make a special order. (See 14:12–17 regarding the priority to which a question is subject when it is due to come up after postponement.)

36:11 On the other hand, a motion to discharge a committee from further consideration of a subject that was referred to the committee by means of a main motion is a particular case of the motion to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35). When such a motion to Discharge a Committee has been adopted, another main motion is needed to bring before the assembly the matter that was referred; otherwise it dies.
Form and Example

36:12 The form used in making this motion, as applied to a question being considered by a standing committee, may be:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move that the Finance Committee be discharged from further consideration of the resolution relating to… (Second.)

36:13 In the case of a special committee, the following form may be used:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I move that the committee to which was referred the resolution relating to… be discharged. (Second.)

36:14 If it is desired to take up the question at a later time, there may be added to either of the above forms, for example, the words, “and that the resolution be considered at 4 P.M.” (in which case it is a general order for that time), or, “and that it be made a special order for…”

36:15 If the motion to discharge the committee is adopted and includes no provision for consideration at a later time, and if the question was referred while pending (by means of the subsidiary motion to Commit), the chair announces the result and immediately states the question brought out of committee. For example:

CHAIR: There are two thirds in the affirmative and the committee is discharged. The question is now on the resolution, “Resolved,…”
§37. RECONSIDER

37:1  Reconsider—a motion of American origin—enables a majority in an assembly, within a limited time and without notice, to bring back for further consideration a motion that has already been voted on. The purpose of reconsidering a vote is to permit correction of hasty, ill-advised, or erroneous action, or to take into account added information or a changed situation that has developed since the taking of the vote.

37:2  Whenever it is stated in this book that a motion or a vote “can be reconsidered” or “cannot be reconsidered,” specific reference is being made to the use of the motion to Reconsider, and not to any of the other motions or procedures that bring a question again before the assembly (see 6:25–28; 34–36; 38; also 10:26(3–5) to 10:27).

37:3  The motion to Reconsider can, in general, be applied to a vote that either adopted or rejected a motion, and it proposes no specific change in a decision but simply that the original question be reopened. It is neither a main motion nor a secondary motion, but in certain respects it assumes the character of the motion to which it is applied (that is, the motion to be reconsidered), as will be seen below.

37:4  The full procedure for reconsidering a vote involves essentially three stages, which may be summarized as follows:

37:5  First, the mere making of a motion to Reconsider, when seconded by another member and acknowledged by the chair, has the effect of suspending, at least temporarily, any action growing out of the vote proposed to be reconsidered (see 37:11). The general rule therefore is that Reconsider cannot be applied to an affirmative vote whose provisions have been partly carried out or to any vote that has caused something to be done that it is impossible to undo (see Standard Characteristic 2, below).

37:6 Second, the motion to Reconsider is considered by the assembly—either immediately after it is made or at some later time, depending on the parliamentary situation (see 37:14–17). Although at this stage the motion to be reconsidered is not yet pending, debate on the motion to Reconsider (if it is debatable; see 37:18) can go fully into the merits of that question.

37:7 Third, if the motion to Reconsider is adopted, the effect is—to the extent practicable, and with certain exceptions—to place before the assembly again the question on which the vote has been reconsidered, in the exact position it occupied the moment before it was voted on originally. The original vote is thus canceled, and, before any new vote on it is taken, the question is again open to debate, amendment, or any other action appropriate in the case. If, however, the motion to Reconsider is rejected, the vote which it proposed to reconsider, as well as any action held up because of the proposed reconsideration, goes back into effect, just as though the motion to Reconsider had never been made. The same result occurs if the motion to Reconsider is dropped without having been voted on at all. (See 37:11.)

37:8 To provide both usefulness and protection against abuse, the motion to Reconsider has the following unique characteristics, as more fully explained in 37:10:

a) Except in committees, it can be made only by a member who voted on the prevailing side.

b) Except in committees, it must be moved either on the same day the original vote was taken or on the next succeeding day within the same session on which a business meeting is held.

c) It can be made even when its consideration would not be in order, in which case it may be “called up” for consideration at a later time whose limits are longer than those for its making. Under those circumstances, action growing out of the vote proposed to be considered is temporarily suspended.
Standard Descriptive Characteristics

37:9 The motion to Reconsider:

1. a) With respect to making the motion, takes precedence over any other motion whatever and yields to nothing. The making of this motion is in order when any other question is pending, and also after the assembly has voted to adjourn, if the member rose and addressed the chair before the chair declared the meeting adjourned. If a reconsideration appears to require immediate action in the latter case, the vote on adjourning must be retaken. Even while an order for the Previous Question is in effect on a motion which is immediately pending, until the chair actually begins to take the vote, the making of a motion to Reconsider an earlier vote on another question is in order.

b) With respect to its consideration, has only the same rank as that of the motion to be reconsidered, but it takes precedence over, and supersedes, any new motion of equal rank that has been made but has not yet been stated by the chair. (The procedure for calling up a motion to Reconsider in preference to a main motion just made by someone else, and relating to another matter, is similar to that described for moving to Take from the Table; see 34.) Provided that no question is pending, the reconsideration of a vote disposing of a main motion, either temporarily or permanently, can be taken up even while the assembly is in the midst of taking up the general orders.

2. Can be applied to the vote on any motion except:
   a) a motion which can be renewed (see 38:6–7);
   b) a negative vote on a motion which, at the time the motion to Reconsider is made, would be out of order because:
      i) it conflicts with a motion previously adopted and still in force, ii) it conflicts with a motion which has been temporarily but not finally disposed of and which remains within the control of the assembly, or iii) it would conflict with a pending motion if that motion were adopted;
c) an affirmative vote whose provisions have been partly carried out;
d) an affirmative vote in the nature of a contract when the party to the contract has been notified of the outcome;
e) any vote which has caused something to be done that it is impossible to undo;
f) a vote on a motion to Reconsider;
g) an election that has become final as provided in 46:46;
or
h) when practically the same result as desired can be obtained by some other parliamentary motion that can be adopted by a majority vote without previous notice.
In the case of subsidiary or incidental motions that adhered to a main motion, however, Reconsider can be applied only in such a way that the reconsideration takes place while the main motion to which they adhered is pending—either before the main motion is voted on or when it is being reconsidered at the same time. The same is true where one subsidiary or incidental motion adheres to another; for example, Reconsider can be applied to the vote on a secondary amendment only in such a way that the reconsideration takes place before the primary amendment involved is voted on or while the primary amendment is being reconsidered.
(See 37:24–34.)
By application of these principles, it follows that certain motions cannot be reconsidered, while in the case of others only the vote on an affirmative result can be reconsidered, and with still others, only the vote on a negative result. (See pages t50–t51 for a list of the motions in each of these categories; see also Standard Characteristic 8 in the sections on each individual motion.)

The motion to Lay on the Table can be applied to the motion to Reconsider. Motions to Postpone to a Certain Time, to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, and for the Previous Question can also be applied to it when it is debatable (see Standard Characteristic 5). When a motion to Reconsider is postponed or laid on the table, all adhering questions are also postponed or go to the table. Motions to Postpone Indefinitely, Amend, or Commit cannot be applied to a motion to Reconsider.

3. Is in order (with respect to making the motion) even after another person has been assigned the floor, so long as he has not actually begun to speak. The calling up of a motion to Reconsider is out of order when another has the floor. A member can, however, claim preference in being recognized for the purpose of either making or calling up a motion to Reconsider ahead of another who rose first for the purpose of making a new motion; see also Standard Characteristic 1(b), above.

4. Must be seconded at the time it is made. Unlike the making of the motion, which must be done by a person who voted with the prevailing side, the seconding can be done by any member regardless of how he voted on the motion to be reconsidered. The calling up of the motion to Reconsider does not require a second.

5. Is debatable whenever the motion proposed to be reconsidered would be debatable, and when debatable, opens to debate the merits of the question whose reconsideration is proposed. (See 37:29–32, however, regarding a series of motions proposed to be reconsidered, and the question that is opened to debate in such a case.)
When the motion proposed to be reconsidered is not debatable—either because of its nature or because it is subject to an unexhausted order for the Previous Question (16)—the motion to Reconsider is undebatable (but see 43:31–32 regarding allowable explanation of an undebatable motion). Similarly, if the Previous Question is in effect on a pending question or series of questions, and if a motion which is proposed to be reconsidered adheres to these pending question(s) in such a way that the reconsideration must be taken up before the Previous Question is exhausted, both the motion to Reconsider and the motion to be reconsidered are undebatable—even if the latter motion was open to debate at its earlier consideration and the Previous Question was ordered later.

6. Is not amendable.

7. Requires only a majority vote, regardless of the vote necessary to adopt the motion to be reconsidered. (But see 37:35 for a different rule in the case of standing and special committees.)

8. Cannot be reconsidered. If it is voted on and lost, the motion to Reconsider cannot be renewed except by unanimous consent. By the same principle, no question can be reconsidered twice unless it was materially amended during its first reconsideration.
Further Rules and Explanation

37:10 By Whom and When a Motion to Reconsider Can Be Made. As briefly mentioned above (37:8), to provide both usefulness and protection against abuse, the motion to Reconsider has the following unique characteristics:

a) The motion to Reconsider can be made only by a member who voted with the prevailing side. In other words, a reconsideration can be moved only by one who voted aye if the motion involved was adopted, or no if the motion was lost. (In standing and special committees, however, the motion to Reconsider can be made by any member who did not vote on the losing side—including one who did not vote at all.) It should be noted that it is possible for a minority to be the prevailing side if a motion requiring a two-thirds vote for adoption is lost.

A member who voted by ballot may make the motion if he is willing to waive the secrecy of his ballot. If the motion to be reconsidered was adopted by unanimous consent, all the members present at the time of the adoption are in the same position as if they had voted on the prevailing side and qualify to move to reconsider. Similarly, if a motion was lost but the negative vote was not taken because it was intrinsically irrelevant (see 44:9(a)), the members present at the time who did not vote in favor qualify to move to reconsider.

This requirement for making the motion to Reconsider is a protection against its dilatory use by a defeated minority—especially when the motion is debatable (see Standard Characteristic 5, above) and the minority is large enough to prevent adoption of the Previous Question (16). When a member who cannot move a reconsideration believes there are valid reasons for one, he should try, if there is time or opportunity, to persuade someone who voted with the prevailing side to make such a motion. Otherwise, he can obtain the floor while no business is pending and briefly state his reasons for hoping that a reconsideration will be moved, provided that this does not run into debate; or, if necessary while business is pending, he can request permission to state such reasons (see Request for Any Other Privilege, 33:22).

b) The making of this motion is subject to time limits, as follows: In a session of one day—such as an ordinary meeting of a club or a one-day convention—the motion to Reconsider can be made only on the same day the vote to be reconsidered was taken. In a convention or session of more than one day, a reconsideration can be moved only on the same day the original vote was taken or on the next succeeding day within the session on which a business meeting is held. These time limitations do not apply to standing or special committees (see 37:35). Except by unanimous consent, a motion to Reconsider that has not been finally disposed of cannot be withdrawn after it is too late to renew it; that is, it can be withdrawn only within the same time limits as for making the motion in the first place.

c) The making of this motion has a higher rank than its consideration; that is, the motion can be made and seconded at a time when it is not in order for it to come before the assembly for debate or vote. In such a case it can be taken up later, even after it would be too late to move it in the first place. If the motion to Reconsider is introduced at a time when it cannot be taken up, the chair does not state the question on it as pending, but instructs the secretary to record the motion as made and seconded. While a motion to reconsider the vote on a main motion has this status, a member can bring the motion before the assembly at any time when its consideration is in order. When he does this, he is said to call up the motion to Reconsider (see 37:15).

37:11 Suspending Effect of Making a Motion to Reconsider. The effect of making a motion to Reconsider is the suspension of all action that depends on the result of the vote proposed to be reconsidered. This suspending effect lasts until:

a) the motion to Reconsider is adopted or rejected;
b) it is withdrawn (see 37:10(b), 33:11–18);
c) it falls to the ground without having been voted on, because it was pending, or remained temporarily disposed of, upon the final adjournment of a session under conditions stated in 21:7(c); or

d) if it has not yet been taken up, when the limits of time for calling it up have expired (see 37:15).

37:12 If the motion to Reconsider is adopted, the original vote on the motion being reconsidered is thereby canceled altogether; but if the suspending effect is terminated by a vote rejecting the motion to Reconsider or in any other way, the situation becomes the same as if there had been no such motion, and the vote which it was proposed to reconsider—and any other action held up because of the proposed reconsideration—comes into full force, as if in effect, so far as applicable, from the time the vote was originally taken.

37:13 Reconsideration of a Motion That Is No Longer in Order
Because of Intervening Action. It should be noted that, as a consequence of the rule set forth in (b) of Standard Characteristic 2 above, action taken by an assembly may preclude the making of a motion to reconsider the vote on a previously rejected motion. For an example, assume that a motion to spend all of an available sum of money for library books is voted down, and thereafter a motion to spend the same money for athletic equipment is made and adopted. No motion to reconsider the vote on the motion to purchase library books will thereafter be in order because, if adopted, it would place before the assembly a motion which conflicts with a motion previously adopted and still in force (see 39:5). In such a case, if it is desired to reconsider the vote on the rejected motion, the subsequently adopted motion must first be rescinded (or amended in some fashion so that it no longer conflicts), or the vote on it must be reconsidered and reversed.

37:14 Taking Up the Motion to Reconsider at the Time It Is Made. If a motion to Reconsider is made at a time when it can be taken up—that is, when the motion proposed to be reconsidered would be in order initially—the chair immediately states the question on the motion to Reconsider as pending before the assembly. In proposing a reconsideration of the vote on a main motion, it is usually better to make the motion to Reconsider when no other business is pending and the motion can be taken up immediately—unless it appears that there may be no such opportunity or there is an important reason for doing otherwise.

37:15 Calling Up the Motion to Reconsider at a Later Time. If a motion to Reconsider that involves a main motion cannot be taken up when it is made, then it can be called up and acted upon whenever no question is pending and no other member has the floor, within the following limits: The motion to Reconsider may be called up at any meeting of the same session in which it was made. If the next regular business session will be held within a quarterly time interval (9:7), it may also be called up at any meeting of that next session, or at any intervening special meeting called for that purpose. To call it up, a member obtains the floor and says, “Mr. President, I call up the motion to reconsider the vote on the motion… [identifying it].” (The member is entitled to preference in recognition for this purpose; see 42:13(4)(c)). No second is necessary, since the motion to Reconsider was seconded at the time it was made. When this motion is called up, the chair immediately states the question on it as pending (see Form and Example).

37:16 Privilege accorded the mover in regard to the time at which reconsideration takes place. Although any member can call up the motion to Reconsider as just described, usually no one but the mover of the reconsideration calls it up on the day the motion is made—at least in cases where the session is to last beyond that day and there is no need for immediate action. The reason is that the mover may wish time to assemble new information, or—if the reconsideration is moved on the same day the original vote was taken—he may want the unrestricted debate that will be allowable if the motion is taken up on another day (see below). So long as business is not unreasonably delayed and the mover of the reconsideration acts in good faith, he is entitled to have it take place at a time he feels will make for the fullest and fairest reexamination of the question.

37:17 Duty of the chair when failure to call up the motion may do harm. In cases where a failure to call up a motion to Reconsider may do harm, the chair has the duty to point out the situation to the assembly. Suppose, for example, that in a meeting of an ordinary society that will meet within a quarterly time interval (9:7), there has been a motion to Reconsider a vote to do something that can only be done before the next meeting. Should the present meeting adjourn without taking up the motion to Reconsider, the measure proposed to be reconsidered would be killed unless an adjourned meeting or special meeting were held to consider it. Therefore, if this meeting seems on the point of adjourning before the motion to Reconsider has been taken up, the chair should explain the facts and suggest that someone call up the motion. If it has been moved to adjourn under these circumstances, the motion to Adjourn can be withdrawn or voted down—or the time can be fixed for an adjourned meeting, which can be done either before or after the vote on adjournment has been taken (see Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn, 22).

37:18 Debate on the Motion to Reconsider. Whenever the motion to Reconsider is taken up, it is debatable if the motion proposed to be reconsidered is debatable, and debate can go into the merits of the question proposed to be reconsidered, as noted in Standard Characteristic 5. The right of each member to debate the motion to Reconsider is separate from the original consideration of the motion proposed to be reconsidered. Therefore, even if a member exhausted his right to debate in the original consideration and the motion to Reconsider is taken up on the same day, he still has the right to speak the regular number of times (twice unless the assembly has a special rule providing otherwise) in debate on the motion to Reconsider. (For rules affecting a member’s right to debate in the reconsideration if the motion to Reconsider is adopted, see below.)

37:19 Effect of Adoption of the Motion to Reconsider; Rules Governing Debate on the Reconsideration. The effect of the adoption of the motion to Reconsider is immediately to place before the assembly again the question on which the vote is to be reconsidered—in the exact position it occupied the moment before it was voted on originally.
37:20 Rules governing debate on the reconsideration of the vote are as follows:

37:21 Reconsideration of a vote on the same day. A member’s right to debate the reconsideration of a vote is independent of the extent to which he took part in debate on the motion to Reconsider. If the reconsideration takes place on the same day as the first consideration, however, anyone who exhausted his right to debate in the first consideration will not be able to speak on it again during the reconsideration, without permission of the assembly. (But such a member can pursue an equivalent purpose while the motion to Reconsider is pending, since the motion proposed to be reconsidered is also open to discussion in debate on the motion to Reconsider.)

37:22 Reconsideration of a vote on a later day. Every member’s right to debate in the reconsideration of a question begins over again, regardless of speeches made previously, if reconsideration takes place on a day other than that on which the vote to be reconsidered was taken.

37:23 Reconsideration under an order limiting or extending limits of debate. If a vote on one of a series of motions is taken under an order limiting debate or for the Previous Question, and then is reconsidered before such an order is exhausted (as explained in the sections on those motions, 15 and 16), the same restrictions continue to apply to debate both on the motion to Reconsider and on the reconsideration. In the case of reconsidering a motion similarly covered by an unexhausted order extending limits of debate, the extension applies only to the reconsideration itself, not to debate on the motion to Reconsider. When reconsideration takes place after exhaustion of the Previous Question or a limitation or extension of debate, these orders do not come back into force, and debate or amendment is subject to the ordinary rules.

37:24 Reconsideration of Subsidiary, Privileged, and Incidental Motions. Conditions under which subsidiary, privileged, or incidental motions can be reconsidered depend on what other motions are pending at the time the reconsideration is moved, as follows:

37:25 To reconsider a subsidiary, privileged, or incidental motion: Reconsideration moved while the main question is pending. When a main motion is pending (with or without a series of adhering motions) and it is moved to reconsider the vote on a related subsidiary, privileged, or incidental motion, the motion to Reconsider becomes (a) immediately pending or (b) pending at a lower position in the series, depending on whether the motion proposed to be reconsidered would then be in order if moved for the first time.

37:26 Referring to case (a) above, the motion to Reconsider takes precedence over all pending questions if the motion proposed to be reconsidered would take such precedence (see 5 and 6; see also the chart on pages t3–t5), in which case the motion to Reconsider becomes the immediately pending question at once. For example, assume that it is moved and seconded to reconsider a negative vote on a motion to refer the pending main question to a committee. If the main question is now pending alone, or if no other questions are pending except motions to Postpone Indefinitely or to Amend (which rank below the motion to Commit), the chair at once states the question on the motion to Reconsider as immediately pending.

37:27 On the other hand, referring to case (b) above, if a series of motions is pending with the main question, and the related motion whose reconsideration is proposed would not take precedence over all of them, the motion to Reconsider does not become the immediately pending question when it is moved, but it becomes pending as one of the series, at a position corresponding to the rank of the motion proposed to be reconsidered. In such a case, the motion to Reconsider is taken up immediately after voting has been completed on all motions that would not yield to the motion to be reconsidered. For example, suppose that while a main motion, an amendment, and a motion to lay the pending questions on the table are pending, it is moved to reconsider a previous negative vote on referring the same main question and amendment to a committee. The order of rank, from highest to lowest, of the four motions is: (1) Lay on the Table, (2) Commit, (3) Amend, and (4) the main motion. This is the order in which these motions would be voted on, and the reverse of the order in which they would be made. The procedure in this instance is as follows: The chair takes note of the fact that the motion to Reconsider has been made and seconded, instructing the secretary to record it. He then proceeds to take the vote on the motion to Lay on the Table. If that motion is lost, he automatically states the question on the motion to reconsider the vote on the referral to the committee, since the motion to Commit is next lower in rank. If the motion to Reconsider is adopted, the motion to Commit is then reconsidered and voted on again; and if this is lost, the question is then stated on the amendment. (If the motion to Lay on the Table is adopted, then whenever the questions are taken from the table, the immediately pending question is the motion to Reconsider, and from this point the procedure is the same as above.)

37:28 If the reconsideration of a primary amendment is moved while another amendment of the same degree is pending, the pending amendment is disposed of first. Then the chair states the question on the motion to reconsider the amendment previously acted upon.

37:29 When it is moved to reconsider a debatable subsidiary or incidental motion which relates to a pending main question or a series of pending questions (in which case the motion to Reconsider is debatable, as noted in Standard Characteristic 5), debate on the motion to Reconsider can go into the merits of the motion proposed to be reconsidered, but not into the merits of any other pending question. For example, in the debate on a motion to reconsider an amendment to the pending main question, the merits of the amendment are open to discussion, but not those of the main question apart from the amendment.

37:30 To reconsider an adhering subsidiary or incidental motion: Reconsideration moved after the main question has been acted upon. If it is desired to reconsider the vote on a subsidiary or incidental motion (an amendment, for example) after the main question to which it adhered has been finally disposed of (by adoption, rejection, or indefinite postponement), the vote on the main question, or on its indefinite postponement, must also be reconsidered (see also Standard Characteristic 2). In such a case, one motion to Reconsider should be made to cover both the vote on the subsidiary or incidental motion whose reconsideration is desired, and the vote on the main question (or its indefinite postponement). The member who makes this motion to Reconsider must have voted with the prevailing side in the original vote on the subsidiary or incidental motion—that is, on the motion which will be reconsidered first if the reconsideration takes place.

37:31 The same principle applies to the reconsideration of a secondary amendment after the related primary amendment has been voted on. If such a reconsideration is desired while the main question is still pending, the primary amendment must also be reconsidered. If it is desired to reconsider the secondary amendment after the main question has been finally disposed of, the secondary amendment, the primary amendment, and the main question must all be reconsidered, and one motion to Reconsider should be made covering the votes of these three motions.

37:32 When a motion to Reconsider covers the votes on two or more connected motions, not all of these questions can be discussed in debate on the motion to Reconsider, but only the one that will be voted on first if the motion to Reconsider is adopted. Thus, if the motion is to reconsider the votes on a resolution, a primary amendment, and a secondary amendment, only the secondary amendment is open to debate in connection with debate on the motion to Reconsider. If this motion to Reconsider is adopted, the chair states the question on the secondary amendment and recognizes the mover of the reconsideration as entitled to the floor. The question is now in exactly the same condition as it was just before the original vote was taken on the secondary amendment.

37:33 If a main motion is included in a series covered by a single motion to Reconsider, as just described, the reconsideration is in order at the same times as if it had been moved to reconsider the main motion alone. If the motion to Reconsider is made at a time when it cannot be taken up, it suspends action in the way described in 37:11 and stands until called up, subject to the same conditions as if it applied only to the main motion.

37:34 If a motion to reconsider the vote on an adhering subsidiary or incidental motion (an amendment, for example) is made after the main question to which it adheres has been either postponed to a certain time or laid on the table, the motion to Reconsider is properly noted and is taken up in due course (37:27) if and when the main motion is again brought before the assembly. The same is true if the motion to reconsider the adhering subsidiary or incidental motion was made before, but was not called up before, the main question was postponed or laid on the table. On the other hand, if a main question is referred to a committee, no motion to reconsider the vote on an adhering subsidiary or incidental motion is in order while the question is in the hands of the committee, and any such motion to Reconsider that was made but not taken up prior to referral is thereafter ignored.

37:35 Reconsideration in Standing and Special Committees.
Reconsideration in a standing or a special committee (50) differs from reconsideration in a meeting of the assembly in the following respects:

1) A motion to reconsider a vote in the committee can be made and taken up regardless of the time that has elapsed since the vote was taken, and there is no limit to the number of times a question can be reconsidered. Likewise, the rule requiring unanimous consent to renew a defeated motion to Reconsider does not apply in committees.

2) The motion can be made by any member of the committee who did not vote with the losing side; or, in other words, the maker of the motion to Reconsider can be one who voted with the prevailing side, or one who did not vote at all, or even was absent.

3) Unless all the members of the committee who voted with the prevailing side are present or have been given reasonable notice that the reconsideration will be moved, it requires a two-thirds vote to adopt the motion to Reconsider.

In other respects, reconsideration in a committee is the same as in a meeting of the society or its board. A vote cannot be reconsidered in a committee of the whole.
Form and Example

37:36 This motion may be made in forms such as the following:

a) For the reconsideration of a main question: “I move to reconsider the vote on the resolution relating to the annual banquet. I voted for [or “against”] the resolution.”

b) To move the reconsideration of a subsidiary, privileged, or incidental motion related to the main question, while the main question is pending: “I move to reconsider the vote on the amendment to strike out ‘Friday’ and insert ‘Saturday.’ I voted for [or “against”] the amendment.”

c) When the reconsideration of a subsidiary or incidental motion is desired after the main question to which it adhered has been acted upon: “I move to reconsider the votes on the resolution relating to the annual banquet and on the amendment to strike out ‘Friday’ and insert ‘Saturday.’ I voted for [or “against”] the amendment.”

37:37 If the maker of the motion to Reconsider fails to state which side he voted on, the chair, before making any other response, directs the member to do so:

CHAIR: The member moving the reconsideration must state how he voted on the resolution [“motion,” “amendment,” etc.].

37:38 If the resolution was adopted by unanimous consent, the chair asks whether the member was present at the time. If the member did not vote with the prevailing side, another member who did so can make the motion to Reconsider, if he desires. The motion must be seconded.

37:39 If it is in order to take up the motion to Reconsider when it is made, the chair immediately states the question as follows:
CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to reconsider the vote on the following resolution [reading it].

37:40 If it is not in order to take up the motion to Reconsider when it is moved, the chair says instead:

CHAIR: It is moved and seconded to reconsider the vote on the resolution relating to… The Secretary will make a note of it.

He then continues with the pending business.

37:41 When it is in order to call up the motion to Reconsider and a member wishes to do so, the member rises and addresses the chair:

MEMBER A (obtaining the floor): I call up the motion to reconsider the vote [or “votes”] on…

37:42 The chair proceeds:

CHAIR: The motion to reconsider the vote [or “votes”] on… is called up. The question is on the motion to reconsider… [etc.].

37:43 If a reconsideration that could not be taken up when it was moved is one that later comes before the assembly automatically, then when that point is reached, the chair says, for example:

CHAIR: The question is now on the motion to reconsider the vote on the amendment to…

37:44 After debate on a motion to Reconsider, assuming that this motion is adopted, the chair puts the question and states the result as follows:

CHAIR: As many as are in favor of reconsidering the vote on the resolution relating to the annual banquet, say aye…. Those opposed, say no…. The ayes have it and the vote on the resolution is reconsidered. The question is now on the resolution, which is… [etc.].

Or:

CHAIR: The ayes have it and the votes on the resolution and the amendment are reconsidered. The question is now on the amendment, which is… [etc.].

37:45 Note that if the result of the vote on the motion to Reconsider is negative, it is the only vote taken. But if the motion to Reconsider is adopted, this is followed—after any debate—by the taking of the vote or votes that are consequently reconsidered.
Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes

37:46  Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes is a special form of the motion to Reconsider that has a different object from the regular motion. Its purpose is to prevent a temporary majority from taking advantage of an unrepresentative attendance at a meeting to vote an action that is opposed by a majority of a society’s or a convention’s membership. The effect of this form of the motion arises from the fact that when it is moved—on the same day that the vote to be reconsidered was taken—it cannot be called up until another day, even if another meeting is held on the same day. Thus, with a view to obtaining a more representative attendance, it ensures reconsideration of a question on a different day from the one on which the question was put to vote. The name of this form does not imply that the regular motion to Reconsider is not also recorded in the minutes.

37:47 Differences from the Regular Form of the Motion.

Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes differs from the regular form of Reconsider in the following respects:

1) It can be moved only on the same day that the vote proposed to be reconsidered was taken. The regular form of the motion to Reconsider can be used on the next succeeding day within the session on which a business meeting is held.

2) It takes precedence over the regular motion to Reconsider. Also, this motion can be made even after the vote has been taken on the motion to Reconsider, provided that the chair has not announced the result of the vote. In this case the regular motion to Reconsider is then ignored. If it were not for the rule that the motion to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes takes precedence over the regular motion to Reconsider, the motion to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes would generally be forestalled by the regular motion, which would be voted down, and then Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes could not be moved.

3) It can be applied only to votes that finally dispose of main motions; that is, to: (a) an affirmative or negative vote on a main motion; (b) an affirmative vote on postponing indefinitely; or (c) a negative vote on an objection to the consideration of a question, if the session extends beyond that day.

4) It cannot be applied to votes on motions whose object would be defeated by a delay of one day. For example, a motion asking a visitor to address a convention the following day cannot have this motion applied to it.

5) If more than a quarterly time interval (9:7) will intervene before the next regular business session, it cannot be moved at the last business meeting of the current session.

6) It cannot be called up on the day it is made, except that when it is moved on the last day—but not the last meeting—of a session of an organization that is not scheduled to meet again within a quarterly time interval (9:7), it can be called up at the last business meeting of the session.

37:48 After a motion to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes has been called up, its treatment is the same as that of the regular motion to Reconsider.

37:49 Procedure for Use of the Motion. To illustrate the use of this form of the motion, suppose that at a long meeting of a county historical society, many members have left, unknowingly leaving a quorum composed mainly of a small group determined to commit the society to certain action that a few of those present believe would be opposed by most of the membership. A member in opposition can prevent the vote on such action from becoming final by moving “to reconsider and enter on the minutes the vote on…” To be in a position to do this, such a member—detecting the hopelessness of preventing an affirmative result on the vote—should vote in the affirmative himself. If the motion to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes is seconded, all action required by the vote proposed to be reconsidered is suspended, and there is time to notify absent members of the proposed action.

37:50 If no member of the temporary minority voted on the prevailing side and it is too late for anyone to change his vote (see 45:9), notice can be given that a motion to rescind the assembly’s action will be made at the next meeting. At this next meeting, provided that such notice has been given, the motion to Rescind can then be adopted by a majority vote.

37:51 Protecting Against Abuses of the Motion. The motion to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes may occasionally be subject to attempted abuse, particularly in ordinary societies with single-meeting sessions, since it gives any two members power to hold up action taken by a meeting. In the average organization this motion should generally be reserved for extreme cases, and is in order only when final decision on the question could, if necessary, wait until the next regular meeting, or when an adjourned or special meeting to take it up is a practical possibility.

37:52 If an actual minority in a representative meeting makes improper use of this motion by moving to reconsider and enter on the minutes a vote which requires action before the next regular meeting, the remedy is to fix the time for an adjourned meeting (9, 22) on another suitable day when the reconsideration can be called up and disposed of. In such a case, the mere making of a motion to set an adjourned meeting would likely cause withdrawal of the motion to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes, since its object would be defeated.
Footnotes to Chapter IX

1. If the term of all or a specified portion of the assembly's membership will expire before the start of the next regular session, as may happen in a board or an elected legislative assembly, the rule is the same as though more than a quarterly time interval will have elapsed—that is, a question can be taken from the table only until the end of the same session at which it was laid on the table.

2. However, if an amendable motion is taken from the table at a later session, motions to amend it may be made without regard to whether or not the same or similar motions to amend it were either adopted or rejected during any previous session.

3. Or a committee can take it out of a subcommittee's hands.

4. The motion to Reconsider has a special form known as Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes, however, which outranks the regular form of the motion (see 37:46–52).

5. Exception (c) does not apply to a motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, on which the vote can be reconsidered even if such an order has been partly carried out.

6. However, passage of a motion to reconsider adoption of the Previous Question (16:16) or of Objection to the Consideration of a Question (26:6) is deemed to have resulted in the reversal of the original vote on those motions (that is, the Previous Question is deemed defeated or the objection is deemed overturned) without taking another vote. It should also be noted that, if reconsideration of a vote taken on an amendable motion takes place during a later session, motions to amend the motion being reconsidered may be made during its reconsideration without regard to whether or not the same or similar motions to amend it were either adopted or rejected during any previous session.

7. For an exception, see item (6) below.
§38. RENEWAL OF MOTIONS

38:1 If a motion is made and disposed of without being adopted, and is later allowed to come before the assembly after being made again by any member in essentially the same connection, the motion is said to be renewed. Renewal of motions is limited by the basic principle that an assembly cannot be asked to decide the same, or substantially the same, question twice during one session—except through a motion to reconsider a vote (37) or a motion to rescind an action (35), or in connection with amending something already adopted (see also 6:25). A previously considered motion may become a substantially different question through a significant change in the wording or because of a difference in the time or circumstances in which it is proposed, and such a motion may thus be in order when it could not otherwise be renewed.

38:2 The rules restricting renewal of motions do not apply to any motion that was last disposed of by being withdrawn. A motion that is withdrawn becomes as if it had never been made and can be renewed whenever it would be originally in order. The rules restricting renewal of motions also do not apply to any motion that dies for lack of a second. Although such a motion is not treated as if it had never been made, it too is a motion which the assembly was not called upon to decide, and thus it too may be renewed whenever it would originally be in order to make it.

38:3 Two general principles govern the renewal of motions:

1) No motion can be renewed during the same session in which it has already been before the assembly, except where its renewal is permitted by a specific rule; and such a rule always implies circumstances under which the motion has in some respect become a different question. (For a discussion of the rules growing out of this principle, see Nonrenewability During the Same Session, and Exceptions, below.) Whenever it is stated without qualification that a particular parliamentary motion “cannot be renewed,” such a statement means that the motion cannot be renewed during the same session, or, in the case of a subsidiary or incidental motion, not during that session in connection with the same motion to which it directly adhered.

2) Any motion that is still applicable can be renewed at any later session, except where a specific rule prevents its renewal; and such an impediment to renewal at a later session normally can exist only when the first motion goes over to that session as not finally disposed of, in which case the question can then be reached through the first motion (see 9:7–11, 38:8–9).
Nonrenewability During the Same Session, and Exceptions

38:4 The following rules are derived from the first principle stated above, by which a motion is not renewable at the same session unless the question has become somehow different.

38:5 Particular Cases of the General Rule Against Renewal. Applications of the general rule against renewal during the same session include the following:

1) A main motion, or a motion for the same amendment to a given motion, cannot be renewed at the same session unless there is a change in wording or circumstances sufficient to present substantially a new question, in which case this becomes technically a different motion. If a series of resolutions voted on together is lost, however, one or more of them can be offered again at the same session, but enough resolutions must be left out to present a genuinely different question from the viewpoint of probable voting result; otherwise this procedure becomes dilatory.

2) A motion to Postpone Indefinitely cannot be renewed in connection with the same main question during the same session, even if the main motion has been materially amended since the previous vote against indefinite postponement. There will be another opportunity to accomplish the same object—that is, to defeat the main motion—when it comes up for a final vote.

3) A motion to Reconsider that has been rejected cannot be renewed in connection with the same vote. To be able to be reconsidered a second time, the original question must have been materially amended during the first reconsideration—in which case the proposal to reconsider a second time is a new question.
4) A motion to Rescind that has been voted down cannot be renewed at the same session unless the motion proposed to be rescinded has meanwhile been amended sufficiently to present a new question.
5) A motion to divide the same question in substantially the same way cannot be renewed at the same session.
6) When a Question of Privilege or a Point of Order has been ruled on adversely by the chair, it cannot be raised again at the same session unless an appeal is made and the chair’s decision is reversed. After a decision of the chair has been sustained on an appeal, no point of order or appeal contrary to it can be made during that session.

38:6 Motions That Can Be Renewed at a Later Meeting of the Same Session. Following are two cases of motions which cannot be renewed at the same meeting, but which may have become different questions—and consequently are renewable—at another meeting of the same session (see 8):

1) Although the motion to Suspend the Rules for the same purpose cannot be renewed at the same meeting, such a motion can be renewed at the next meeting or any later meeting, even if the next meeting is held on the same day or is part of the same session. This renewal is allowable because by the time of the next meeting the attendance or situation may already have changed sufficiently to justify the renewal. The mere passage of time may make it a new question.

2) The same motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn—that is, a motion to set the same date, hour, and place for an adjourned meeting—cannot be renewed at the same meeting at which it is voted down; but if, after the first motion is rejected, the assembly decides to set an adjourned meeting for an earlier time than proposed in the first motion, then at that adjourned meeting it is in order to move to set a second adjourned meeting for the same time as originally considered for the first.

38:7 Motions That Can Be Renewed After Material Progress in Business or Debate. The following motions are renewable if they become new questions as described, even within the same meeting:

1) The subsidiary motions to Commit, to Postpone to a Certain Time, to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate, for the Previous Question, and to Lay on the Table can be renewed whenever progress in business or debate has been such that they are no longer practically the same questions. In addition, a motion to Lay on the Table can be renewed if something urgent has arisen that was not known when the assembly rejected this motion.

2) A motion to Take from the Table that has failed can be renewed after disposal of the business that was taken up following rejection of the motion.

3) A Call for the Orders of the Day can be renewed after disposal of the business that was taken up when the assembly refused to proceed to the orders of the day.

4) A motion to Adjourn or to Recess can be renewed after material progress in business or in debate—such as an important decision or speech. A vote on a motion to Recess or to Lay on the Table is not business of a character to justify renewal of a motion to Adjourn; and a vote on any of these three motions is not sufficient business to allow renewal of either of the others.

5) Motions to close nominations or the polls can be renewed after progress in nominations or voting has been such as to make them essentially new questions.
Conditions That May Impede Renewal at a Later Session

38:8 Main Motions That Go Over to Another Session; Motions Within the Control of the Assembly, Because Not Finally Disposed Of. Referring to the second general principle stated in 38:3, a main motion that was introduced but not adopted during one session can, except as noted in this paragraph, be renewed at any later session unless it has become absurd. Such exceptions occur only through one of the processes by which, from one session to another, a main motion can remain within the control of the assembly (that is, temporarily, but not finally, disposed of), so that the same motion can be considered at the later session. Four of these processes (numbered 1 through 4 below) can arise only in cases of organizations where no more than a quarterly time interval (see 9:7) will elapse until the next regular session. In such societies, a main motion cannot be renewed during the next session after a session at which it was:

1) postponed to, or otherwise set as a general or special order for, the next session (14, 41);
2) allowed to go over to the next session as unfinished business or as an unfinished special order (see 21:7(b), 41:18(a), 41:21–24);
3) laid on the table and not taken from the table (17, 34); or
4) the subject of a motion to Reconsider (37) that was made but not finally disposed of.

Also, in any assembly:

5) a main motion that has been referred to a committee cannot be renewed until after the session at which the assembly finally disposes of the main motion—after the committee has reported it back or has been discharged from its

38:9 Nonrenewability of Unsustained Objection to the Consideration of a Question. An unsustained Objection to the Consideration of a Question (26) cannot be renewed in connection with the same main motion—even at a later session if the main motion goes over to that session through one of the processes stated immediately above. By deciding to consider the question, the assembly has already begun its involvement, and it is too late to make an objection. But if an original main motion is finally disposed of at one session without being adopted and is renewed at a later session, it is then a new motion and its consideration can be objected to, subject to the usual rules.
§39. DILATORY AND IMPROPER MOTIONS

Dilatory Motions

39:1 A motion is dilatory if it seeks to obstruct or thwart the will of the assembly as clearly indicated by the existing parliamentary situation.

39:2 Parliamentary forms are designed to assist in the transaction of business. Even without adopting a rule on the subject, every deliberative assembly has the right to protect itself from the dilatory use of these forms.

39:3 Any main or other motion that is frivolous or absurd or that contains no rational proposition is dilatory and cannot be introduced. As further examples, it is dilatory to obstruct business by appealing from a ruling of the chair on a question about which there cannot possibly be two reasonable opinions, by demanding a division (29) on a vote even when there has been a full vote and the result is clear, by moving to lay on the table the matter for which a special meeting has been called, by constantly raising points of order and appealing from the chair’s decision on them, or by moving to adjourn again and again when nothing has happened to justify renewal of such a motion. By use of such tactics, a minority of two or three members could bring business to a standstill.

39:4 It is the duty of the presiding officer to prevent members from misusing the legitimate forms of motions, or abusing the privilege of renewing certain motions, merely to obstruct business. Whenever the chair becomes convinced that one or more members are repeatedly using parliamentary forms for dilatory purposes, he should either not recognize these members or he should rule that such motions are not in order.
—but he should never adopt such a course merely to speed up business, and he should never permit his personal feelings to affect his judgment in such cases. If the chair only suspects that a motion is not made in good faith, he should give the maker of the motion the benefit of the doubt. The chair should always be courteous and fair, but at the same time he should be firm in protecting the assembly from imposition.
Improper Motions

39:5 Motions that conflict with the corporate charter, constitution, or bylaws of a society, or with procedural rules prescribed by national, state, or local laws, are not in order, and if any motion of this kind is adopted, it is null and void. Likewise, apart from motions to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35), motions are not in order if they conflict with one or more motions previously adopted at any time and still in force. Such conflicting motions, if adopted, are null and void unless adopted by the vote required to rescind or amend the motion previously adopted.

39:6 Motions are also improper when they present practically the same question as a motion previously decided at the same session. In addition, motions are improper that conflict with, or present practically the same question as, one still within the control of the society because not finally disposed of (see 9:7–11, 38:8). If a conflicting motion were allowed in such cases, it would interfere with the freedom of the assembly in acting on the earlier motion when its consideration is resumed.

39:7 No motion can be introduced that is outside the object of the society as defined in the corporate charter, constitution, or bylaws (see 56:18), unless by a two-thirds vote the assembly agrees to its consideration (see 10:26(2)). Except as may be necessary in the case of a motion of censure or a motion related to disciplinary procedures (61, 63), a motion must not use language that reflects on a member’s conduct or character, or is discourteous, unnecessarily harsh, or not allowed in debate (see 43).
Footnotes to Chapter X

1. However, see 10:26(1) and the footnote there for exceptions.
§40. QUORUM

40:1 As indicated in 3:3, a quorum in an assembly is the number of members (see definition, 1:4) who must be present in order that business can be validly transacted. The quorum refers to the number of members present, not to the number actually voting on a particular question.
Rules Pertaining to the Quorum

40:2 Number of Members Constituting a Quorum. Depending on the organization and the provision it adopts in this regard, the number of members constituting a quorum may vary. As discussed below, most voluntary societies should provide for a quorum in their bylaws, but where there is no such provision, the quorum, in accordance with the common parliamentary law, is as follows:

1) In a mass meeting, the quorum is simply the number of persons present at the time, since they constitute the entire membership at that time.
2) In organizations such as many churches or some societies in which there are no required or effective annual dues and the register of members is not generally reliable as a list of the bona-fide members, the quorum at any regular or properly called meeting consists of those who attend.
3) In a body of delegates, such as a convention, the quorum is a majority of the number who have been registered as attending, irrespective of whether some may have departed. This may differ greatly from the number elected or appointed.
4) In any other deliberative assembly with enrolled membership whose bylaws do not specify a quorum, the quorum is a majority of all the members.

40:3 To accomplish their work, voluntary societies that have an enrolled membership generally need a provision in their bylaws establishing a relatively small quorum—considerably less than a majority of all the members. In most such organizations, it is rarely possible to obtain the attendance of a majority of the membership at a meeting. Sometimes the specification of a quorum is based on a percentage of the membership; but such a method has the disadvantage of requiring recomputation and may lead to confusion—for example, when the secretary, or other officer who is in a position to certify as to the current number of members for purposes of the percentage calculation, is absent. There is no single number or percentage of members that will be equally suitable as a quorum in all societies. The quorum should be as large a number of members as can reasonably be depended on to be present at any meeting, except in very bad weather or other exceptionally unfavorable conditions.

40:4 Note on Procedure in Changing the Quorum Provision in Bylaws. If it becomes necessary to change the quorum provision in a society’s bylaws, care should be taken, because if the rule is struck out first, the quorum will instantly become a majority of the membership, so that in many cases a quorum could not be obtained to adopt a new rule. The proper procedure is to strike out the old provision and insert the new provision, which is moved and voted on as one question.

40:5 Quorum in Boards and Committees. In a committee of the whole or its variations (52), the quorum is the same as in the assembly unless the rules of the assembly or the organization (that is, either its bylaws or its rules of order) specify otherwise. In all other committees and in boards, the quorum is a majority of the members of the board or committee unless a different quorum is provided for: (a) by the bylaws, in the case of a board or standing committee that the bylaws specifically establish; or (b) by a rule of the parent body or organization or by the motion establishing the particular committee, in the case of a committee that is not expressly established by the bylaws.

40:6 Proceedings in the Absence of a Quorum. In the absence of a quorum, any business transacted (except for the procedural actions noted in the next paragraph) is null and void. But if a quorum fails to appear at a regular or properly called meeting, the inability to transact business does not detract from the fact that the society’s rules requiring the meeting to be held were complied with and the meeting was convened—even though it had to adjourn immediately.

40:7 Even in the absence of a quorum, the assembly may fix the time to which to adjourn (22), adjourn (21), recess (20), or take measures to obtain a quorum. Subsidiary and incidental motions, questions of privilege, motions to Raise a Question of Privilege or Call for the Orders of the Day, and other motions may also be considered if they are related to these motions or to the conduct of the meeting while it remains without a quorum.

40:8 A motion that absent members be contacted during a recess would represent a measure to obtain a quorum. A motion to obtain a quorum may be moved as a main motion when no business is pending, or as a privileged motion that takes precedence over a motion to Recess (20). Such motions are out of order when another has the floor; must be seconded; are debatable except when privileged; are amendable; require a majority vote; and can be reconsidered. Motions to obtain a quorum are similar to a Call of the House, which can be ordered in assemblies having the power to compel attendance (see below).

40:9 The prohibition against transacting business in the absence of a quorum cannot be waived even by unanimous consent, and a notice (10:44–51) cannot be validly given. If there is important business that should not be delayed until the next regular meeting, the assembly should fix the time for an adjourned meeting and then adjourn. If, instead, the members present take action informally in the absence of a quorum, they do so at their own risk. Although the assembly can later ratify their action (10:54–57), it is under no obligation to do so.

40:10 If a committee of the whole finds itself without a quorum, it can do nothing but rise and report to the assembly, which can then proceed as described above. A quasi committee of the whole or a meeting in informal consideration of a question can itself take any of the actions permitted an assembly in the absence of a quorum, but a quasi committee of the whole is thereby ended (see 52).
Manner of Enforcing the Quorum Requirement

40:11 Before the presiding officer calls a meeting to order, it is his duty to determine, although he need not announce, that a quorum is present. If a quorum is not present, the chair waits until there is one, or until, after a reasonable time, there appears to be no prospect that a quorum will assemble. If a quorum cannot be obtained, the chair calls the meeting to order, announces the absence of a quorum, and entertains a motion to adjourn or one of the other motions allowed, as described above.

40:12 When the chair has called a meeting to order after finding that a quorum is present, the continued presence of a quorum is presumed unless the chair or a member notices that a quorum is no longer present. If the chair notices the absence of a quorum, it is his duty to declare the fact, at least before taking any vote or stating the question on any new motion—which he can no longer do except in connection with the permissible proceedings related to the absence of a quorum, as explained above. Any member noticing the apparent absence of a quorum can make a point of order to that effect at any time so long as he does not interrupt a person who is speaking. Debate on a question already pending can be allowed to continue at length after a quorum is no longer present, however, until a member raises the point. Because of the difficulty likely to be encountered in determining exactly how long the meeting has been without a quorum in such cases, a point of order relating to the absence of a quorum is generally not permitted to affect prior action; but upon clear and convincing proof, such a point of order can be given effect retrospectively by a ruling of the presiding officer, subject to appeal (24).
Call of the House

40:13 In legislative bodies or other assemblies that have legal power to compel the attendance of their members, a procedure that can be used to obtain a quorum, if necessary, is the motion for a Call of the House. This is a motion that unexcused absent members be brought to the meeting under arrest. A Call of the House is not applicable in voluntary societies.

40:14 Assemblies in which there may be occasion to order a Call of the House should adopt a rule governing this motion and providing that if one third, one fifth, or some other number less than a majority of the members or members-elect are present, they can order a Call of the House by a majority vote. When a quorum is not present, this motion should take precedence over everything except a motion to Adjourn (21). If the rule allows the call to be moved while a quorum is actually present (for the purpose of obtaining a greater attendance), the motion at such times should rank only with questions of privilege, should require a majority vote for adoption, and, if rejected, should not be allowed to be renewed while a quorum is present.

40:15 When a Call of the House is ordered, the clerk calls the roll of the members, then calls again the names of the absentees—in whose behalf explanations of absence can be made and excuses can be requested. After this, no member is permitted to leave, the doors are locked, and the sergeant-at-arms, chief of police, or other arresting officer is ordered to take into custody absentee who have not been excused from attendance and bring them before the house. He does this on a warrant signed by the presiding officer and attested by the clerk. When arrested members are brought in, they are arraigned separately, their explanations are heard, and, on motion, they can be excused with or without penalty in the form of payment of a fee. Until a member has paid such a fee assessed against him, he cannot vote or be recognized by the chair for any purpose.

40:16 After a Call of the House has been ordered, no motion is in order, even by unanimous consent, except motions relating to the call. Motions to adjourn or dispense with further proceedings under the call, however, can be entertained after a quorum is present, or after the arresting officer reports that in his opinion a quorum cannot be obtained. An adjournment terminates all proceedings under the Call of the House.
§41. ORDER OF BUSINESS; ORDERS OF THE DAY; AGENDA OR PROGRAM

41:1 The terms order of business, orders of the day, agenda, and program refer to closely related concepts having to do with the order in which business is taken up in a session (8) and the scheduling of particular business. The meaning of these terms often coincides, although each has its own applications in common usage.

41:2 An order of business is any established sequence in which it may be prescribed that business shall be taken up at a session of a given assembly. In the case of ordinary societies that hold frequent regular meetings, an order of business that specifies such a sequence only in terms of certain general types or classes of business and gives only the order in which they are to be taken up is normally prescribed for all regular meetings by the rules of the organization. The typical order of business of this kind is described in 41:5–27. In other cases, such as in a convention, an order of business expressly adopted for a particular session frequently assigns positions, and even times, to specific subjects or items of business; and to this type of order of business the terms agenda and program² are applicable, as explained in 41:58–70. Although the terms order of business, agenda, and program relate primarily to the business of an entire session, the same terms are also applied to a part of the whole, in speaking of “the order of business,” “the agenda,” or “the program” of a meeting within a session.

41:3 An order of the day is an item of business that is scheduled to be taken up during a given session, day, or meeting, or at a given hour (unless there is business having precedence over it that interferes). The methods by which orders of the day can be made, their division into the classes of general orders and special orders, and their treatment in cases where they come into conflict are explained in 41:40–57. General orders and special orders are also discussed with particular reference to making them by means of the motion to Postpone in 14:13–17 (see also Call for the Orders of the Day, 18). Unless designated for particular hours or assigned positions item by item in an agenda or program formally adopted for a given session, general orders and special orders are taken up under assigned headings or in customary positions allotted to each of these categories in the order of business. (Note such headings in the “standard” order of business described below.)

41:4 Within a meeting in which the only items of business that are in order have been specified and set in sequence in advance—as might occur, for example, in a particular meeting of a convention—the orders of the day are identical with the order of business (which, in such a case, is in the form of an agenda or program).
Usual Order of Business in Ordinary Societies

41:5 Basic Headings Covering Business Proper. The customary or “standard” order of business comprises the following subdivisions:

1) Reading and Approval of Minutes
2) Reports of Officers, Boards, and Standing Committees
3) Reports of Special (Select or Ad Hoc) Committees
4) Special Orders
5) Unfinished Business and General Orders
6) New Business

41:6 In organizations that have adopted this book as parliamentary authority and that have not adopted a special order of business, this series of headings is the prescribed order of business for regular meetings, unless the periods intervening between consecutive regular meetings are usually more than a quarterly time interval (see 9:7). This standard order of business prescribes only the sequence of the headings, not the time to be allotted to each—which may vary with every meeting. Certain optional headings are also described following the detailed discussion of the regular headings below.

41:7 The presiding officer may find it helpful to have at hand a memorandum of the complete order of business, listing, under headings (2) and (3) as explained below, all known reports which are expected to be presented, and under headings (4) and (5), all matters which the minutes show are due to come up, arranged in proper sequence or, where applicable, listed with the times for which they have been set. The secretary can prepare, or assist the presiding officer to prepare, such a memorandum. In this connection, regarding the practice in some societies or assemblies of providing each member with a copy of the expected agenda in advance of a meeting, see 41:62.

41:8 After the presiding officer has called the meeting to order as described in 3:15, and after any customary opening ceremonies (see Optional Headings, 41:28–31 and 41:36), the meeting proceeds through the different headings in the order of business:

41:9 1. Reading and Approval of Minutes. The chair says, “The Secretary will read the minutes.” However, in organizations where copies of the minutes of each previous meeting as prepared by the secretary are sent to all members in advance, the chair announces that this has been done, and the actual reading of them aloud is omitted unless any member then requests that they be read. (For “dispensing” with the reading of the minutes—that is, not reading them for approval at the regular time—see 48:11.) If for any reason there are minutes of other meetings in addition to the last meeting that have not been read previously, they are each read and approved first, in order of date from earliest to latest. In all but the smallest meetings, the secretary stands while reading the minutes.

41:10 A formal motion to approve the minutes is not necessary, although such a motion is not out of order. After the minutes have been read (or after their reading has been omitted by unanimous consent as described in the previous paragraph), and whether or not a motion for approval has been offered, the chair asks, “Are there any corrections to the minutes?” and pauses. Corrections, when proposed, are usually handled by unanimous consent (4:58–63), but if any member objects to a proposed correction—which is, in effect, a subsidiary motion to Amend—the usual rules governing consideration of amendments to a main motion are applicable (see 12).
41:11 After any proposed corrections have been disposed of, and when there is no response to the chair’s inquiry, “Are there any corrections [or “further corrections”] to the minutes?” the chair says, “There being no corrections [or “no further corrections”] to the minutes, the minutes stand [or “are’] approved [or “approved as read,” or “approved as corrected”].” The minutes are thus approved without any formal vote, even if a motion for their approval has been made. The only proper way to object to the approval of the secretary’s draft of the minutes is to offer a correction to it. It should be noted that a member’s absence from the meeting for which minutes are being approved does not prevent the member from participating in their correction or approval.

41:12 The secretary’s draft of the minutes is often sent to all members in advance of the meeting at which those minutes are to be approved, usually with the meeting notice. When this has been done, it is presumed that the members have had an opportunity to review these draft minutes, and they are not read at the meeting unless a member requests it. Correction and approval, however, is handled in the usual way. A draft of the minutes circulated to members must be clearly marked as such. The secretary’s draft of the minutes, whether or not circulated before their approval, does not become the minutes—that is, the official record of the proceedings of the society—unless it is approved, and the minutes may be materially modified in the correction process. Only the secretary’s corrected version of the minutes is official in such a case.

41:13 2. Reports of Officers, Boards, and Standing Committees. In most societies it is customary to hear reports from all officers (47, 48), boards (49), and standing committees (50) only at annual meetings. At other meetings the chair calls only on those who have reports to make, as by saying (in calling upon the secretary), “Is there any correspondence?” Or, “May we have the Treasurer’s report.” Or, “The chair recognizes Mr. Downey, Chairman of the Membership Committee, for a report.” If the chair is uncertain, he may ask, for example, “Does the Program Committee have a report?” Standing committees listed in the bylaws are called upon in the order in which they are listed.

41:14 If an officer, in reporting, makes a recommendation, he should not himself move its implementation, but such a motion can be made by another member as soon as the officer has concluded his report. In the case of a committee report, on the other hand, the chairman or other reporting member should make any motion(s) necessary to bring the committee’s recommendations before the assembly for consideration. A motion arising out of an officer’s, a board’s, or a committee’s report is taken up immediately, since the object of the order of business is to give priority to the classes of business in the order listed.

41:15 If an item of business in this class is on the table (that is, if it was laid on the table at the present session, or at the preceding session if no more than a quarterly time interval has intervened (see 9:7), and if the item has not been taken from the table), it is in order to move to take such business from the table under this heading (see 17, 34).

41:16 (For procedures to be followed in making reports and in handling recommendations arising from reports, see 51.)

41:17 3. Reports of Special Committees. The special committees (50) that are to report are called on in the order in which they were appointed. Only those special committees that are prepared, or were instructed, to report on matters referred to them should be called on. Business incident to reports of special committees that is on the table can be taken from the 41:18 4. Special Orders. Under this heading (referring to the explanation of Orders of the Day in 41:40ff.) are taken up the following in the order listed:

a) Any unfinished special orders (that is, special orders that were not disposed of at the preceding meeting)—taken in sequence beginning with the special order that was pending when that meeting adjourned if it adjourned while one was pending, and continuing with the remaining unfinished special orders in the order in which they were made (that is, were set by action of the assembly).

b) Items of business that have been made special orders for the present meeting without being set for specific hours—taken in the order in which they were made.

Regarding the interruption of business under this heading by special orders that have been set for particular hours, see 41:53–56.

41:19 Normally—unless an order of the day was made as a part of an agenda for a session—no motion is necessary at the time the order comes up, since the introduction of the question has been accomplished previously, as will be seen from the description of the methods by which orders of the day are made, in 41:42. When a special order that was so introduced comes up, the chair announces it as pending, thus: “At the last meeting, the resolution relating to funds for a new playground was made a special order for this meeting [or, if the special order was made by postponement, “... was postponed to this meeting and made a special order.”]. The resolution is as follows: 'Resolved, That... [reading it].' The question is on the adoption of the resolution.”

41:20 Matters that the bylaws require to be considered at a particular meeting, such as the nomination and election of officers, may be regarded as special orders for the meeting and be considered under the heading of Special Orders in the order of business. If a special order is on the table, it is in order to move to take it from the table under this heading when no question is pending (17, 34).

41:21 5. Unfinished Business and General Orders. The term unfinished business,⁵ in cases where the regular business meetings of an organization are not separated by more than a quarterly time interval (9:7), refers to questions that have come over from the previous meeting (other than special orders) as a result of that meeting’s having adjourned without completing its order of business (21:7(b)) and without scheduling an adjourned meeting (9, 22) to complete it.

41:22  A general order (as explained under Orders of the Day, below) is any question which, usually by postponement, has been made an order of the day without being made a special order.

41:23  The heading of Unfinished Business and General Orders includes items of business in the four categories that are listed below in the order in which they are taken up. Of these, the first three constitute “Unfinished Business,” while the fourth consists of “General Orders”:

a) The question that was pending when the previous meeting adjourned, if that meeting adjourned while a question other than a special order was pending.

b) Any questions that were unfinished business at the previous meeting but were not reached before it adjourned—taken in the order in which they were due to come up at that meeting as indicated under (a) and (c).

c) Any questions which, by postponement or otherwise, were set as general orders for the previous meeting, or for a particular hour during that meeting, but were not reached before it adjourned—taken in the order in which the general orders were made.

d) Matters that were postponed to, or otherwise made general orders for, the present meeting—taken in the order in which they were made.

Regarding the relationship between this heading in the order of business and general orders for particular hours, see 41:49–52.

41:24 The chair should not announce the heading of Unfinished Business and General Orders unless the minutes show that there is some business to come up under it. In the latter case, he should have all such subjects listed in correct sequence in a memorandum prepared in advance of the meeting. He should not ask, “Is there any unfinished business?” but should state the question on the first item of business that is due to come up under this heading; and when it has been disposed of, he should proceed through the remaining subjects in their proper order. If a question was pending when the previous meeting adjourned, for example, the chair might begin this heading by saying, “Under Unfinished Business and General Orders, the first item of business is the motion relating to use of the parking facilities, which was pending when the last meeting adjourned. The question is on the adoption of the motion ‘That… [stating the motion].’” Later under the same heading, in announcing a general order that was made by postponing a question, the chair might say, “The next item of business is the resolution relating to proposed improvement of our newly purchased picnic grounds, which was postponed to this meeting. The resolution is as follows: ‘Resolved, That… [reading the resolution].’ The question is on the adoption of the resolution.”
Any item of business (in whatever class) that is on the table can be taken from the table under this heading at any time when no question is pending (17, 34). To obtain the floor for the purpose of moving to take a question from the table at such a time, a member can rise and address the chair, interrupting him as he starts to announce the next item of business after the previous one is disposed of.

It should be noted that, with the exception indicated in the preceding paragraph, a subject may not be taken up under Unfinished Business and General Orders unless it has acquired such status by one of the formal processes (a), (c), or (d) listed in 41:23. If brief consultation during a meeting leads to an informal understanding that a certain subject should be “brought up at the next meeting,” that does not make it unfinished business. Instead, the matter would have to be introduced at the next meeting as new business, as explained below.

6. New Business. After unfinished business and general orders have been disposed of, the chair asks, “Is there any new business?” Members can then introduce new items of business, or can move to take from the table any matter that is on the table (17, 34), in the order in which they are able to obtain the floor when no question is pending, as explained in 3 and 4. So long as members are reasonably prompt in claiming the floor, the chair cannot prevent the making of legitimate motions or deprive members of the right to introduce legitimate business, by hurrying through the proceedings.

Optional Headings. In addition to the standard order of business as just described, regular meetings of organizations sometimes include proceedings in the categories listed below, which may be regarded as optional in the order of business prescribed by this book.
After the call to order and before the reading of the minutes, the next two headings may be included:

Opening Ceremonies or Exercises. Opening ceremonies immediately after the meeting is called to order may include the invocation (which, if offered, should always be placed first), the singing of the national anthem, the reciting of the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag, a ritual briefly recalling the objects or ideals of the organization, or the like.

Roll Call. In some organizations it is customary at meetings to call the roll of officers in order to verify their attendance—or, sometimes in very small societies, even to call the roll of members. If there is a roll call of this nature, it should take place at the end of the opening ceremonies unless a special rule of the organization assigns it a different position in the order of business. The chair announces it by saying, “The Secretary will call the roll of officers [or “will call the roll”].”

Consent Calendar. Legislatures, city, town, or county councils, or other assemblies which have a heavy work load including a large number of routine or noncontroversial matters may find a consent calendar a useful tool for disposing of such items of business. Commonly, when such a matter has been introduced or reported by a committee for consideration in the assembly, its sponsor, or, sometimes, an administrator, may seek to have it placed on the consent calendar. This calendar is called over periodically at a point established in the agenda by special rule of order, at least preceding standing committee reports. The matters listed on it are taken up in order, unless objected to, in which case they are restored to the ordinary process by which they are placed in line for consideration on the regular agenda. The special rule of order establishing a consent calendar may provide that, when the matters on the calendar are called up, they may be considered in gross or without debate or amendment. Otherwise, they are considered under the rules just as any other business, in which case the “consent” relates only to permitting the matter to be on the calendar for consideration without conforming to the usual, more onerous, rules for reaching measures in the body.

41:33 After the completion of new business—that is, when no one claims the floor to make a motion in response to the chair’s query, “Is there any further new business?”—the chair may proceed to one or more of the following headings, in an order that may be subject to variation determined by the practice of the organization.

41:34 Good of the Order, General Good and Welfare, or Open Forum. This heading, included by some types of societies in their order of business, refers to the general welfare of the organization, and may vary in character. Under this heading (in contrast to the general parliamentary rule that allows discussion only with reference to a pending motion), members who obtain the floor commonly are permitted to offer informal observations regarding the work of the organization, the public reputation of the society or its membership, or the like. Certain types of announcements may tend to fall here. Although the Good of the Order often involves no business or motions, the practice of some organizations would place motions or resolutions relating to formal disciplinary procedures for offenses outside a meeting (63) at this point. In some organizations, the program (see below) is looked upon as a part of the Good of the Order.

41:35 Announcements. The chair may make, or call upon other officers or members to make, any necessary announcements; or, if the practice of the organization permits it, members can briefly obtain the floor for such a purpose. The placing of general announcements at this point in the order of business does not prevent the chair from making an urgent announcement at any time.

41:36 Program. If there is to be a talk, film, or other program of a cultural, educational, or civic nature, it is usually presented before the meeting is adjourned, since it may prompt a desire on the part of the assembly to take action. Although the program is commonly placed at the end of the order of business in such cases, it can, by special rule or practice, be received before the minutes are read; or, by suspending the rules \(^{25}\), it can be proceeded to at any time during the meeting. If, in courtesy to a guest speaker who is present, the chair wishes the talk to be located at an unscheduled point within the business portion of the meeting, he can usually obtain unanimous consent for a suspension of the rules by simply announcing, “If there is no objection, we will hear our speaker’s address at this time.”
Taking Up Business out of Its Proper Order

41:37 Any particular item of business can be taken up out of its proper order by adopting a motion to Suspend the Rules (25) by a two-thirds vote, although this is usually arranged by unanimous consent (4:58–63). Hence, an important committee report or an urgent item of new business can be advanced in order to assure its full and unhurried consideration. If desired, before the completion of the advanced question the regular order of business can be returned to by a majority vote—by adopting a motion to lay the pending question on the table (17).

41:38 To take up a motion out of its proper order—for example, to introduce an item of new business before that heading is reached—a member who has obtained the floor can say, “I ask unanimous consent to introduce at this time a resolution on financing better schools.” If there is any objection, or the member anticipates that there may be, he can say, “I move to suspend the rules that interfere with the introduction at this time of…” If unanimous consent is given or if this motion is adopted by a two-thirds vote, the member is immediately recognized to introduce the resolution. If only one or two items stand ahead of the item it is desired to reach, it may be just as simple to lay the intervening items on the table individually (17), or to postpone them as they arise (14). It is not in order to lay on the table or postpone a class of questions, like committee reports, or anything but the question that is actually before the assembly. (See 14:10–11, 17:3(2), 17:14.)

41:39 The chair himself cannot depart from the prescribed order of business, which only the assembly can do by at least a two-thirds vote. This is an important protection in cases where some of the members principally involved in a particular question may be unable to be present through an entire meeting. When such a departure from the order of business is justified, however, it is usually easy for the chair to obtain the necessary authorization from the assembly. He can say, for example, “The chair will entertain a motion to suspend the rules, and take up…”; or (for obtaining unanimous consent), “If there is no objection, the chair proposes at this time to proceed to take up…” (see also illustration under the heading Program above).
Orders of the Day

41:40  An order of the day, as stated above, is a particular subject, question, or item of business that is set in advance to be taken up during a given session, day, or meeting, or at a given hour, provided that no business having precedence over it interferes. In cases where more than a quarterly time interval (9:7) will elapse before the next regular business session of the organization, an order of the day cannot be made for a time beyond the end of the present session. If the next regular business session will be held within a quarterly time interval, an order of the day cannot be made beyond the end of that next session. An order of the day cannot be taken up before the time for which it is set, except by reconsidering (37) the vote that established the order (so long as a reconsideration is possible), or by suspending the rules (25) by a two-thirds vote.

41:41  Orders of the day are divided into the classes of general orders and special orders. A special order is an order of the day that is made with the stipulation that any rules interfering with its consideration at the specified time shall be suspended except those relating: (a) to adjournment or recess (8, 20, 21); (b) to questions of privilege (19); (c) to special orders that were made before this special order was made; or (d) to a question that has been assigned priority over all other business at a meeting by being made the special order for the meeting as described in 41:57. An important consequence of this suspending effect is that, with the four exceptions just mentioned, a special order for a particular hour interrupts any business that is pending when that hour arrives. Since the making of a special order has the effect of suspending any interfering rules, it requires a two-thirds vote (except where such action is included in the adoption of an agenda or program for a session having no prescribed order of business). Any matter that is made an order of the day without being made a special order is a general order for the time named.

41:42 An item of business can be made an order of the day in the following ways:

1) While the question is pending, it can be postponed (14) to the specified time by a majority vote (in which case it is a general order); or, by a two-thirds vote, it can be postponed to that time and made a special order.

2) A question that has not yet been brought before the assembly can be made a special order for a future time by means of a main motion adopted by a two-thirds vote. Similarly, it is possible, although less common, to make a question that is not pending a general order for a future time by a majority vote.

3) An agenda or program assigning a specific position or hour to the item of business can be adopted. The subject is then a general order or a special order, depending on the form of the agenda or program (see 41:58). For the vote required to adopt an agenda, see Procedure for Adoption, 41:61.

41:43 Forms for Motions to Make General or Special Orders. The forms in proposing to make a pending question an order of the day for a future time by means of the motion to Postpone are given in 14:20.

41:44 When a question that is not pending is made an order of the day, it is usually made a special order. A main motion to make a particular subject a special order can be introduced whenever business of its class or new business is in order and nothing is pending. It can be offered in this form: “I move that the following resolution be made a special order for the next meeting: ‘Resolved, That…’”; or, “I offer the following resolution and move that it be made a special order for 3 P.M.: ‘…’” In the case of a committee report, a resolution such as this may be adopted: “Resolved, That the report of the committee on the revision of the bylaws be made the special order for Wednesday morning and thereafter until it has been disposed of.”

Motions in similar forms can also be used to make a question that is not pending a general order. In this connection, however, it should be noted that a majority can thus prevent a matter from coming before the assembly until a future time, but after a majority has taken such action, nothing less than a two-thirds vote can change it unless it is reconsidered (37). If a main motion to make a question that is not pending an order of the day for a future time is introduced, any member who would prefer to consider the matter immediately should speak in debate against the motion that would make it an order of the day. If that motion is voted down, he can then introduce the subject of the proposed order as a main question.

Relation of Orders of the Day to the Established Order of Business. In assemblies that follow the “standard” order of business explained above, orders of the day for a given session, day, or meeting that are not set for particular hours are taken up under the headings of Special Orders and Unfinished Business and General Orders (see 41:18–26). In cases where an ordinary society has adopted its own order of business for regular meetings, it usually includes similar headings covering such orders of the day. Where an organization’s order of business does not provide such headings, special orders not set for particular hours are taken up before unfinished business and general orders, or (if there are neither of these), at all events before new business. Under the same conditions, general orders are taken up after any unfinished business (that is, business pending at the adjournment of the previous meeting, if any, and orders of the day not disposed of at the time of its adjournment), and before new business unless a later hour is specified (see below).

41:47 The most common instances of orders of the day set for particular hours occur in conventions.

41:48 In any type of assembly, in cases where orders of the day have been set for particular hours, their consideration at the proper time may cause interruption or modification of the order of business as it exists apart from these orders of the day; and different orders of the day may come into conflict. Rules governing such cases are as follows:

41:49 Rules of precedence affecting general orders for particular hours. As stated above, a general order that has been set for a particular hour cannot be considered before that hour unless the rules are suspended by a two-thirds vote, or unless the vote that made the general order can still be reconsidered. This is the principal effect of making a subject a general order for a particular hour. Since the making of a general order does not suspend any rules, even if it is designated for a particular hour, delay in its consideration when that hour arrives may arise from a number of causes. Even though the hour fixed for a general order has arrived, the order can be taken up only when all of the following additional conditions are fulfilled:

a) no other business is pending;

b) no special order interferes;

c) no motion to Reconsider (37) that may then be moved or called up interferes;

d) the category of General Orders in the prescribed order of business has been reached or passed; and
e) all general orders that were made before this order was made, except any that were set for a time that has not yet arrived, have been disposed of.

As soon after the designated hour as conditions (a), (b), (d), and (e) are met, the chair announces the general order as the pending business; but as he starts to do so, any member can rise and address the chair for the purpose of moving or calling up a reconsideration.

41:50 The rule that a general order for a particular hour does not interrupt a pending question when that hour arrives holds even when the pending question is a general order that was made later. But if a general order for an earlier time is not reached by the time set for another general order that was made before it was, the general order that was made first is taken up in preference to the one for the earlier time.

41:51 Example. A motion is postponed to 4:30 P.M. Later, another motion is postponed to 4:15 P.M. If the 4:15 motion is taken up at that time (or at least before 4:30) and is not disposed of by 4:30, it continues under consideration and is not interrupted. But if the 4:15 motion is not reached by 4:30, the 4:30 motion, having been postponed first, has preference and will be taken up first. Unless something else affects the situation, the 4:15 motion in such a case will be considered after the disposal of the 4:30 motion.

41:52 If several general orders were made for the same time, they are taken up in the order in which they were made. If several general orders were made for the same time in the same motion, they are taken up in the order in which they are listed in the motion. If all of this business is not disposed of before adjournment, it is treated as described in 21:7 and 41:23.
41:53 Rules of precedence affecting special orders for particular hours. A special order for a particular hour cannot be considered before that hour except by a two-thirds vote. But when the designated hour arrives, the special order automatically interrupts any business that may be pending except: (a) a motion relating to adjournment or recess; (b) a question of privilege; (c) a special order that was made before the special order set for the present hour was made; or (d) the special order for a meeting, as described below. The chair simply announces the special order at the proper time, as shown in 14:22.

41:54 With the exception of the special order for a meeting, when special orders that have been made at different times come into conflict, the one that was made first takes precedence over all special orders made afterward, which rank in the order in which they were made. This rule holds even when special orders made later have been set for consideration at earlier hours. No special order can interfere with one that was made earlier than itself. If several special orders have been made at the same time for the same hour, they rank in the order in which they are listed in the motion by which they were made. If they were made at the same time for different hours, it is implied that the vote on each one will be taken when the hour for the next one arrives, and the same rules apply as those for taking up topics in an agenda (see 41:65).

41:55 Example. Assume that a special order has been made for 3 P.M. Thereafter, one is made for 2 P.M. Still later, one is made for 4 P.M. At two o’clock, the special order for that time is taken up, even if it interrupts a general order that is pending. However, if the 2 P.M. special order is still pending at 3 P.M., the 3 P.M. special order is immediately taken up—interrupting the one that is pending—because it was made first. Also, because the 3 P.M. order was made first, if it is still under consideration at four o’clock, it continues regardless of the order for that time. Even after the 3 P.M. order is disposed of, the 4 P.M. order must await completion of the prior-made 2 P.M. order, which is resumed first. Not until all of these special orders are disposed of, together with any others whose times are reached in the meantime, can the assembly return to its regular order of business, first resuming consideration of any subject that may have been interrupted at 2 P.M. It is possible, of course, to rearrange these special orders by reconsidering the votes that made them, or, if reconsideration is no longer possible (37), by suspending the rules and taking up each one of them in succession, only to postpone it and make it a special order for the desired new time.

41:56 It should be noted that a special order does not interfere with a recess or adjournment that is scheduled for a particular hour. When such an hour arrives, the chair announces it and declares the assembly in recess or adjourned, even if a special order is pending that was made before the hour of recess or adjournment was fixed. When the chair announces the hour, anyone can move to postpone the time for adjournment, or to extend the time of considering the pending question for a specified period. These motions are undebatable and require a two-thirds vote (see also 20:6–7, 21:14).

41:57 The special order for a meeting. When it is desired to devote an entire meeting to a subject, or as much of the meeting as may be necessary, the matter can be made the special order for the meeting (as distinguished from a special order for the meeting; see 41:18–20). The special order for the meeting will then be taken up as soon as the minutes have been approved, and the remainder of the order of business will not be taken up until this special order has been disposed of. Although the special order for a meeting takes precedence over all other forms of special orders, even if they were made before it was, the times of any such orders for particular hours that may come into conflict should be adjusted, as indicated in the last sentence of 41:55.
Agenda or Program

41:58 By a single vote, a series of special orders or general orders—or a mixture of both—can be made; such a series is called an agenda. When an hour is assigned to a particular subject in an agenda, that subject is thereby made a special order unless, by footnote or other means, it is stated that the time is intended merely for guidance, in which case the subject is only a general order. Subjects for which no hour is specified in an agenda are general orders.

41:59 In an agenda, often an hour is assigned only to such subjects as the calls to order, recesses, adjournments, and particularly important items of business where it is desired to give the members greater assurance that the matter will not be considered before that time. These, then, are special orders for the time stated, and a strict adherence to these times provides a protection to the members and invited speakers, who often come from great distances. Occasionally, a time is assigned for every item on the agenda. While this practice may be necessary in some cases, the resulting loss of flexibility often outweighs any benefits that may be gained.

41:60 Organizations and Meetings in Which Adoption of an Agenda Is Customary. It is customary to adopt an agenda or program for each session in organizations that do not hold frequent regular meetings, and at conventions and other sessions that may last for several days (see 59). This is also frequently done when, for any reason, neither the standard order of business nor a special order of business established by rule of the organization is practical or applicable.

41:61 Procedure for Adoption. In cases in which an agenda is adopted, usually this is done at the outset of a session and the agenda is intended to cover the entire session. At a session having no prescribed or adopted order of business, such an agenda is followed as a guide by the chair pending its formal adoption and can be adopted by majority vote, even if it contains special orders; it is then the order of business for that session. At a session that already has an order of business, an agenda can be adopted by a majority vote only if it does not create any special orders and does not conflict with the existing order of business; otherwise, a two-thirds vote is required (see also 25:12).

41:62 Agenda Provided in Advance. In some organizations, it is customary to send each member, in advance of a meeting, an order of business or agenda, with some indication of the matters to be considered under each heading. Such an agenda is often provided for information only, with no intention or practice of submitting it for adoption. Unless a precirculated agenda is formally adopted at the session to which it applies, it is not binding as to detail or order of consideration, other than as it lists preexisting orders of the day (41:40ff.) or conforms to the standard order of business (3:16, 41:5ff.) or an order of business prescribed by the rules of the organization (2:16, 3:16).

41:63 Changing an Agenda. When the adoption of a proposed agenda is pending, it is subject to amendment by majority vote. After an agenda has been adopted by the assembly, no change can be made in it except by a two-thirds vote, a vote of a majority of the entire membership, or unanimous consent. (See also Taking Up Business out of Its Proper Order, 41:37–39; cf. 59:59.) An affirmative vote to adopt an agenda may not be reconsidered.

41:64 Agenda in the Form of a Program. In reference to an order of business specially adopted for a given session, the term program is often used instead of agenda; but while the latter technically includes only items of business, the former may include also the times for speakers, meals, and other nonbusiness matters.

41:65 Taking Up Topics in an Agenda. When the assigned time for taking up a topic in an agenda arrives, the chair announces that fact. Then he puts to a vote any pending questions without allowing further debate, unless someone immediately moves to lay the question on the table, postpone it, or refer it to a committee. If any of these subsidiary motions are moved, they are likewise put to a vote, together with any amendment to them, without debate. Besides these subsidiary motions, a motion to extend the time for considering the pending question is in order. While an extension under these conditions is seldom desirable and is often unfair to the next topic, it is sometimes necessary, and a motion for the extension can be adopted without debate by a two-thirds vote (see also 18). As soon as the business that was pending has been disposed of as described, the chair recognizes the member who is to offer the motion or resolution embodying the scheduled topic (unless the question has previously been introduced and has come over from an earlier time, in which case the chair announces it as the pending business).

41:66 Declaring a Scheduled Recess or Adjournment. When a recess or adjournment has been scheduled for a particular hour (either by provision in the adopted agenda or program or by adoption of a motion setting the time) and that hour arrives, the chair announces it and, unless a member promptly seeks the floor for one of the purposes described below, declares the assembly in recess or adjourned. (However, if the Previous Question has already been ordered on one or more pending motions when the hour for a recess or adjournment arrives, there usually will be no objection to the chair’s putting them all to a vote in succession before declaring the assembly to be in recess or adjourned.)

41:67 When the chair announces the hour, any member can move to reschedule the time for recess or adjournment, or to extend the time of considering the pending question for a specified period. These motions are undebatable and require a two-thirds vote; see also 18:8, 20:6–7, and 21:14. Before declaring the meeting adjourned, the chair must allow, in addition to the motions just described, any of the parliamentary steps that would be in order when a privileged motion to _Adjourn_ is pending or has just been voted for (see 21:10–12).

41:68 In the case of a recess, any pending business is interrupted for the recess, and taken up again after the recess. In the case of an adjournment, see _Carrying Over Unfinished Business_ below.

41:69 Advisability of Providing for Unfinished Business. At intervals or near the end of the session, an agenda should include provision for unfinished business. In agendas in which most or all of the items are special orders for particular times, it may be necessary to provide for unfinished business near the end of each day’s sitting. Such provisions give the assembly a recourse whenever it needs a little more time before voting on a question. It can postpone a question to a time provided for unfinished business or, at all events, can conclude consideration of a question during such a period. Otherwise, a pending question that is merely postponed until the disposal of the next item—since it becomes only a general order—may be severely buffeted by the remaining special orders. Its further consideration would depend upon the next or some successive items taking less time than allotted, and it might soon be interrupted again by the next subject for which a time was assigned.

41:70 Carrying Over Unfinished Business. In sessions consisting of several meetings, if the time set for adjournment of a meeting arrives before all of the matters scheduled for that meeting have been considered, the remaining items of business are carried over to the next meeting. If the unfinished items of business are taken first in their order before the matters scheduled for the later meeting, provided that the agenda makes no special provision for unfinished business that day and no conflict arises with a special order. Therefore, when most items in the agenda are general orders, it is wise to schedule the more important items of business at a reasonably early meeting of a convention or to set them as special orders. (See also 59:55(10).)
Footnotes to Chapter XI

1. What happens to a question that is pending when a meeting adjourns (because of the loss of a quorum or for any other reason) is determined by the rules given in 21:7. If such a question, however, was introduced as new business and it is proven that there was already no quorum when it was introduced, its introduction was invalid and, to be considered at a later meeting, it must again be brought up as new business.

2. The term program has two senses in parliamentary usage. In the first sense, as used here, it refers to a type of order of business that may be identical with an agenda, or (in a convention) may include an agenda together with the times for events outside of the business meetings; such events are not themselves orders of the day (see also 59). In the second sense, as used in 41:36, the term refers to a heading, often included within the order of business for meetings of ordinary societies, that covers talks, lectures, films, or other features of informational or entertainment value.

3. However, a member who believes that further investigation or redrafting is necessary in order to produce a correct version of the minutes may offer a motion to refer the minutes to a committee or to postpone their approval to a certain time.

4. But not the special order (see 41:57).

5. The expression “old business” should be avoided, since it may incorrectly suggest the further consideration of matters that have been finally disposed of.

6. If it is desired to take up a general order at its specified hour and a pending question interferes, that pending question can, however, be laid on the table (17) or postponed (14).

7. For the treatment of business unfinished at the end of a session, see 21:7(b–c).
ASSIGNMENT OF THE FLOOR; DEBATE

§42. RULES GOVERNING ASSIGNMENT OF THE FLOOR

42:1 The manner in which a member obtains the floor is described in 3:30–35, with an initial treatment of the principal rules governing the assignment of the floor under ordinary conditions in most business meetings. More complete rules affecting the assignment of the floor are contained in this section.
Recognition of a Member

42:2 Before a member in an assembly can make a motion or speak in debate, he must claim the floor by rising and addressing the chair as described in 3:31, and must be recognized by the chair. The chair must recognize any member who seeks the floor while entitled to it. The chair normally recognizes a member (thereby assigning the floor to him) by announcing, as applicable, the member’s name or title, or the place or unit that he represents. If necessary, the member—either on his own initiative or at the request of the chair—should state his name, with any appropriate additional identification, as soon as the presiding officer turns toward him after he has risen and addressed the chair. Variations in the granting of recognition are as follows:

- If only one person is seeking the floor in a small meeting where all present can clearly see one another, the chair may recognize the member by merely nodding to him.
- If a speech is prearranged, or if several members are attempting to claim the floor at once in a large meeting, a wording frequently used by the chair in granting recognition is, “The chair recognizes Mr. Smith.”

42:3 Whenever a member rises and addresses the chair at a time when the floor can be granted only for limited purposes and the chair is not certain that the member understands this fact—for example, when an undebatable question is immediately pending as explained in 42:12—the chair, before recognizing the member, asks, “For what purpose does the member [or “the gentleman,” or “the lady,” or, as in Congress, “the gentlewoman”] rise?” If members remain seated around a conference table and do not rise, the chair may ask, “For what purpose does the member address the chair?”
42:4 Except by unanimous consent (4:58–63), a motion can be made only by one who has been recognized by the chair as having the floor. If a motion is called out by anyone who has not obtained the floor, the chair must not treat it as having been properly moved if another member, by rising promptly and claiming the floor, shows that unanimous consent has not been given.

42:5 When assigned the floor, a member may use it for any proper purpose, or a combination of purposes; for example, although a member may have begun by debating a pending motion, he may conclude by moving any secondary motion, including the Previous Question (16), that is in order at the time.
Assignment of the Floor When More Than One Person Claims It

42:6 If two or more rise at about the same time to claim the floor, the general rule is that, all other things being equal, the member who rose and addressed the chair first after the floor was yielded is entitled to be recognized. A member who rises before the floor has been yielded is not entitled to the floor if any other member rises afterward and addresses the chair.²

42:7 Under a variety of particular conditions, however, when more than one member claims the floor at about the same time, the best interests of the assembly require the floor to be assigned to a claimant who was not the first to rise and address the chair. Such a claimant to the floor in these cases is said to be entitled to “preference in being recognized” or “preference in recognition.” A member cannot rise to claim preference in recognition after the chair has actually recognized another member. However, there are a number of purposes for which a member who has been assigned the floor may be interrupted (see 42:18–19). A member who sought the floor for such a purpose before the floor has been assigned is likewise entitled to preference in recognition. Thus, if there may be no other opportunity, a member is entitled to preference in recognition to give notice of intent to introduce a motion requiring such notice (10:47–50), or to make a motion to Reconsider (37) or to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes (37:46–52), even when another motion is pending or a series of motions connected with taking up a single item of business is being disposed of (cf. 42:13(2–3)).

42:8 When the chair has just reported a vote, a member is entitled to preference in recognition to make an appropriate motion that the vote be taken again by another method (30).
Other rules governing preference in recognition may be grouped as relating to cases when a debatable question is immediately pending, when an undebatable question is immediately pending, and when no question is pending.

42:9 Preference in Recognition When a Debatable Question Is Immediately Pending. While a motion is open to debate:

1) If the member who made the motion that is immediately pending claims the floor and has not already spoken on the question, he is entitled to be recognized in preference to other members. Under some particular cases or variations of this rule, the members entitled to preference in recognition are:
   a) in the case of a motion to implement a recommendation in a committee’s report, the reporting member (who presented the committee’s report to the assembly);
   b) in the case of a question that has been taken from the table (34), the member who moved to take it from the table; and
   c) in the case of a motion to Reconsider (37), the member who made the motion to Reconsider, not necessarily the one who may have called it up (see 37:10(c), 37:15–16).

2) No member who has already had the floor in debate on the immediately pending question is entitled to it again on the same day for debate on the same question so long as any member who has not spoken on that question claims the floor.

3) In cases where the chair knows that persons seeking the floor have opposite opinions on the question—and the member to be recognized is not determined by (1) or (2) above—the chair lets the floor alternate, as far as possible, between those favoring and those opposing the measure. In large assemblies, various devices are sometimes used to assist the chair in following this rule, such as having members seeking recognition hold up cards of different colors, go to different microphones “for” and “against,” or the like.

42:10 In the case of an Appeal (or a Point of Order that the chair has submitted to a vote) that is debatable, the chair is entitled to speak once in preference to any member seeking the floor and a second time at the close of the debate (see 23:19, 24:3(5)).

42:11 When a member has moved to reconsider the vote on a motion for the announced purpose of amending the motion, if the vote is reconsidered he must be recognized in preference to others in order to move his amendment. This rule also applies to reconsiderations of amendable motions that are not debatable (see list on page t47), as noted below.

42:12 Preference in Recognition When an Undebatable Question Is Immediately Pending. When the immediately pending question is undebatable (pages t46–t47), the member who moved it has no preference to the floor. When an undebatable motion that can be amended is reconsidered for that announced purpose, however, the maker of the motion to Reconsider (37) is entitled to preference in recognition, as explained in the preceding paragraph.

42:13 Preference in Recognition When No Question Is Pending. Cases where a member is entitled to preference in recognition when no question is pending occur as follows:

1) When a member has been assigned to offer a motion which a special meeting was called to consider, or an important prearranged main motion at any meeting, that member is entitled to prior recognition and no other members are permitted to intervene in an effort to offer another motion in competition.

2) When a desired object requires a series of motions, each of which is moved while no question is pending, and when the assembly has disposed of one motion in such a series, the next motion in the series has the right of way; and, for the purpose of making that motion, the chair recognizes the member who is presenting the series, even if another member has risen and addressed the chair first. For example:

a) When a question has been laid on the table (17) for a legitimate purpose—to enable the assembly to take up a more urgent matter—the member who moved to lay on the table is entitled to preference in recognition to introduce the urgent business.

b) When the rules have been suspended (25) to enable a certain motion to be made, the member who moved to suspend the rules is entitled to the floor to make the motion involved.

3) Similarly, when a motion has been voted down at the urging of a member who stated in debate that in such event he would offer a different motion on the same subject (see 10:30(5)), that member is entitled to preference in recognition so that he may introduce his alternative motion.

4) When no question is pending and no series of motions has been started, and a member has risen seeking the floor to make a main motion, another member is entitled to preference in recognition if he addresses the chair and states that he rises for one of the following purposes:

a) to make a motion to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes (37:46–52);

b) to move to reconsider a vote (37);

c) to call up a motion to Reconsider (in its regular or special form (37)) that has been made earlier;
d) to give previous notice (10:44–50);
e) to move to take a question from the table (34) when it is in order to do so; or
f) to make a motion for which previous notice has been given.

If members come into competition in rising for these purposes, they have preference in the order in which the six actions are listed above. Time limits on making the motion to Reconsider—and shorter limits on its special form, to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes—account for first preference of these two motions in such cases.

42:14 Assignment of the Floor by Vote; Appeals. If the chair is in doubt as to who is entitled to the floor, he can allow the assembly to decide the question by a vote, in which case the member receiving the largest vote is entitled to the floor.

42:15 If at any time the chair makes a mistake and assigns the floor to the wrong person when more than one member rose and addressed the chair promptly, a Point of Order can be raised. Except in a mass meeting, the decision of the chair in assigning the floor can be appealed from by any two members—one making the appeal and the other seconding it (24).

42:16 Variations in Large Assemblies. In large conventions or similar bodies, some of the rules applicable to the assignment of the floor may require adaptation, which, pending the adoption of appropriate convention standing rules or special rules of order, the chair may direct. For example, in a large hall where microphones are in use and members must walk some distance to reach one, members may be asked to line up at numbered microphones. They may be recognized in numerical order, or someone may list them for the chair in the order in which assistant sergeants-at-arms turned on lights affixed to the microphones. It may be provided that a member who has a priority matter, such as a point of order, may ask the assistant at the microphone to flash the light to so indicate. Should a member, called in whatever order is established, move an amendment or other debatable motion, others awaiting a turn should stand aside unless their debate is germane to the new motion. If the Previous Question or a motion to limit debate is moved, members who have been waiting in line cannot validly protest; as in all other cases, the chair cannot choose the occasions when such motions will be in order. He may advise the assembly that, if it wishes to continue debate and hear from those waiting in line, a minority greater than one third has this within its power.

42:17 If ushers are equipped with hand microphones and a microphone is carried to each member who is recognized, the standard rules in 42:6 can be followed.
Interruption of a Member Assigned the Floor

42:18 When a member has been assigned the floor and has begun to speak—unless he begins to discuss a subject when no motion is pending or speaks longer in debate than the rules of the assembly allow—he cannot be interrupted by another member or by the chair except for one of the following purposes, and then only when the urgency of the situation justifies it:

a) a Call for the Orders of the Day (18) when they are not being conformed to,
b) the raising of a question of privilege (19),
c) a Point of Order or the calling of the member who has the floor to order (23, 61)—or the chair’s calling this member’s attention to the fact that he is failing to observe the rules of speaking (61:10–11),
d) a call for a separate vote on one or more of a set of independent resolutions on different subjects, or a divisible set of amendments, that have been offered by a single motion (10:25, 12:14, 27:10–11),
e) a request or inquiry (32, 33) that requires an immediate response;
or, in certain special circumstances, these additional purposes:
f) an Appeal (24),
g) an Objection to the Consideration of a Question (26), or
h) a Division of the Assembly (29).

42:19 After a member has been assigned the floor but before he has begun to speak, it is in order to take any of the steps listed above, and also, if there may be no other opportunity, to rise for the purpose of:

a) giving notice of intent to introduce a motion requiring such notice (10:44–50); or
b) making a motion to Reconsider (37) or to Reconsider and Enter on the Minutes (37:46–52).

42:20 If an interruption occurs for any of the reasons listed above, the member who had the floor does not lose it, although he takes his seat while the interrupting matter is being attended to. As soon as the interruption has been disposed of, the chair directs him to rise and proceed by saying, for example, “Mr. Lewis has the floor.”

42:21 If a member presenting a committee report or other document to the assembly hands it to the secretary or a reading clerk to be read, the member does not thereby yield the floor, but has it again when the reading is finished.

42:22 When a member has risen to claim the floor or has been assigned the floor, it is out of order for another to call out a motion to adjourn, or a motion to lay the pending question on the table. If someone does so, or if calls of “Question!” are made, it is the duty of the chair to obtain order and protect the rights of the member who is entitled to the floor.
§43. RULES GOVERNING DEBATE

43:1  Debate, rightly understood, is an essential element in the making of rational decisions of consequence by intelligent people. In a deliberative assembly, this term applies to discussion on the merits of a pending question—that is, whether the proposal under consideration should, or should not, be agreed to. That the right of debate is inherent in such an assembly is implied by the word deliberative.

43:2  Debatability is a characteristic of all main motions and of certain other motions, depending on the parliamentary function they serve, according to principles summarized at the end of this section; and from such principles are derived the specific rules stated under Standard Characteristic 5 in 11–37.

43:3  While the amount of debate on a motion in actual practice will depend on such factors as its importance, how strongly it is contested, etc., every member of the assembly has the right to speak to every debatable motion before it is finally acted upon; and subject only to general limitations on debate established by parliamentary law or the rules of the body as explained below, this right cannot be interfered with except by a two-thirds vote.
Summary of Procedures Incident to Debate

43:4 Until a matter has been brought before the assembly in the form of a motion proposing a specific action, it cannot be debated. As explained in 3 and 4, the motion must be made by a member who has obtained the floor while no question is pending (or while the motion is in order, if it is not a main motion), after which it must be seconded by another member (unless it is made by direction of a board or committee), and must be stated by the chair. The chair may conclude his statement of the question on the debatable motion by asking, “Are you ready for the question?” or, less formally, “Is there any debate?” Alternatively, he may simply pause and turn toward the maker of the motion to see if he desires the floor first in debate. After the maker of the motion has had the opportunity to speak first if he wishes, other members can rise and address the chair to claim the floor for the purpose of debate, as explained in 3:30ff. and 42.

43:5 While debate is in progress, amendments or other secondary (subsidiary, privileged, or incidental) motions can be introduced and disposed of—and can be debated in the process, if they are debatable—as explained in 10:31–35. A member may both speak in debate and conclude by offering a secondary motion, which is a particular application of the principle that a member having been recognized for any legitimate purpose has the floor for all legitimate purposes.

43:6 When debate appears to have concluded, the chair may again ask, “Are you ready for the question?” (or “Is there any further debate?”) or if, after a reasonable pause, no one rises to claim the floor, the chair may assume that no member wishes to speak and, standing, may proceed to put the question.
It should be noted that, under legitimate parliamentary procedure, there is no such thing as “gaveling through” a measure. The right of members to debate or introduce secondary motions cannot be cut off by the chair’s attempting to put a question to vote so quickly that no member can get the floor—either when the chair first states the question or when he believes debate is ended. Debate is not closed by the presiding officer’s rising to put the question. If a vote has been taken or begun quickly and it is found that a member rose and addressed the chair with reasonable promptness after the chair asked, “Are you ready for the question?” or, by a pause or otherwise, indicated that the floor was open to assignment, then—even if the chair has announced the result of such a vote—the vote must be disregarded, the member is entitled to the floor, and debate begins or resumes. But if the chair gives ample opportunity for members to claim the floor before he puts the question, and no one rises, the right to debate cannot be claimed after the voting has commenced. If, because a member sought the floor in timely fashion, debate is resumed after voting has begun, the question must be put fully again—that is, both the affirmative and the negative votes must be called for—regardless of how far the earlier vote had proceeded. When a vote is taken a second time for purposes of verification—as when a Division (29) is demanded—debate cannot be resumed except by unanimous consent (4:58–63).
Length and Number of Speeches

43:8 Maximum Time for Each Speech. In a nonlegislative body or organization that has no special rule relating to the length of speeches (2), a member, having obtained the floor while a debatable motion is immediately pending, can speak no longer than ten minutes unless he obtains the consent of the assembly. Such permission can be given by unanimous consent (4:58–63), or by means of a motion to Extend Limits of Debate (15), which requires a two-thirds vote without debate.

43:9 When a member’s time is exhausted, the chair rises and—if the member does not immediately conclude his remarks—calls his attention to the fact by an appropriate signal, or by interrupting him if necessary. The chair may appoint timekeepers to provide assistance in fulfilling this responsibility. If it appears that a minute more will afford sufficient time for the member to conclude more gracefully, the chair can ask unanimous consent to extend the member’s time for a short period, or any member can do so.

43:10 Rights in regard to debate are not transferable. Unless the organization has a special rule on the subject, a member cannot yield any unexpired portion of his time to another member, or reserve any portion of his time for a later time—that is, if a member yields the floor before speaking his full ten minutes, he is presumed to have waived his right to the remaining time.4 If a speaker yields to another member for a question (Request for Information, 33:6–10), the time consumed by the question is charged to the speaker.

43:11 A committee chairman or reporting member is not considered to be debating when presenting or reading the committee’s report, but he is bound to obey the assembly’s rules relating to debate in any speech made by him in support of the motion offered on behalf of the committee.

43:12 Number of Speeches on the Same Question per Member per Day. Unless the assembly has a special rule providing otherwise, no member can speak more than twice to the same question on the same day—except that in the case of an Appeal (24), only the presiding officer can speak twice (the second time at the close of the debate), all other members being limited to one speech. Merely asking a question or making a brief suggestion is not counted as speaking in debate; nor is the making of a secondary motion counted as speaking in debate,⁵ so long as in making the motion the member makes no comment on the then-pending question. It will be seen from this rule that if debate on a pending motion is continued at the next meeting, and if that meeting is held on the same day, members who have already made two speeches on a question are not allowed to speak on it again without the assembly’s permission. But if the next meeting is held on another day, all members have their right to debate entirely renewed with reference to that question.

43:13 Under this rule, each debatable motion is a separate question with respect to members’ rights to debate it. Thus, if a series of debatable questions is pending and a member has, for example, spoken twice that day while the main motion is immediately pending, he has exhausted his right to debate the main motion; but, even on the same day, he can still speak twice on a motion to postpone the main question indefinitely, and twice on each amendment that may be moved, and so on. As noted under the rules for assigning the floor (42), however, a member cannot make a second speech on the same question the same day until every member who desires to speak on it has had an opportunity to do so once. If debate is closed before the member has an opportunity to make a second speech, none may be made.
Modification of General Limits of Debate

43:14 The general rules limiting the length and number of speeches in debate that are stated above can be modified to serve the assembly’s needs as follows:

43:15 Adopting a Special Rule. The rule allowing each member two speeches of ten minutes’ length per day on each debatable question can be made either more restrictive or more liberal for all meetings of a society by adopting a special rule of order by a two-thirds vote after notice, or by a vote of a majority of the entire membership (2:14ff.; see also 10:44–51). An example of a more restrictive rule might be one setting a limit of not more than one speech of five minutes’ length on the same question on the same day for each member.

43:16 Changing the Limits for a Session. An assembly at any session can change the limits of debate, for that session only, by means of a main motion adopted by a two-thirds vote without notice. In a convention—where the limits of debate generally need to be stricter than in a local society—such a modification is usually adopted in the form of a standing rule of the convention (59), requiring a two-thirds vote in such a case.

43:17 Changing the Limits for the Pending Question(s) Only. While a debatable question is immediately pending, the allowed length or number of speeches can be reduced or increased, for that question only, by means of the subsidiary motion to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate (15), adopted by a two-thirds vote. This motion can also be used to close debate at a specified future time. If two thirds of those voting wish to close debate immediately, they can do so by adopting the motion for the Previous Question (16). If a series of adhering debatable questions (10:35) is pending, either of these motions can also be applied to the entire series or any consecutive part of the series beginning with the immediately pending question. (For forms, see 15:19, 16:20, 59:82.) If it is desired to prevent any discussion of a subject—even by the introducer of the motion, who has the right to the floor first—the only way this can be done is to raise an Objection to the Consideration of the Question (26) before debate begins or any subsidiary motion (other than a motion to Lay on the Table) is stated. If the objection is sustained by a two-thirds vote, the question cannot be considered in any way at that time or during that session.

43:18 On the other hand, if, in considering a particular question, it is desired to retain the usual limit on the length of speeches but remove restrictions on the total number of times members can speak, the assembly by a majority vote can resolve itself into a committee of the whole or into quasi committee of the whole, or it can consider the question informally (see 52:1). Speeches made under these procedures do not count against a member’s right to debate the same question if it is further considered by the assembly on the same day under the regular rules. If the question under consideration is composed of a number of sections or paragraphs—as in the case of bylaws, for example—the total number of speeches allowed each member can be greatly increased, but not made unlimited, by considering the document seriatim (28), in which case each member can speak twice on each paragraph, section, or unit that is taken up as a separate part.
Decorum in Debate

43:19 The following practices and customs observed by speakers and other members in an assembly assist the carrying on of debate in a smooth and orderly manner. Paragraphs 3:9–13 under the head Pattern of Formality should be read in connection with this subject.

43:20 Confining Remarks to the Merits of the Pending Question. In debate a member’s remarks must be germane to the question before the assembly—that is, his statements must have bearing on whether the immediately pending motion should be adopted (see also Principles Governing the Debatability of Motions, 43:35–40).

43:21 Refraining from Attacking a Member’s Motives. When a question is pending, a member can condemn the nature or likely consequences of the proposed measure in strong terms, but he must avoid personalities, and under no circumstances can he attack or question the motives of another member. The measure, not the member, is the subject of debate. If a member disagrees with a statement by another in regard to an event that both witnessed, he cannot state in debate that the other’s statement “is false.” But he might say, “I believe there is strong evidence that the member is mistaken.” The moment the chair hears such words as “fraud,” “liar,” or “lie” used about a member in debate, he must act immediately and decisively to correct the matter and prevent its repetition (see 61).

43:22 Addressing All Remarks Through the Chair. Members of an assembly cannot address one another directly, but must address all remarks through the chair. If, while a member is speaking in debate, another member wishes to address a question to him—which the person speaking can permit or not as he chooses, but which is taken out of his time if he does—the member desiring to ask the question rises and addresses the chair, proceeding as explained under Request for Information (33:6–10).

43:23 Avoiding the Use of Members’ Names. As much as possible, the use of names of members should be avoided in debate. It is better to describe a member in some other way, as by saying, “the member who spoke last,” or, “the delegate from Mason County.” The officers of the society should always be referred to by their official titles. There is no need, however, to refer to oneself in debate in the third person as by the use of such expressions as “this member.” A member’s debate is expected and intended to be partial, and the first person is quite acceptable.

43:24 Refraining from Speaking Adversely on a Prior Action Not Pending. In debate, a member cannot reflect adversely on any prior act of the society that is not then pending, unless a motion to reconsider, rescind, or amend it is pending, or unless he intends to conclude his remarks by making or giving notice of one of these motions.

43:25 Refraining from Speaking Against One’s Own Motion. In debate, the maker of a motion, while he can vote against it, is not allowed to speak against his own motion. He need not speak at all, but if he does he is obliged to take a favorable position. If he changes his mind while the motion he made is pending, he can, in effect, advise the assembly of this by asking permission to withdraw the motion (33:11–18).

43:26 Reading from Reports, Quotations, etc., Only Without Objection or With Permission. If any member objects, a member has no right to read from—or to have the secretary read from—any paper or book as part of his speech, without permission of the assembly. Members are usually permitted to read short, pertinent, printed extracts in debate, however, so long as they do not abuse the privilege (see also 33:20–21).

43:27 Being Seated During an Interruption by the Chair. If at any time the presiding officer rises to make a ruling, give information, or otherwise speak within his privilege, any member who is speaking should be seated (or should step back slightly if he is standing at a microphone some distance from a seat) until the presiding officer has finished. At that time the member can resume his speech, unless he is denied the right as a disciplinary measure. (Questions of discipline arising from disorderly debate by members are treated in 61.)

43:28 Refraining from Disturbing the Assembly. During debate, during remarks by the presiding officer to the assembly, and during voting, no member should be permitted to disturb the assembly by whispering, walking across the floor, or in any other way. The key words here are disturb the assembly. This rule does not mean, therefore, that members can never whisper, or walk from one place to another in the hall during the deliberations of the assembly. At large meetings it would be impossible to enforce such a rule. However, the presiding officer should watch that such activity does not disturb the meeting or hamper the transaction of business.
Rule Against the Chair’s Participation in Debate

43:29 If the presiding officer is a member of the society, he has—as an individual—the same rights in debate as any other member; but the impartiality required of the chair in an assembly precludes his exercising these rights while he is presiding. Normally, especially in a large body, he should have nothing to say on the merits of pending questions. On certain occasions—which should be extremely rare—the presiding officer may believe that a crucial factor relating to such a question has been overlooked and that his obligation as a member to call attention to the point outweighs his duty to preside at that time. To participate in debate, he must relinquish the chair; and in such a case he turns the chair over:

a) to the highest-ranking vice-president present who has not spoken on the question and does not decline on the grounds of wishing to speak on it; or

b) if no such vice-president is in the room, to some other member qualified as in (a), whom the chair designates (and who is assumed to receive the assembly’s approval by unanimous consent unless member(s) then nominate other person(s), in which case the presiding officer’s choice is also treated as a nominee and the matter is decided by vote).

The presiding officer who relinquished the chair then may not return to it until the pending main question has been disposed of, since he has shown himself to be a partisan as far as that particular matter is concerned. Indeed, unless a presiding officer is extremely sparing in leaving the chair to take part in debate, he may destroy members’ confidence in the impartiality of his approach to the task of presiding.
In debate on an appeal (24) or a point of order that the chair has submitted to the judgment of the assembly (23:18–21), the foregoing rule does not apply, and the presiding officer does not leave the chair, since his participation in the debate relates to the function of presiding.
Occasions Justifying Brief Discussion Outside Debate

43:31 Allowable Explanations and Requests When No Motion Is Pending or When an Undebatable Motion Is Pending. As already stated, debate in a deliberative assembly is permitted only when it is germane to a debatable motion that has been stated by the chair as the immediately pending question. However, as explained in 4, the making of a motion of any kind—whether debatable or undebatable—may be prefaced, when necessary, by a few words of explanation, which must not become a speech; or a member can first request information, or briefly indicate the substance of a desired proposal and ask for the chair’s assistance in wording an appropriate motion. Similarly, business may sometimes be expedited by allowing a few words of factual explanation while an undebatable motion is pending.

43:32 The distinction between debate and asking questions or making brief suggestions should be kept in mind in this connection. Especially in large assemblies, the chair must be careful not to allow this type of consultation to develop into an extended colloquy between members or to take on the semblance of debate, and should generally remain standing while the consultation takes place, to show that the floor has not been assigned.

43:33 Informal Consultation to Assist the Framing of a Motion. Occasionally, brief informal consultation or discussion of a subject may assist a member in framing a proper motion. If the chair permits such discussion, he must not allow it to continue more than a few moments or longer than is reasonably necessary to arrive at a motion embodying the member’s
In general, for a member to speak when no question is pending, without promptly leading to a motion, implies an unusual circumstance and requires permission of the assembly. But occasionally, in very small bodies, a member who has obtained the floor at such a time may state that, if there is no objection, he would like to give some explanations dealing with a specified subject and to conclude by offering a motion on that subject. If no one objects, the member can then proceed; and the chair, knowing the subject, can hold him to it as he would in debate on a motion (see also 4:7–8).
Principles Governing the Debatability of Motions

43:35  Rules as to each motion's debatability or undebatability are given under Standard Characteristic 5 in 10–37 and in the Table of Rules Relating to Motions on pages t6–t33. The following is a brief summary of these rules in relation to the principles on which they are based.

43:36  Every main motion is debatable, from the nature of the deliberative assembly itself.

43:37  With the exception of the two subsidiary motions that have to do with debate, the degree to which each of the subsidiary motions can be debated depends on the extent to which its adoption would restrict the assembly in dealing with the main question.

1) Since the motion to Postpone Indefinitely (11) will kill the main motion if it is adopted, it is fully debatable and leaves the main question open to debate.

2) A motion to Amend (12) is debatable when it is applied to the main question or to any other debatable motion, since it would alter the question it proposes to amend; but the debate is limited to the merits of the amendment, and other pending questions can be brought into the discussion only as necessary in this connection. A motion to amend an undebatable motion is undebatable, because to allow debate on it would be contrary to the purposes of the other motion's undebatability.

3) In the case of the motions to Commit (13) and to Postpone to a Certain Time (14), debate is quite limited, because the main question will be open to further debate when the committee reports or when the time arrives to which the question was postponed. Hence, debate is confined in the first instance to the wisdom of referring or to the choice of personnel of the committee and to the nature of its instructions, and in the latter instance to the wisdom of postponement and the choice of a time to which the question will be postponed.

4) Motions to Limit or Extend Limits of Debate (15) and for the Previous Question (16) are undebatable inasmuch as their very object is to alter the debatability of pending question(s), and their purpose would be defeated if they were debatable; they are also in the nature of specialized motions to suspend the rules, and any such motion made while business is pending is undebatable.

5) The motion to Lay on the Table (17) is undebatable because its legitimate purpose would be defeated if it were debatable, and because its adoption in no way interferes with the right of the majority to take the question from the table (34) and resume debate.

43:38 The privileged motions are all undebatable because, if they were debatable, their high privilege would allow them to interfere with business. The right of debate is thus incompatible with high privilege. With reference to the two lowest-ranking privileged motions, it is, of course, the “calling” for the orders of the day (18) or the “raising” of a question of privilege (19) that is undebatable. When the order of the day or the question of privilege involved in such a case becomes the pending main motion, it is debatable.

43:39 Except as noted in this paragraph, the incidental motions are undebatable, because they have high privilege to interrupt any motions or situations to which they are incidental. In the case of an Appeal that relates to indecorum, the rules of debate, or the priority of business, it is assumed that debate would be a hindrance to business, as it would be if the appeal were made when an undebatable question is immediately pending or involved in the appeal. At all other times, an appeal is fully debatable so long as the debate is germane to the subject matter of the appeal. The incidental motion to create a proviso, like the corresponding subsidiary motion to create a proviso by amending a motion’s enacting words (see 57:15), is debatable when the motion to which it applies is debatable. A Request to Be Excused from a Duty, such as a resignation, may require some discussion for its proper decision, and for this reason it is debatable.

43:40 Rules as to the debatability of motions that bring a question again before the assembly may be summarized as follows:

1) The motion to Take from the Table (34) is undebatable because debate would serve no useful purpose and would delay business, and because, if it is voted down, it can be renewed each time any business has been transacted.

2) The motion to Rescind or to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35) is fully debatable, and it opens to debate the entire motion that it proposes to rescind or to amend. The same is true of the motion to Discharge a Committee (36).

3) The motion to Reconsider (37) is debatable only to the extent that the motion proposed to be reconsidered is debatable, and it opens the merits of that question to debate. A motion to reconsider an undebatable motion is thus undebatable.
Footnotes to Chapter XII

1. In small boards and in committees, members generally need not rise to obtain the floor. See 49:21(1).

2. For modification of these rules in large assemblies, see 42:16.

3. In a mass meeting, the chair’s decision in assigning the floor is not subject to appeal. In a very large body other than a mass meeting, if the best interests of the assembly require that the chair be given greater power in assigning the floor, a special rule that there shall be no appeal from his decision in granting recognition can be adopted (see 2:14ff.; see also, in regard to standing rules in a convention, 59:27ff.).

4. This rule reflects the traditional parliamentary principles. The House of Representatives has a different rule which permits control of all time by a single member or the leaders of the opposing sides of the question. The House rule also prevents members to whom time has been yielded for debate from making motions. See form (f) in 15:19 and, especially, the form discussed in 59:82–83.

5. Thus a member who has exhausted the number of speeches permitted him on a main motion may still seek recognition to move its referral or amendment, for example. In such a case the chair grants limited recognition by saying, “The member has exhausted his right to debate. For what purpose does he rise?”
CHAPTER XIII

§44. BASES FOR DETERMINING A VOTING RESULT

Majority Vote—the Basic Requirement

44:1 As stated in 1:6, the basic requirement for approval of an action or choice by a deliberative assembly, except where a rule provides otherwise, is a majority vote. The word majority means “more than half”; and when the term majority vote is used without qualification—as in the case of the basic requirement—it means more than half of the votes cast by persons entitled to vote, excluding blanks or abstentions, at a regular or properly called meeting. For example (assuming that there are no voters having fractions of a vote, as may occur in some conventions):

• If 19 votes are cast, a majority (more than 9½) is 10.
• If 20 votes are cast, a majority (more than 10) is 11.
• If 21 votes are cast, a majority (more than 10½) is 11.

44:2 Other bases for determining a voting result, as described below, are required under parliamentary law for certain procedures, or may be prescribed by the rules of the particular body—for decisions in general or for questions of a specified nature (see also 10:8(7)). Regardless of the basis required, a decision can be validly made only when a quorum is present (unless otherwise specified in the rules, as in the case of certain procedural actions); see 40.
Two-Thirds Vote

44:3 A two-thirds vote—when the term is unqualified—means at least two thirds of the votes cast by persons entitled to vote, excluding blanks or abstentions, at a regular or properly called meeting. For example (assuming that there are no fractions of votes):

- If 30 votes are cast, a two-thirds vote is 20.
- If 31 votes are cast, a two-thirds vote is 21.
- If 32 votes are cast, a two-thirds vote is 22.
- If 33 votes are cast, a two-thirds vote is 22.

44:4 As a compromise between the rights of the individual and the rights of the assembly, the principle has been established that a two-thirds vote is required to adopt any motion that: (a) suspends or modifies a rule of order previously adopted; (b) prevents the introduction of a question for consideration; (c) closes, limits, or extends the limits of debate; (d) closes nominations or the polls, or otherwise limits the freedom of nominating or voting; or (e) takes away membership. (For a list of motions that require a two-thirds vote, see pages t48–t49.)

44:5 In determining whether a question has obtained two thirds of the votes cast, the chair takes a rising vote (or, in a very small assembly, if the chair prefers and no one objects, a vote by show of hands), and it is the chair’s duty to obtain a count of the vote whenever he is in doubt concerning the result.

44:6 The chair can obtain a count of the vote initially if it appears—when those in the affirmative rise—that the result will be close; or he can retake it as a counted rising vote if he is afterward in doubt. In an assembly that has no special rule permitting a small fraction (that is, a specified fraction somewhat less than one third) of the voters to require a two-thirds vote to be counted, the chair, in judging whether to obtain a count of the vote at his own instance, must be particularly careful to leave no room for anyone to doubt the result in cases where he finds that there are two thirds on the side that thereby prevails. Without a count at the chair's instance under these conditions, if he announces that a two-thirds vote has been obtained and those on the losing side doubt the result, they are powerless to have it verified should those declared the winners choose to prevent a count. The reason is that—whatever may be the true result in view of the closeness of the vote in such a case—those declared the losers are no more than approximately one third of those voting, and therefore cannot command the majority necessary to order the vote counted.
Modifications of Usual Bases for Decision

44:7 By modifying the concepts of a majority vote and a two-thirds vote, other bases for determining a voting result can be defined and are sometimes prescribed by rule. Two elements enter into the definition of such bases for decision: (1) the proportion that must concur—as a majority, two thirds, three fourths, etc.; and (2) the set of members to which the proportion applies—which (a) when not stated, is always the number of members present and voting, but (b) can be specified by rule as the number of members present, the total membership, or some other grouping.

44:8 Assume, for example, that at a meeting of a society with a total membership of 150 and a quorum of 10, there are 30 members present, of whom 25 participate in a given counted vote (taken by rising, by show of hands, by roll call, or by ballot). Then, with respect to that vote:

- A majority is……13
- A majority of the members present is……16
- A majority of the entire membership is……76
- A two-thirds vote is……17
- A vote of two thirds of the members present is……20
- A vote of two thirds of the entire membership is……100

44:9 Regarding these bases for determining a voting result, the following points should be noted:

a) Voting requirements based on the number of members present—a majority of those present, two thirds of those present, etc.—while possible, are generally undesirable. Since an abstention in such cases has the same effect as a negative vote, these bases deny members the right to maintain a neutral position by abstaining. For the same reason, members present who fail to vote through indifference rather than through deliberate neutrality may affect the result negatively. When such a vote is required, however, the chair must count those present immediately after the affirmative vote is taken, before any change can take place in attendance. The negative vote is not taken, since it is intrinsically irrelevant to determining whether the motion is adopted. (See 4:35.)

b) A majority of the entire membership is a majority of the total number of those who are members of the voting body at the time of the vote. (Thus, in a society that has both a general membership and an executive board, a “majority of the entire membership” at a board meeting refers to a majority of the membership of the board, not of the society.) In a convention of delegates a majority of the entire membership means a majority of the total number of convention members entitled to vote as set forth in the official roll of voting members of the convention (1:16, 59:25–26). The vote of a majority of the entire membership is frequently an alternative to a requirement of previous notice, and is required in order to rescind and expunge from the minutes (see 35:13). Otherwise, prescribing such a requirement is generally unsatisfactory in an assembly of an ordinary society, since it is likely to be impossible to get a majority of the entire membership even to attend a given meeting, although in certain instances it may be appropriate in conventions or in permanent boards where the members are obligated to attend the meetings.

44:10 Whenever it is desired that the basis for decision be other than a majority vote or (where the normal rules of parliamentary law require it) a two-thirds vote or a vote of a majority of the entire membership, the desired basis should be precisely defined in the bylaws or in a special rule of order. Whatever voting basis is used, it is also possible to include a requirement of previous notice for specified types of action. Previous notice means that notice of intent to introduce the proposal must be given at the preceding meeting (in which case the notice can be oral), or in the call of the meeting at which it is brought up (for a discussion of previous notice, see 10:44–51).
Plurality Vote

44:11 A plurality vote is the largest number of votes to be given any candidate or proposition when three or more choices are possible; the candidate or proposition receiving the largest number of votes has a plurality. A plurality that is not a majority never chooses a proposition or elects anyone to office except by virtue of a special rule previously adopted. If such a rule is to apply to the election of officers, it must be prescribed in the bylaws. A rule that a plurality shall elect is unlikely to be in the best interests of the average organization. In an international or national society where the election is conducted by mail ballot, a plurality is sometimes allowed to elect officers, with a view to avoiding the delay and extra expense that would result from additional balloting under these conditions. A better method in such cases is for the bylaws to prescribe some form of preferential voting (see 45:62–69).
Tie Votes and Cases in Which the Chair’s Vote Affects the Result

44:12 If the presiding officer is a member of the assembly, he can vote as any other member when the vote is by ballot (see also 45:28). In all other cases the presiding officer, if a member of the assembly, can (but is not obliged to) vote whenever his vote will affect the result—that is, he can vote either to break or to cause a tie; or, in a case where a two-thirds vote is required, he can vote either to cause or to block the attainment of the necessary two thirds. In particular:

• On a tie vote, a motion requiring a majority vote for adoption is lost, since a tie is not a majority. Thus, if there is a tie without the chair’s vote, the presiding officer can, if he is a member, vote in the affirmative, thereby causing the motion to be adopted; or, if there is one more in the affirmative than in the negative without the chair’s vote (for example, if there are 72 votes in favor and 71 opposed), he can vote in the negative to create a tie, thus causing the motion to be rejected.

• Similarly, in the case of a motion requiring a two-thirds vote, if, without the chair’s vote, the number in the affirmative is one less than twice the number in the negative (for example, if there are 59 in the affirmative and 30 in the negative), the chair, if a member, can vote in the affirmative and thus cause the motion to be adopted; or, if there are exactly two thirds in the affirmative without his vote (for example, if there are 60 in the affirmative and 30 in the negative), the chair can vote in the negative, with the result that the motion is rejected. ² Similarly, the chair’s vote might affect the result in cases where a majority of the members can decide a question.
The chair cannot vote twice, once as a member, then again in his capacity as presiding officer.

44:13 In an appeal from the decision of the chair, a tie vote sustains the chair’s decision, even though his vote created the tie, on the principle that the decision of the chair can be reversed only by a majority.
§45. VOTING PROCEDURE

Rights and Obligations in Voting

45:1 Voting Rights of a Member in Arrears. A member of a society who is in arrears in payment of his dues, but who has not been formally dropped from the membership rolls and is not under a disciplinary suspension, retains the full rights of a voting member and is entitled to vote except as the bylaws may otherwise provide. (See also 1:13n3, 56:19.)

45:2 One Person, One Vote. It is a fundamental principle of parliamentary law that each person who is a member of a deliberative assembly is entitled to one—and only one—vote on a question. This is true even if a person is elected or appointed to more than one position, each of which would entitle the holder to a vote. For example, in a convention, a person selected as delegate by more than one constituent body may cast only one vote. An individual member’s right to vote may not be transferred to another person (for example, by the use of proxies).

45:3 Right of Abstention. Although it is the duty of every member who has an opinion on a question to express it by his vote, he can abstain, since he cannot be compelled to vote. By the same token, when an office or position is to be filled by a number of members, as in the case of a committee, or positions on a board, a member may partially abstain by voting for less than all of those for whom he is entitled to vote.

45:4 Abstaining from Voting on a Question of Direct Personal Interest. No member should vote on a question in which he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest not common to other members of the organization. For example, if a motion proposes that the organization enter into a contract with a commercial firm of which a member of the organization is an officer and from which contract he would derive personal pecuniary profit, the member should abstain from voting on the motion. However, no member can be compelled to refrain from voting in such circumstances.

45:5 Voting on Questions Affecting Oneself. The rule on abstaining from voting on a question of direct personal interest does not mean that a member should not vote for himself for an office or other position to which members generally are eligible, or should not vote when other members are included with him in a motion. If a member never voted on a question affecting himself, it would be impossible for a society to vote to hold a banquet, or for the majority to prevent a small minority from preferring charges against them and suspending or expelling them (61, 63).

45:6 Interruption of Votes. When a vote is being taken, no interruption is permitted from the time that any member has actually voted until all have presumably voted, unless as sometimes occurs in ballot voting, other business is being transacted during voting. For points of order regarding the conduct of a vote, see below (45:9).

45:7 Rule Against Explanation by Members During Voting. A member has no right to “explain his vote” during voting, which would be the same as debate at such a time.

45:8 Changing One’s Vote. Except when the vote has been taken by ballot (or some other method that provides secrecy), a member has a right to change his vote up to the time the result is announced but afterward can make the change only by the unanimous consent of the assembly requested and granted, without debate, immediately following the chair’s announcement of the result of the vote (see below).

45:9 Time Limits on Efforts to Challenge, Retake, or Change a Vote. After the result of a vote has been announced, members can still propose or demand certain actions that may change the result. A member may raise a point of order regarding the conduct of the vote, demand a division of the assembly, move to retake the vote under another method, move for a recapitulation of a roll-call vote, or request unanimous consent to change his vote. With the exception of a point of order raised against a breach of a continuing nature (23:6–9), if any of these actions is to apply to a vote after the result has been announced, it must be taken immediately after the chair’s announcement, before any debate or business has intervened. For example, it is too late to take these actions after any member has been recognized and begun to speak in debate or to give a report or presentation, or after the chair has stated the question on a subsequently made motion, or after the chair has begun to take the vote and any member has voted on another motion that was pending. For the time limits on ordering that a counted rising vote, a ballot, or a roll-call vote be recounted, see the last sentence of 45:15; 45:41; and 45:54. See also Contesting the Announced Result of an Election, 46:48–50.

45:10 Assembly’s Prerogative in Judging Voting Procedures. The assembly itself is the judge of all questions arising that are incidental to the voting or the counting of the votes. In an election by ballot, for example, the tellers should refer to the assembly for decision all questions on which there is any uncertainty (see 45:33).
Regular Methods of Voting on Motions

45:11 In Chapter II are described the following methods of voting:

1) by voice (viva voce)—the normal method of voting on a motion;
2) by rising—used in verifying an inconclusive voice vote, and in voting on motions requiring a two-thirds vote for adoption; and
3) by show of hands—an alternative method that can be used in place of a rising vote in very small assemblies if no member objects. In some small groups, a vote by show of hands is also used in place of a voice vote as a normal method of voting.

Paragraphs 4:34–57 should be read in connection with these three methods of voting.

45:12 Also described in Chapter II is the procedure of action by unanimous consent. Paragraphs 4:58–63 should be read in reference to this method of transacting business.

45:13 A characteristic that the three methods of voting listed above have in common is that in each case the chair calls first for those voting in the affirmative to indicate the fact in a specified manner ("say aye," "rise," or "raise the right hand"), after which he calls for the negative vote, then judges and declares which side prevails.

45:14 Verifying a Vote. In connection with the methods of voting by voice, by rising, or by show of hands, as explained in Chapter II, if the chair is in doubt on a voice vote or a vote by show of hands, he should retake it as a rising vote and, if necessary to satisfy himself of the result, he should obtain a count of it. Any member, by demanding a Division (29), can require a voice vote or a vote by show of hands to be retaken as a rising vote.
—but no individual member can compel it to be counted. If the chair does not obtain a count at his own instance and a member thinks one is desirable, that member should move that the vote be counted. If this motion is seconded, the question as to whether a count shall be ordered is voted on by voice vote, or by an uncounted rising vote or show of hands.
Where no special rule has been adopted, a majority vote is required to order a count. In organizations where it is desired to allow less than a majority to order a count, a special rule of order establishing the required vote should be adopted. Such a rule is particularly desirable with reference to motions that require a two-thirds vote for adoption (see also 44:5–6). It should be noted that a vote is never retaken by the same form of voting, although, in a counted rising vote, a ballot, or a roll call, a recount of the votes or of the tellers’ tabulations can be ordered to ensure that the count is precisely correct as reported.

45:15 Method of Counting a Rising Vote. In small meetings, the chair can take such a count himself—with or without directing the secretary to make an independent count for verification. In a large assembly, the chair should appoint tellers to take the count. The count is taken by having those in the affirmative rise and stand until counted, then having those in the negative rise and stand until counted. The votes can also be counted by having the members pass between tellers, or having them count off by rows and be seated one at a time, although the latter process is particularly subject to confusion if great care is not exercised by the tellers. Those in the affirmative are always counted first. In all but small assemblies, the doors should be closed and no one should enter or leave the hall while a count is being taken. The form used in taking a count is as shown in 4:39. In a meeting small enough that each member present can make his own verification of a count on a show of hands, the chair can take the count by this method, if he prefers and no one objects. If written records are prepared in counting the vote, such as tellers’ tally sheets, they are subject to the same retention and recount rules as ballots (45:41).

45:16 Voting Cards. Some organizations like to use a brightly colored cardboard card, approximately three inches wide and a foot long, in voting on most or all occasions by raising it when asked to do so by the chair. The authorization of the use of these devices in voting, however, depends on expected conditions in the meeting. If the “voters’ cards” have been distributed to the voters in advance, and the chair or a member thinks a simple division vote (as described in 4:38) is called for, the chair may say: “As many as are in favor of the motion, raise your voters’ cards…. Down. Those opposed, raise your voters’ cards. Down…. ” If a count is desired, however, the chair or the assembly must authorize the count as in the case of a counted division (as described in 4:39; see also 30, Motions Relating to Methods of Voting and the Polls). If this method of voting is to be used, it must be authorized by a special rule of order or, in a convention, by a convention standing rule.
Other Methods of Voting

45:17 In contrast to the methods of voting mentioned in the preceding subsection, the voting methods described below are used only when expressly ordered by the assembly or prescribed by its rules.

45:18 Voting by Ballot. Voting by ballot (also known as secret ballot) is used when secrecy of the members’ votes is desired. A ballot vote is a vote taken by instruments, such as slips of paper or electronic devices, by which members can indicate their choices without revealing how individual members have voted. On a ballot vote in an election or other vote involving multiple possible choices, members are able to write in or fill in a vote for any eligible person or choice and are not confined to voting for or against candidates that appear on the ballot.

45:19 The bylaws of the organization may prescribe that the vote be by ballot in certain cases, as in the election of officers and in admission to membership. Any vote related to charges or proposed charges before or after a trial of a member or any officer should always be by ballot. In cases in which there is no requirement that a vote be by ballot, a ballot vote can be ordered by a majority vote—which may be desirable whenever it is believed that members may thereby be more likely to vote their true sentiments.

45:20 When the bylaws require a vote to be taken by ballot, this requirement cannot be suspended—even by a unanimous vote—so as to take the vote by a nonsecret method. A vote ordering a ballot vote on a particular question (see 30) can, however, be reconsidered as long as the balloting has not yet begun.

45:21 When a vote is to be taken, or has been taken, by ballot, whether or not the bylaws require that form of voting, no action is in order that would force the disclosure of a member’s vote or views on the matter. Applications of this rule arise with regard to voting on motions to Postpone Indefinitely (30:5) and the reconsideration of motions that have been previously voted on by ballot (30:7). Likewise, a motion to make unanimous a ballot vote that was not unanimous must itself be voted on by ballot; even a single negative vote in such a case defeats the motion.

45:22 Whenever a vote is to be taken by ballot, it is not in order to move that one person—the secretary, for example—cast the ballot of the assembly.

45:23 Unless another method is specified by an appropriate rule or motion (see 45:42–43 regarding electronic or machine voting), a ballot vote is taken on slips of paper on which the voters mark their votes and is subject to the rules below.

45:24 Form of the ballot. A ballot can consist of simply a small slip of paper on which the voter writes his choice in a manner directed by the chair; but if it is known ahead of time that a vote is to be by ballot and what the exact questions are, the ballots should be prepared in advance for distribution at the proper time. In such a case, each question to be voted on appears on the ballot with a list of the possible answers beside blank spaces or boxes, so that the voter can check the answer he desires. Two or more questions can be listed on the same sheet, provided that each is marked in such a way that there can be no confusion, as illustrated below.

Indicate vote with X.

1. Shall the National Headquarters be moved to Thresher City?
   Yes ________
   No ________

2. Meeting place of next convention:
45:25 In elections, “for” and “against” spaces or boxes may not be used. They are applicable only with respect to votes on motions. In an election, a voter can vote against one candidate only by voting for another who has been nominated or by writing in the name of another candidate.

45:26 Balloting procedure. In balloting in a meeting where the voting is in the same room as the meeting, the chair appoints tellers to distribute, collect, and count the ballots, and to report the vote. The number of tellers is dependent on the number of voters, and the number of offices to be filled or questions to be answered, or the number of candidates. For a small group, two or three tellers are usually sufficient. The tellers should be chosen for accuracy and dependability, should have the confidence of the membership, and should not have a direct personal involvement in the question or in the result of the vote to an extent that they should refrain from voting under the principle stated in 45:4. Often their position with regard to the issue involved is well known, however, and they are frequently chosen to protect the interests of each opposing side. They normally vote themselves.

45:27 To ensure accuracy and to enable the tellers when unfolding the ballots to detect any error, each ballot should be folded in a manner announced in advance or stated on the ballot itself.

45:28 The presiding officer, if a member of the assembly, can always vote in the case of a ballot at the time other members do. Should he fail to vote before the polls are closed, he cannot then do so without the permission of the assembly.
When the balloting is completed, the chair directs the tellers to collect the ballots. In collecting the ballots, it is the tellers’ responsibility to see that no member votes more than once—for the assurance of which the assembly should adopt some reasonable and orderly method. For example: (a) In meetings where only voters are present, members can remain in their seats and drop their ballots into a receptacle passed by a teller, accompanied by another teller as watcher and checker; (b) they can go to a central ballot box monitored by at least two tellers and deposit their ballots; or (c) they can hand their ballots to a teller—who judges by the thickness and feel of the paper that only one ballot is being cast, and who deposits them in a central ballot box. Whatever method of collecting the ballots is followed, it—like other details relating to voting—should be fixed by rule or custom in the organization and should not be subject to haphazard variation from occasion to occasion.

After all have voted who wish to, the polls can be closed on the motion of a member by a two-thirds vote; but it is usually best to rely on the chair to close the polls. When everyone appears to have voted, the chair inquires, “Have all voted who wish to do so?” If there is no response, he says, “If no one else wishes to vote… [pause], the polls are closed,” thus in effect declaring the polls closed by unanimous consent. Thereafter, if other members arrive who wish to vote, a majority vote is required to reopen the polls. The tellers proceed to count the ballots—in a secluded location or in another room if the meeting proceeds to other business during the counting. Some small organizations have a custom that ballots are counted in full presence of the meeting.

Recording the votes. In recording the votes cast, the principle followed is that a choice has no mandate from the voting body unless approval is expressed by more than half of those entitled to vote and registering any evidence of having some preference. Accordingly, the tellers ignore blank ballots and other ballots that indicate no preference, treating them as abstentions. (Blank ballots are sometimes cast by members to conceal the fact that they do not wish to vote.)

45:32 All ballots that indicate a preference—provided they have been cast by persons entitled to vote—are taken into account in determining the number of votes cast for purposes of computing the majority. Each such ballot is credited to the voter’s preferred candidate or choice if the meaning of the ballot is clear and the choice is valid. Unintelligible ballots or ballots cast for an unidentifiable or ineligible candidate are treated instead as illegal votes—that is, they are counted as votes cast but are not credited to any candidate or choice. Similarly, a ballot that contains votes for too many candidates for a given office is counted as one illegal vote cast for that office, because it is not possible for the tellers to determine which candidate(s) the voter prefers.

45:33 Technical errors, like the misspelling of a word or name, do not make a vote illegal if the meaning of the ballot is clear. If the meaning of one or more ballots is doubtful, they can be treated as illegal if it is impossible for them to affect the result; but if they may affect the result, the tellers report them to the chair, who immediately submits to the assembly the question of how these ballots should be recorded. When reporting doubtful ballots, the tellers must be careful whenever possible not to show how the decision would affect any of the candidates.

45:34 If, in unfolding the ballots, it is found that two or more filled-out ballots are folded together, they are recorded as illegal votes—that is, each set of ballots folded together is reported as one illegal vote, and is not credited. On the other hand, a blank ballot folded in with one that is properly filled out is ignored and does not cause the rejection of the ballot with which it was folded.

45:35 If one or more ballots are identifiable as cast by persons not entitled to vote, these ballots are excluded in determining the number of votes cast for purposes of computing the majority. If there is evidence that any unidentifiable ballots were cast by persons not entitled to vote, and if there is any possibility that such ballots might affect the result, the entire ballot vote is null and void, and a new ballot vote must be taken.

45:36 On a ballot containing several questions or several independent offices or positions to be filled, each section of the ballot—that is, each portion that contains one question or position to be filled, or one group of identical positions (such as on a board or committee) to be filled—is treated for all purposes as if it were a separate ballot, which is counted in accordance with the rules given above. Therefore, the number of votes cast for purposes of computing the majority must be tallied independently for each section. So, too, if a member leaves one or more of the sections blank, the blank sections in no way affect the validity of the sections that are filled; nor do illegal votes on one section affect the validity of the remaining sections. Likewise, the folding together of two or more ballots that contain multiple sections creates an illegal vote only for each section that is filled out on more than one of the folded-together ballots. (Regarding the election of members of a board or committee in which votes are cast for several identical positions on one section of the ballot, see also 46:33–34.)

45:37 Tellers’ report and the chair’s declaration of the result. The chairman of tellers, standing, addresses the chair, reads the tellers’ report, and hands it to the chair without declaring the result. In the case of an election, the report follows this form:

TELLERS’ REPORT
Number of votes cast……97
Necessary for election (majority)……49
Mr. Miller received……51
Mr. Wilson received……24
Mr. Strong received……14
Illegal Votes
Mr. Friend (ineligible)……7
Two ballots for
Mr. Wilson folded together, rejected……1

45:38 In the case of balloting on a motion, the tellers’ report is as follows:

TELLERS’ REPORT
Number of votes cast……102
Necessary for adoption (majority)……52
Votes for motion……69
Votes against……32
Illegal votes
Two ballots against, folded together, rejected……1

45:39 The tellers’ report does not include the number of members eligible to vote nor the number abstaining. In a local society or other body in which membership continues on a long-term basis, only the officer responsible for maintaining the membership roll, and in a convention only an immediate updated report of the credentials committee, can validly determine the number of members eligible to vote if this figure becomes needed. The reporting teller never declares the result of a ballot vote. The result is always declared by the chair, who also reads the tellers’ report before he does so. In an election, the chair separately declares the election of each officer (see also 46). In balloting on a motion, the chair announces the result.

45:40 The tellers’ report is entered in full in the minutes, becoming a part of the official records of the organization. Under no circumstances may this be omitted in an election or in a vote on a critical motion out of a mistaken deference to the feelings of unsuccessful candidates or members of the losing side.

45:41 After completion of an election or balloting on a motion, unless the voting body adopts an incidental main motion directing otherwise, the tellers place the ballots and tally sheets in the custody of the secretary, who keeps them under seal until the time within which a recount may be ordered expires, and then destroys them. A recount may be ordered by the voting body, by a majority vote, at the same session at which the voting result was announced, or at the next regular session if that session is held within a quarterly time interval (see 9:7). A recount may also be ordered at a special session properly called for that purpose, if held within a quarterly time interval of the session at which the voting result was announced and before the next regular session. A motion to order a recount after the vote has just been taken or announced is an incidental motion (see 30); if the motion is made at a later time, it is an incidental main motion.

45:42 Electronic or Machine Voting. In many organizations—especially in those comprising hundreds of voters—the process of verifying and counting votes is greatly simplified by the use of electronic or mechanical voting devices, such as handheld keypads or standalone voting machines. The use of such devices to conduct voting may be directed by a special rule of order or convention standing rule or, for a particular vote, by a motion relating to methods of voting and the polls (30). Their use to fulfill a ballot requirement in the bylaws may be directed in the same manner, provided that the devices meet the criteria for a ballot vote as stated in 45:18. Members must be able to indicate their choices without revealing how they have voted. If the devices are to be used for an election, provision must be made to allow voters to cast write-in votes. If the devices are to be used to conduct voting on several questions or several independent offices simultaneously, then they must be programmed to allow the number of votes cast for purposes of computing the majority to be tallied independently for each question or office (see 45:36).

45:43 Where such devices are to be used, the following considerations are important:

• Preparations for the meeting should be made in consultation with the person in charge of installing the devices and overseeing their use, so that all adjustments required by the particular conditions of the meeting can be provided for.
• Persons who are to tend the devices during voting must be carefully instructed in their duties, and must be able to explain the use of the devices to voters.
• If there are likely to be many voters who have never used the devices, it may be advisable to have a device available for the voters’ inspection on a day previous to the meeting or to conduct a practice vote at the start of the meeting.

45:44 For the use of electronic devices in place of a roll-call vote, see 45:55.

45:45 Roll-Call Vote. Taking a vote by roll call (or by yeas and nays, as it is also called) has the effect of placing on the record how each member, or sometimes each delegation, votes; therefore, it has exactly the opposite effect of a ballot vote. It is usually confined to representative bodies, where the proceedings are published, since it enables constituents to know how their representatives voted on certain measures. It should not be used in a mass meeting or in any assembly whose members are not responsible to a constituency.

45:46 Ordering a roll-call vote. In a representative body, if there is no legal or constitutional provision specifying the size of the minority that can order a roll-call vote, the body should adopt a rule fixing the size of such a minority—for example, one fifth of those present, as in Congress, or some other portion of those present that is less than a majority. In the absence of such a special rule, a majority vote is required to order the taking of a vote by roll call—in which case a motion to do so is likely to be useless, since its purpose is to force the majority to go on record. In local societies having a large membership but relatively small attendance at meetings, a motion to take a vote by roll call is generally dilatory. It is in order, as one of the Motions Relating to Methods of Voting, however, to move “that a signed ballot be taken by tellers”; and if such a vote is ordered, the voter writes “yes” or “no” on the ballot and signs it. The votes can be recorded in the minutes just as a roll call would be, but the names of all members need not be called. A roll-call vote cannot be ordered in committee of the whole.

45:47 Procedure for roll-call vote. When a vote is to be taken by roll call (see 30 for the motion), the chair puts the question in a form like the following:

CHAIR: As many as are in favor of the adoption of the resolution will, as their names are called, answer aye [or “yes,” or “yea”]; those opposed will answer no [or “nay”]. The Secretary [or “the Clerk”] will call the roll.
The roll is called in alphabetical order except that the presiding officer’s name is called last, and only when his vote will affect the result. It is too late, after one person has answered to the roll call, to renew the debate. Each member, as his name is called, responds in the affirmative or negative as shown above. If he does not wish to vote, he answers present (or abstain). If he is not ready to vote, but wishes to be called on again after the roll has been completely called, he answers pass.

The secretary repeats each member’s name and answer aloud as it is given and notes the answers to the roll call in separate columns. A convenient method of noting the answers is to write the number 1 to the left of the name of the first member answering in the affirmative, the number 2 to the left of the second name in the affirmative, and so on. The negative answers are treated similarly in a column to the right of the names; and those answering present are tallied in a third column, to the far right or left. In this way, the last number in each column shows how the vote stands at any given point in the list.

At the conclusion of the roll call, the names of those who failed to answer can be called again, or the chair can ask if anyone entered the room after his or her name was called. Each of these members who then responds can be assigned the final number for his or her vote or abstention in the proper column, continuing from the last number previously in the column, although the member’s number will appear in a position out of sequence. Changes of vote are also permitted at this time, before the result is announced. When this happens, the number beside the member’s name is struck through, the total for that column is adjusted accordingly, and the next, final number in the proper column is entered. Changes of vote may be limited when some electronic equipment is used.

45:51 The secretary gives the final number of those voting on each side, and the number answering present, to the chair, who announces these figures and declares the result. The chair, at his or her discretion, may direct, or the assembly may order (see 30), a “recapitulation”—a procedure in which the secretary calls out the names, first, of the members who voted in the affirmative, second, of the members who voted in the negative, and third, of the members who answered present, with the chair calling for any necessary corrections to each category after the names in that category have been called.

45:52 In roll-call voting, a record of how each member voted, as well as the result of the vote, is entered in full in the journal or minutes. If those responding to the roll call do not total a sufficient number to constitute a quorum, the chair must direct the secretary to enter the names of enough members who are present but not voting to reflect the attendance of a quorum during the vote.

45:53 In large conventions, the roll is sometimes called of entire delegations rather than of the individual members. The secretary, in calling for the votes of a delegation, states the vote entitlement, as: “Local No. 145: 8 votes.” In such cases, the chairman or spokesman of each delegation, as it is called in alphabetical or numerical order, responds by giving its vote, as: “Local No. 145 votes 5 ‘for’ and 3 ‘against.’” The secretary repeats this for confirmation and calls the next delegation. If any member of the assembly doubts the chairman’s announcement of the delegation’s vote, he may demand a poll of the delegation, in which case each delegate’s name is called by the secretary, and the delegation votes individually. When all delegates have voted, the secretary announces the totals for the delegation, which are recorded.

45:54 The same rules concerning the custody and preservation of tally sheets and the authority of the voting body to order a recount that govern ballot votes (see 45:41) apply to a roll-call vote.

45:55 Electronic roll-call vote installation. Various forms of electronic devices have become available to take the place of a roll-call vote. Any deliberative body can use such a system with appropriate adjustments to conform as closely as possible with the rules given above for roll-call voting procedure. When used, there is usually a presumption of technical, mechanical accuracy of the electronic system if properly used by the members. Changes of votes after the result has been announced by the chair on the allegation of machine error are not entertained. On the same grounds, a recapitulation (see 45:51) is not permitted. Where electronic voting is used, it should be noted that, if it is impossible to erect a display board in the hall, members of the same delegation will not be able to ascertain how other members of the delegation vote. Also, steps must be taken to prevent members from being able to vote more than once by using a neighbor’s keypad, or a member lending his keypad to a friend so that the friend can vote for him in his absence by “proxy.”

45:56 Absentee Voting. It is a fundamental principle of parliamentary law that the right to vote is limited to the members of an organization who are actually present at the time the vote is taken in a regular or properly called meeting, although it should be noted that a member need not be present when the question is put. Exceptions to this rule must be expressly stated in the bylaws. Such possible exceptions include: (a) voting by postal mail, e-mail, or fax, and (b) proxy voting. An organization should never adopt a bylaw permitting a question to be decided by a voting procedure in which the votes of persons who attend a meeting are counted together with ballots mailed in by absentees. The votes of those present could be affected by debate, by amendments, and perhaps by the need for repeated balloting, while those absent would be unable to adjust their votes to reflect these factors. Consequently, the absentee ballots would in most cases be on a somewhat different question than that on which those present were voting, leading to confusion, unfairness, and inaccuracy in determining the result. If there is a possibility of any uncertainty about who will be entitled to vote, this should be spelled out unambiguously and strictly enforced to avoid unfairness in close votes.

45:57 A Vote by Mail. A vote by mail, when authorized in the bylaws, is generally reserved for important issues, such as an amendment to the bylaws or an election of officers—on which a full vote of the membership is desirable even though only a small fraction of the members normally attend meetings. Situations of this kind frequently occur in scientific societies or in alumni associations whose members may be in many countries.

45:58 For a vote by mail—so that there may be no question of the result in the event that the vote is close—it is important that the mailing list used exactly correspond to the current official roll of voting members. For this purpose, the secretary furnishes to the chairman of tellers or other official in charge of issuing the ballots a list of the names and mailing addresses of record of all persons entitled to vote, which the secretary certifies as corrected to the date as of which the ballots are issued. Each nominee may be allowed to furnish for enclosure with the ballots a brief factual statement of his service and qualifications, provided that all nominees are accorded equal opportunity and space.

45:59 If the vote is not to be secret, the following items should be sent to each qualified voter: (1) a printed ballot containing a space for the voter’s signature, to ensure against votes being cast by persons not entitled to vote, together with full instructions for marking and returning by the required date; and (2) a specially recognizable, self-addressed return envelope with the name and address of the secretary, the chairman of tellers, or other person designated to receive the marked ballot. E-mail and other means of electronic communication can be tailored to comply with these requirements.

If the vote is to be secret, an inner return envelope—with a space for the voter’s signature placed on its face instead of on the ballot—should be sent to the voter with the ballot, in addition to the self-addressed outer return envelope described above. The ballot sent to the voter should be prefolded a sufficient number of times so that—when returned marked and refolded in the same manner and sealed in the inner envelope—there will be no chance of accidental observance of the member’s vote by the teller who removes the ballot from the inner envelope. The person designated as addressee for the returned ballots holds them in the outer envelopes for delivery, unopened, at the meeting of the tellers where the votes are to be counted. At that meeting all inner envelopes are first removed from the outer envelopes. In the procedure by which the tellers remove the ballots from the inner envelopes, each envelope and ballot is handled in the following manner: (1) the signature on the envelope is checked against the list of qualified voters; (2) the voter is checked off on the list as having voted; and (3) the envelope is opened and the ballot is removed and placed, still folded, into a receptacle. When all inner envelopes have thus been processed, the ballots are taken from the receptacle and the votes are counted.

In order to ensure the accuracy and the secrecy of such a vote by mail, special care should be taken in all phases of handling the ballots. The chairman of tellers or other person responsible must be able to certify the results from both of these standpoints. Should the recipient of the ballots receive two evidently sent in by the same voter, the above procedure permits the voter to be contacted for a determination of which is the voter’s true vote and, if both are, which (the most recent) is to be counted. As with respect to nonsecret ballots, e-mail and other means of electronic communication may be able to be tailored to comply with the above requirements for secret mail balloting.

45:62 Preferential voting. The term preferential voting refers to any of a number of voting methods by which, on a single ballot when there are more than two possible choices, the second or less-preferred choices of voters can be taken into account if no candidate or proposition attains a majority. While it is more complicated than other methods of voting in common use and is not a substitute for the normal procedure of repeated balloting until a majority is obtained, preferential voting is especially useful and fair in an election by mail if it is impractical to take more than one ballot. In such cases it makes possible a more representative result than under a rule that a plurality shall elect. It can be used with respect to the election of officers only if expressly authorized in the bylaws.

45:63 Preferential voting has many variations. One method is described here by way of illustration. On the preferential ballot—for each office to be filled or multiple-choice question to be decided—the voter is asked to indicate the order in which he prefers all the candidates or propositions, placing the numeral 1 beside his first preference, the numeral 2 beside his second preference, and so on for every possible choice. In counting the votes for a given office or question, the ballots are arranged in piles according to the indicated first preferences—one pile for each candidate or proposition. The number of ballots in each pile is then recorded for the tellers’ report. These piles remain identified with the names of the same candidates or propositions throughout the counting procedure until all but one are eliminated as described below. If more than half of the ballots show one candidate or proposition indicated as first choice, that choice has a majority in the ordinary sense and the candidate is elected or the proposition is decided upon. But if there is no such majority, candidates or propositions are eliminated one by one, beginning with the least popular, until one prevails, as follows:

45:64 The ballots in the thinnest pile—that is, those containing the name designated as first choice by the fewest number of voters—are redistributed into the other piles according to the names marked as second choice on these ballots. The number of ballots in each remaining pile after this distribution is again recorded. If more than half of the ballots are now in one pile, that candidate or proposition is elected or decided upon. If not, the next least popular candidate or proposition is similarly eliminated, by taking the thinnest remaining pile and redistributing its ballots according to their second choices into the other piles, except that, if the name eliminated in the last distribution is indicated as second choice on a ballot, that ballot is placed according to its third choice. Again the number of ballots in each existing pile is recorded, and, if necessary, the process is repeated—by redistributing each time the ballots in the thinnest remaining pile, according to the marked second choice or most-preferred choice among those not yet eliminated—until one pile contains more than half of the ballots, the result being thereby determined.

45:65 The tellers’ report consists of a table listing all candidates or propositions, with the number of ballots that were in each pile after each successive distribution.

45:66 If a ballot having one or more names not marked with any numeral comes up for placement at any stage of the counting and all of its marked names have been eliminated, it is not placed in any pile, but instead is set aside. If at any point two or more candidates or propositions are tied for the least popular position, the ballots in their piles are redistributed in a single step, all of the tied names being treated as eliminated. In the event of a tie in the winning position—which would imply that the elimination process is continued until the ballots are reduced to two or more equal piles—the election is resolved in favor of the candidate or proposition that was strongest in terms of first choices (by referring to the record of the first distribution).

45:67 If more than one person is to be elected to the same type of office—for example, if three members of a board are to be chosen—the voters can indicate their order of preference among the names in a single list of candidates, just as if only one was to be elected. The counting procedure is the same as described above, except that it is continued until all but the necessary number of candidates have been eliminated (that is, in the example, all but three).

45:68 When this or any other system of preferential voting is to be used, the voting and counting procedure must be precisely established in advance and should be prescribed in detail. The members must be thoroughly instructed as to how to mark the ballot, and should have sufficient understanding of the counting process to enable them to have confidence in the method. Sometimes, for instance, voters decline to indicate a second or other choice, mistakenly believing that such a course increases the chances of their first choice. In fact, it may prevent any candidate from receiving a majority and require the voting to be repeated. The persons selected as tellers must perform their work with particular care.

The system of preferential voting just described should not be used in cases where it is possible to follow the normal procedure of repeated balloting until one candidate or proposition attains a majority. Although this type of preferential ballot is preferable to an election by plurality, it affords less freedom of choice than repeated balloting, because it denies voters the opportunity of basing their second or lesser choices on the results of earlier ballots, and because the candidate or proposition in last place is automatically eliminated and may thus be prevented from becoming a compromise choice.

45:70 Proxy Voting. A proxy is a power of attorney given by one person to another to vote in his stead; the term also designates the person who holds the power of attorney. Proxy voting is not permitted in ordinary deliberative assemblies unless the laws of the state in which the society is incorporated require it, or the charter or bylaws of the organization provide for it. Ordinarily it should neither be allowed nor required, because proxy voting is incompatible with the essential characteristics of a deliberative assembly in which membership is individual, personal, and nontransferable. In a stock corporation, on the other hand, where the ownership is transferable, the voice and vote of the member also is transferable, by use of a proxy. But in a nonstock corporation, where membership is usually on the same basis as in an unincorporated, voluntary association, voting by proxy should not be permitted unless the state’s corporation law—as applying to nonstock corporations—absolutely requires it.

If the law under which an organization is incorporated allows proxy voting to be prohibited by a provision of the bylaws, the adoption of this book as parliamentary authority by prescription in the bylaws should be treated as sufficient provision to accomplish that result (cf. 56:49n1).

45:72 Straw Polls Not in Order. A motion to take an informal straw poll to “test the water” is not in order because it neither adopts nor rejects a measure and hence is meaningless and dilatory. If the assembly wishes to discuss and take a vote on a matter without the vote constituting final action by the assembly, it may instead vote to go into a committee of the whole or a quasi committee of the whole (52). Under these procedures, the assembly considers the matter as would a committee, and its vote while in committee of the whole (or quasi committee of the whole) serves only as a recommendation to the assembly, which the assembly is free to reject just as would be the case with regard to the report of any ordinary committee.
Footnotes to Chapter XIII

1. In the case of a body having a fixed membership—for example, a permanent board—it is also possible to define a voting requirement as a majority of the fixed membership, which is greater than a majority of the entire membership if there are vacancies on the board. Thus, in a board whose membership is fixed at 12, if 2 members have died and their successors have not been named, a majority of the entire membership is 6, and a majority of the fixed membership is 7. Where a majority of the fixed membership is required for a decision, the body cannot act if half or more of the membership positions are vacant.

2. It should be noted that if, without the chair’s vote, the number of negative votes is one more than half the number of affirmative votes, the chair’s vote cannot affect the result. Thus, if there are 60 in the affirmative and 31 in the negative without the chair’s vote, and he were to vote in the affirmative, the resulting 61 in the affirmative would still fall short of two thirds of the total vote of 92.

3. In some organizations—particularly secret societies—the use of black and white balls, deposited in a box out of sight of all but the voter, with a white ball signifying a yes vote and a black one a no vote, may be directed as a method of balloting. This method is used principally on voting on the admission of candidates to membership where one or very few negative votes are to be sufficient to cause a candidate’s rejection. This custom, however, is apparently declining.
NOMINATIONS AND ELECTIONS

§46. NOMINATIONS AND ELECTIONS

Nominations

46:1 A nomination is, in effect, a proposal to fill the blank in an assumed motion “that ______ be elected” to the specified position. In choosing someone to fill an office or other elective position in a society or assembly, a more effective freedom of choice is maintained through the practice of nominating persons for the office, rather than moving that a given person be elected as in the older British procedure. Hence, a form of ballot on which provision is made for voting “for” or “against” a candidate or candidates, as distinguished from a motion, is not proper. Since such a ballot is improper, in order to defeat a candidate for an office it is necessary to vote for an opposing candidate, thus avoiding the anomaly of an assembly refusing to elect anyone to an office.

46:2 Strictly speaking, nominations are not necessary when an election is by ballot or roll call, since each member is free to vote for any eligible person, whether he has been nominated or not. In most societies, however, it is impractical to proceed to an election without first making nominations. While members are always free to “write in,” on a ballot, the name of an eligible person who has not been nominated, or to vote for an eligible non-nominee during a roll-call vote, under normal conditions it is likely that most members will confine their choice to the nominees. Without nominations, voting might have to be repeated many times before a candidate achieved the required majority.

46:3 Methods of nomination are: (a) by the chair; (b) from the floor (sometimes called “open nominations”); (c) by a committee; (d) by ballot; (e) by mail; and (f) by petition. If no method of nominating has been specified in the bylaws and if the assembly has adopted no rule on the subject, any member can make a motion prescribing the method (31).

46:4 As the following descriptions of the six methods of nomination indicate, not all of them are appropriate or desirable in average societies. The order in which they are listed corresponds to that in which they would be voted on if all six were proposed in motions prescribing the method of nomination.

46:5 Nominations by the Chair. At a mass meeting it is a common practice to have the chairman nominated by the person who was designated to call the meeting to order, but an organized society should adopt other methods of nominating for office. The chair, however, can make nominations for committee membership and similar positions (an exception being made in the case of the nominating committee), as may be provided in the bylaws or by the adoption of a motion.

46:6 Nominations from the Floor. Under the procedure of nominations from the floor, the chair calls for nominations at the time established by rule or custom of the organization or assembly—which may be while the election is pending or earlier, but in any case is subsequent to the report of the nominating committee if there is such a committee. Unless the bylaws or a special rule of order provides otherwise, the chair must call for further nominations at the session at which the election is held even if nominations were called for at a previous session. A member need not be recognized by the chair to make a nomination unless he or she wishes to speak in debate on it at the same time (see 46:27–29). In a large meeting or convention a member should rise when making a nomination from the floor, but in small assemblies nominations frequently are made by members from their seats. No second is required, but sometimes one or more members will second a nomination to indicate endorsement. Where more than one person is to be elected to an office, such as to a board of directors or trustees, or to a position, such as to a committee, no one may nominate more than one person for the office or position, if an objection is made, until every member wishing to nominate has had an opportunity to do so. In no event may a member nominate more persons than there are places to fill.

46:7 The same person can be nominated for more than one office, even if voting for all offices is to take place at the same time on a single ballot. If one person is elected to more than one office under these conditions, the case is resolved as described in the second paragraph of 46:31(1).

46:8 If there is no nominating committee and nominations are to be from the floor, the chair calls for them by saying, for example, “Nominations are now in order for the office of President.” If there is a nominating committee, the chair calls for nominations as shown in 46:19. When the presiding officer has called for nominations from the floor, a member rises and makes a nomination as follows:

MEMBER: I nominate Mr. A. [Or, in a large assembly, “Mr. President, I nominate Mr. A.”]

CHAIR: Mr. A is nominated. Are there any further nominations [or “any further nominations for the office of President”]?

The chair repeats each nomination in this way until all nominations for the office have been made. (For the procedure for closing nominations, see 46:20.) Nominations for the different offices are thus called for in the order in which the offices are listed in the bylaws.

46:9 Nominations by a Committee. In the election of officers of an ordinary society, nominations often are made by a nominating committee. Usually in such cases a nominating committee is chosen in advance to submit nominations for the various offices for which elections are to be held at the annual meeting.

46:10 Designation of the nominating committee. The nominating committee should be elected by the organization wherever possible, or else by its executive board. Although in organizing a new society it may be feasible for the chair to appoint the nominating committee, in an organized society the president should not appoint this committee or be a member of it—ex officio or otherwise. The bylaws may provide that “the President shall appoint all committees except the Nominating Committee…” and that “the President shall be ex officio a member of all committees except the Nominating Committee…”; the exception should not be omitted in either case.

46:11 Nominees. Although it is not common for the nominating committee to nominate more than one candidate for any office, the committee can do so unless the bylaws prohibit it. It is usually not sound to require the committee to nominate more than one candidate for each office, since the committee can easily circumvent such a provision by nominating only one person who has any chance of being elected (see also 56:25).

46:12 Members of the nominating committee are not barred from becoming nominees for office themselves. To make such a requirement would mean, first, that service on the nominating committee carried a penalty by depriving its members of one of their privileges; and second, that appointment or election to the nominating committee could be used to prevent a member from becoming a nominee.

46:13 It is desirable policy for the nominating committee, before making its report, to contact each person whom it wishes to nominate, in order to obtain his acceptance of nomination—that is, his assurance that he will serve in the specified office if elected. The bylaws can make such a practice mandatory.

46:14 Report of the nominating committee. The time at which the nominating committee’s report is made is a matter to be determined by rule or established custom of the particular organization—depending on its own conditions. In some societies this report is not formally presented to the voting body until the election is pending; but in any organization where advance interest in the election may develop, the nominations submitted by the committee should be made known to the membership earlier. These nominations can be sent to all members, for example, several days before the regular meeting—usually the election meeting itself—at which the chair calls for additional nominations from the floor (see below). The report should always be formally presented at a regular meeting, even if the names of the committee’s nominees have been transmitted to the members of the society beforehand. Sometimes—in societies that hold frequent regular meetings—the nominating committee’s report is presented at the regular meeting preceding the annual meeting (9) at which the election is to take place.
When the nominating committee is called upon for its report at a meeting, its chairman rises and presents the report as follows:

NOMINATING COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN: Mr. President, the Nominating Committee submits the following nominations: For President, Mr. A [or “John A”]; for Vice-President, Mr. B; for Secretary, Mr. C;… [and so on for each office to be filled, naming the nominees in the order in which the offices are listed in the bylaws].

A minority within a nominating committee, as a group, may propose other nominees for some or all of the offices in any case where nominations from the floor are permitted.

A nominating committee is automatically discharged when its report is formally presented to the assembly, although if one of the nominees withdraws before the election, the committee is revived and should meet immediately to agree upon another nomination if there is time.

Call by the chair for further nominations from the floor. After the nominating committee has presented its report and before voting for the different offices takes place, the chair must call for further nominations from the floor. This is another stage of nomination and election procedure for which a number of details should be established by rule or custom of the particular organization. In many organizations, nominations from the floor are called for immediately after the presentation of the nominating committee’s report—while the election is pending or earlier. Note that the chair must call for further nominations at the session at which the election is held even if nominations from the floor were called for at a previous session. When the calling for nominations from the floor is about to begin, if some time has elapsed since the presentation of the nominating committee’s report, the complete list of the committee’s nominations should be read again before further nominations are called for. In any case, if the nominating committee has for any reason failed to make its report at the appropriate time, this does not prevent the assembly from proceeding to nominations from the floor.

46:19 In some organizations all nominations from the floor are completed and nominations are closed for each office before voting for any office takes place. In other organizations, when nominations for one office have been completed, votes are cast for that office and the result is announced before the chair calls for nominations for the next office (see also 46:31). If the organization has no rule on the subject, a custom based on its own conditions may determine which of the two procedures is used (see 2:25) or this may be decided by a motion (31). In either case, the different offices are taken in the order in which they are listed in the bylaws. The chair, as he calls for nominations, first repeats the name that was submitted by the nominating committee, thus:

CHAIR: For President, Mr. A is nominated by the Nominating Committee. Are there any further nominations for President? [If a member nominates another person, the chair repeats the name of that nominee.] Mr. N is nominated. Are there any further nominations?

46:20 When it appears that no one else wishes to make a nomination, the chair again asks if there are any further nominations; and if there is no response, he normally declares that nominations (for that office) are closed, without waiting for a motion to that effect, as follows:

CHAIR: Are there any further nominations for President?… [Pause.] If not… [pause], nominations are closed. [Or, “Without objection,… nominations are closed.”] (For use of the motion to close nominations, which requires a two-thirds vote, see 31.) After nominations have been closed, they can be reopened by a majority vote.

46:21 After nominations have been closed, voting for that office takes place, or nominations for the next office are called for by the chair, depending on the procedure being followed by the particular organization.

46:22 Nominations by Ballot. The object of a nominating ballot is to provide the members with an indication of the sentiments of the voting body, which they may take into account in voting in the election. The value of the nominating ballot is that it shows the preferences without electing anyone. The nominating ballot is conducted in the same way as an ordinary electing ballot except that everyone receiving a vote is nominated; the tellers’ report, therefore, does not state the number of votes necessary for nomination. Since each member has the opportunity to nominate on his ballot a candidate for every office, he does not have the right then to make nominations from the floor, unless the assembly by a majority vote authorizes such nominations.

46:23 Impropriety of making the nominating ballot the electing ballot. Sometimes a motion is made to declare the nominating ballot the electing ballot. Such action negates all the advantages of a nominating ballot and is, in effect, the same as having an electing ballot without any nominations. If there is to be only one ballot, it should be the electing ballot, with nominations from the floor, or by a nominating committee and from the floor. A nominating ballot cannot take the place of an electing ballot in an organization whose bylaws require elections to be held by ballot.

46:24 Impropriety of limiting voting in the election to the two leading candidates. In some organizations using the nominating ballot, an attempt is made to limit the voting on the electing ballot to the two nominees for each office receiving the highest number of votes on the nominating ballot. This—or any attempt to limit the number of candidates for an office to two, by whatever method they are nominated—is an unfortunate practice and should be discouraged. Often the two leading candidates for a position will represent two different factions, and division within the organization may be deepened by limiting the election to them. On the other hand, it may be possible to unite the members if the assembly has the choice of a compromise candidate.

46:25 Nominations by Mail. In organizations whose membership is widely scattered, the method of nominating by mail is often adopted. In such a case a nominating ballot can be prepared, deposited, and counted in the same way as an electing ballot—with the secretary of the organization mailing to every member a nominating ballot, plus instructions for completing and returning it as described in 45:57–61. Or, in some organizations, a blank on which each member can submit the names of desired nominees, in a signed ballot, is used instead of a secret nominating ballot.

46:26 Nominations by Petition. The bylaws may provide that a member shall be a nominee upon the petition of a specified number of members. Sometimes, a nominating petition blank is sent to the members with a copy of the list of nominees submitted by a nominating committee. In large state or national societies composed of local units, the blanks are sometimes sent to these units with instructions for their distribution or processing.

46:27 Debate on Nominations. In large conventions, nominations are sometimes accompanied by a speech advocating the nominee’s election. The nomination may then be seconded by one or more members also making speeches. In ordinary societies, however, such speeches are less common.

46:28 To give a nominating or seconding speech, a member must first be recognized by the chair while the floor is open for nominations. The member may then nominate a candidate and, without waiting for the chair to state the nomination, speak in favor of the candidate, or he or she may speak in favor of a candidate who was nominated previously. If candidates are members of the organization, speakers must exercise caution to avoid making any personal criticisms of them in debate. Rather than attacking a nominee, a speaker may advocate the election of a rival candidate. By a two-thirds vote, the assembly may adopt a motion limiting debate to any extent desired (15).

46:29 Some organizations adopt rules specifying that debate on nominations be conducted at a different time or in a different manner. Such a rule might, for example, allot each candidate (or his or her designee) equal time to state the candidate’s credentials and to argue for the candidate’s election.
Elections

46:30 In an assembly or organization that does not have a rule or established custom prescribing the method of voting in elections, the voting can be by any of the accepted methods. While some form of election by ballot is generally appropriate in organized societies, each assembly should adopt—and each society should prescribe in its bylaws—the procedure best suited to its purposes and needs. Where there is no determining rule, a motion to fix the method of voting (or any other detail of nomination or election procedure) is an incidental main motion if made before the election is pending, or an incidental motion if made while the election is pending (30, 31). Such a motion can be offered containing a blank so that different methods are voted on in succession; or the chair can take votes on the methods in this way, assuming the motion, if no member objects. In the absence of a rule establishing the method of voting, the rule that is established by custom, if any, is followed, unless the assembly, by adoption of an incidental motion or incidental main motion, agrees to do otherwise.

46:31 Ballot Election. Two alternative procedures for the sequence of nominating and voting in elections by ballot can be prescribed or adopted, as mentioned above. The first method requires the least time, while the second affords greater flexibility in choosing officers. These procedures are as follows:

1) All nominations can be completed before any balloting takes place—in which case voting for all offices is commonly done by a single ballot. This method is suitable for use in conventions where voting takes place at a “polling place” apart from the convention meetings. It may also be a preferred method in any large meeting where the time required for balloting is an important consideration. The elections should take place early in such a meeting, to allow time for any necessary additional balloting for any office for which no candidate receives a vote sufficient for election. Votes can be cast for any person who is eligible for election, even if he has not been nominated. The procedure followed in balloting, in counting the votes, and in reporting the results is described in 45:18–43. The tellers prepare a tellers’ report for each office involved, in the form shown in 45:37. When these reports are completed for all offices, the chairman of tellers, after reading them to the assembly, submits them to the chair, who, as he reads each one of them again, declares the result for that office. In each case where a candidate has a majority, the chair declares that candidate elected. For offices for which no candidate has a majority, the chair announces, “no election.” When the tellers’ reports for all offices have thus been read, the chair directs that new ballots be distributed for those offices for which no candidate attained a majority (see also below).

When voting for multiple offices by a single ballot, the members are not able to take the result for one office into account when voting for another office. For this reason, a candidate is never deemed elected to more than one office by a single ballot unless the motion or rules governing the election specifically provide for such simultaneous election. When there is no such provision, a candidate who receives a majority for more than one office on a single ballot must, if present, choose which one of the offices he will accept; if he is absent, the assembly decides by a ballot vote the office to be assigned to him. This question, which is debatable, requires a majority vote for adoption. The assembly then ballots again to fill the other office(s). (The assembly is free, however, to elect the same person to another office on a subsequent ballot, unless the bylaws prohibit a person from holding both offices simultaneously.)

2) Under the usual form of the second election procedure, balloting for each office immediately follows nominations from the floor for that office. The ballots are counted for one office and the result of that election is announced—after repeated balloting, if necessary—before the next office to be voted on is opened to nominations from the floor. The members are thus able to take into account the results for the offices voted on first, in deciding upon both nominations and votes for the later offices. Under this method the ballots normally consist of small slips of blank paper handed out by the tellers as each ballot is taken—on which voters write the name of the candidate of their choice (who need not have been nominated). This method is generally practical only in assemblies small enough that the votes from each balloting can be counted while the meeting briefly pauses—usually without recessing or proceeding to other business, although it can do either of these things if it wishes.

46:32 Whichever one of the preceding methods of election is used, if any office remains unfilled after the first ballot, the balloting is repeated for that office as many times as necessary to obtain a majority vote for a single candidate. When repeated balloting for an office is necessary, individuals are never removed from candidacy on the next ballot unless they voluntarily withdraw—which they are not obligated to do. The candidate in lowest place may turn out to be a “dark horse” on whom all factions may prefer to agree.

46:33 In an election of members of a board or committee in which votes are cast in one section of the ballot for multiple positions on the board or committee, every ballot with a vote in that section for one or more candidates is counted as one vote cast, and a candidate must receive a majority of the total of such votes to be elected. If more candidates receive such a majority vote than there are positions to fill, then the chair declares the candidates elected in order of their vote totals, starting with the candidate who received the largest number of votes and continuing until every position is filled. If, during this process, a tie arises involving more candidates than there are positions remaining to be filled, then the candidates who are tied, as well as all other nominees not yet elected, remain as candidates for the repeated balloting necessary to fill the remaining position(s). Similarly, if the number of candidates receiving the necessary majority vote is less than the number of positions to be filled, those who have a majority are declared elected, and all other nominees remain as candidates on the next ballot.

46:34 If the multiple positions have varying terms (as may happen when terms are staggered or there is an election to fill the remainder of an unexpired term) and the differing term lengths have not been assigned different sections of the ballot, the longer terms are allocated among those receiving a majority vote in the order in which they obtain greater numbers of votes. If there is a tie, the tied candidates may agree which of them will take a longer term; if they do not agree, the question is put to a vote on the next ballot.

46:35 If the bylaws require the election of officers to be by ballot and there is only one nominee for an office, the ballot must nevertheless be taken for that office unless the bylaws provide for an exception in such a case. In the absence of the latter provision, members still have the right, on the ballot, to cast “write-in votes” for other eligible persons.

46:36 An election by ballot can be conducted by mail if the bylaws
so provide, as explained in 45:57–69. For such an election, however—unless repeated balloting by mail is feasible in cases where no candidate attains a majority—the bylaws should authorize the use of some form of preferential voting or should provide that a plurality shall elect, and should provide for a method of selection if there is a tie.

46:37 Viva-Voce Election. The viva-voce method of election finds application principally in mass meetings—or when an election is not strongly contested and the bylaws do not require election by ballot.

46:38 When there is more than one nominee for a given office in a viva-voce election—or in an election by rising vote or by show of hands—the candidates are voted on in the order in which they were nominated. When the nominations have ended, the chair repeats the nominations and continues:

CHAIR: As many as are in favor of Mr. A for President say aye.... Those opposed say no.... The ayes have it and Mr. A is elected President.

If the noes are in the majority the wording is:

CHAIR: The noes have it and Mr. A is not elected. Those in favor of Mr. B [the next nominee] say aye.... Those opposed say no....

As soon as one of the nominees receives a majority vote, the chair declares him elected and no votes are taken on the remaining nominees for that office. The other officers are elected in the same way. When a number of members are to be elected to identical offices in the nature of a single office held by more than one person—as, for example, in electing four directors—the same procedure is followed; when four have received a majority, the voting ceases.
46:39 It will be seen that, under the procedure just described, it is necessary for members wishing to vote for a later nominee to vote against an earlier one. This fact gives an undue advantage to earlier nominees and, accordingly, a voice vote is not a generally suitable method for electing the officers of organized societies.

46:40 If only one person is nominated and the bylaws do not require that a ballot vote be taken, the chair, after ensuring that, in fact, no members present wish to make further nominations, simply declares that the nominee is elected, thus effecting the election by unanimous consent or “acclamation.” The motion to close nominations cannot be used as a means of moving the election of the candidate in such a case.

46:41 The assembly cannot make valid a viva-voce election if the bylaws require the election to be by ballot.

46:42 Roll-Call Election. Although unusual, an election can be held by roll call. Either the first or second procedure described in 46:31 for election by ballot can be generally followed, and the member (or the chairman of a delegation, as the case may be), when called upon, declares his vote or the votes of the members of his delegation for each office to be filled. The secretary records the vote(s) and then repeats them to be sure of their accurate recordation.

46:43 Cumulative Voting. For ballot or roll-call elections of boards, committees, delegates, or other positions held by more than one individual, the bylaws may provide for cumulative voting. In this form of voting, each member is entitled to cast one vote for each position, so that if, for example, three directors are to be elected, each member may cast three votes. These votes may all be cast for one, two, or three candidates, as the voter chooses. A minority group, by coordinating its effort in voting for only one candidate who is a member of the group, may be able to secure the election of that candidate as a minority member of the board. However, this method of voting, which permits a member to cast multiple votes for a single candidate, must be viewed with reservation since it violates the fundamental principle of parliamentary law that each member is entitled to one and only one vote on a question.

46:44 Providing for Completion of an Election. An election should be completed at the session at which it is taken up, unless it is impossible or impractical to do so. If an assembly wishes to adjourn when an election is incomplete, an adjoumed meeting (9) should therefore be provided for. If such an adjourned meeting is not provided for and the organization will hold another regular business session before a quarterly time interval has elapsed (see 9:7), the election is taken up automatically at the next regular meeting. (Cf. 14:12.)

46:45 If, for any reason, the assembly does not complete an election at the time for which it was scheduled, it should do so as soon as possible and may do so at any time until the expiration of the term the election is to fill. In the meantime, if the term of office extends until a successor is elected (see 56:28–30) failure to complete an election leaves the incumbent, if any, in office. Otherwise, a vacancy in office arises (see 47:57–58 for procedures for filling vacancies). Once the election is completed, however, the person elected replaces anyone who filled the vacancy. Failure to hold or to complete an election at the scheduled time does not deprive the membership of its right to elect an officer of its choice.

46:46 Time at Which an Election Takes Effect. An election to an office becomes final immediately if the candidate is present and does not decline, or if he is absent but has consented to his candidacy. If he is absent and has not consented to his candidacy, the election becomes final when he is notified of his election, provided that he does not immediately decline. If he does decline, the election is incomplete, and another vote can be taken immediately or at the next meeting without further notice. After an election has become final as stated in this paragraph, it is too late to reconsider (37) the vote on the election.

46:47 An officer-elect takes possession of his office immediately upon his election’s becoming final, unless the bylaws or other rules specify a later time (see 56:27). If a formal installation ceremony is prescribed, failure to hold it does not affect the time at which the new officers assume office.

46:48 Contesting the Announced Result of an Election.
Depending on the circumstances, the voting body may be able to order a recount if an election was conducted by ballot (see 45:41), roll-call vote (see 45:54), or counted vote (see the last sentence of 45:15). In the case of a roll-call vote, a recapitulation may be possible (see 45:51). It may be possible, under some circumstances, to order that the election be voted on again by another method (see Retaking a Vote, 30:6).

46:49 Otherwise, an election may be contested only by raising a point of order. The general rule is that such a point of order must be timely, as described in 23:5. If an election is disputed on the ground that a quorum was not present, the provisions in the last sentence of 40:12 apply. Other exceptions to the general timeliness requirement are those that come within the five categories listed in 23:6, in which cases a point of order can be made at any time during the continuance in office of the individual declared elected. For example:

a) If an individual does not meet the qualifications for the post established in the bylaws, his or her election is tantamount to adoption of a main motion that conflicts with the bylaws.
b) If there was a previously valid election for the same term, the subsequent election of another is the adoption of a main motion conflicting with one still in force.
c) If the votes of nonmembers or absentees in the election affect the result, action has been taken in violation of the fundamental principle of parliamentary law that the right to vote is limited to the members of an organization who are actually present at the time the vote is taken.
d) If an election to fill a vacancy is held without required previous notice, action has been taken in violation of a rule protecting the rights of absentees.
e) If a number of members sufficient to affect the result are improperly prevented from voting in an election, action has been taken in violation of a rule protecting a basic right of the individual member.

46:50 Because the voting body itself is the ultimate judge of election disputes, only that body has the authority to resolve them in the absence of a bylaw or special rule of order that specifically grants another body that authority. Thus, for example, when an election has been conducted at a membership meeting or in a convention of delegates, an executive board, even one that is given full power and authority over the society’s affairs between meetings of the body that conducted the election, may not entertain a point of order challenging, or direct a recount concerning, the announced election result. While an election dispute is immediately pending before the voting body, however, it may vote to refer the dispute to a committee or board to which it delegates power to resolve the dispute.
Footnotes to Chapter XIV

1. An organization could suspend the rules, or adopt a special rule of order, so that the nominee with the fewest votes is dropped from the list of nominees for succeeding ballots in the expectation that voters will then confine their choice to the remaining nominees. Only a bylaws provision, however, could make the dropped nominee ineligible for election so as to render illegal any subsequent votes cast for that nominee. (See 46:2.)
§47. OFFICERS

47:1 As stated in 3:6, the minimum essential officers for the conduct of business in any deliberative assembly are a presiding officer and a secretary or clerk. The usual duties of these and other officers generally required in an organized society are summarized and discussed in this section. Every society should specify in its bylaws what officers it requires, how they shall be elected or appointed, their term of office, and any qualifications for holding office or any duties different from or in addition to those stated in the parliamentary authority.
Principles Applying to Holding of Office

47:2 In most societies it is usual to elect the officers from among the members; but in all except secret societies, unless the bylaws provide otherwise, it is possible for an organization to choose its officers from outside its membership. In many legislative bodies the presiding officer is not a member of the body. A large society with complex financial affairs may wish to employ a professional as treasurer.

47:3 An office carries with it only the rights necessary for executing the duties of the office, and it does not deprive a member of the society of his rights as a member. If a person holds an office in a society of which he is not a member and the bylaws make that officer an ex-officio member of the board, the nonmember is thereby a full-fledged board member with all the accompanying rights; but this does not make him a member of the society.

47:4 The bylaws may contain a provision that “No person shall be eligible to serve ______ consecutive terms in the same office.” In filling vacancies for unexpired terms, an officer who has served more than half a term in an office is considered to have served a full term. As stated in 46:46–47, the term of office begins as soon as the officer is elected, unless the bylaws establish a different time (see also 56:27).

Elected Officers

47:5 Chairman or President. The presiding officer of an assembly ordinarily is called the chairman\(^1\) when no special title has been assigned, or in a body not permanently organized, such as a mass meeting (53). In organized societies the presiding officer’s title is usually prescribed by the bylaws, that of president being most common. The term the chair refers to the person in a meeting who is actually presiding at the time, whether that person is the regular presiding officer or not. The same term also applies to the presiding officer's station in the hall from which he or she presides, which should not be permitted to be used by other members as a place from which to make reports or speak in debate during a meeting (see also 47:12). In assemblies where committee chairmen or others will require a lectern for their papers, another lectern on the side of the platform or on the floor at the front should be provided so that the chair can maintain his presiding location. For the manner in which the chair should be addressed in a meeting, see 3:10–11.

47:6 The presiding officer of an assembly—especially of a large one—should be chosen principally for the ability to preside. This person should be well versed in parliamentary law and should be thoroughly familiar with the bylaws and other rules of the organization—even if he or she is to have the assistance of a parliamentarian. At the same time, any presiding officer will do well to bear in mind that no rules can take the place of tact and common sense on the part of the chairman.

47:7 Duties of the presiding officer of an assembly. The principal duties of the presiding officer of an assembly under parliamentary law are listed below—with references, where appropriate, to fuller descriptions elsewhere in this book. Additional information relating to the duties of the chair in particular cases will be found in the treatment of the subjects involved. It is the duty of the presiding officer of an assembly:

1) To open the meeting at the appointed time by taking the chair and calling the meeting to order (3:15), having ascertained that a quorum is present (3:3–4; 40).

2) To announce in proper sequence the business that comes before the assembly or becomes in order in accordance with the prescribed order of business, agenda, or program, and with existing orders of the day (41).

3) To recognize members who are entitled to the floor (3:30–35; 42).

4) To state and to put to vote all questions that legitimately come before the assembly as motions or that otherwise arise in the course of proceedings (except questions that relate to the presiding officer himself in the manner noted below), and to announce the result of each vote (4); or, if a motion that is not in order is made, to rule that it is not in order (although this may be avoided if the chair can suggest an alternative that is in order which the maker agrees to offer instead; see 4:16–18). (For a discussion of the circumstances under which the chair votes, see 44:12–13. See also the discussion of unanimous consent, 4:58–63.)

5) To protect the assembly from obviously dilatory motions by refusing to recognize them (39).

6) To enforce the rules relating to debate and those relating to order and decorum within the assembly (3:9–13; 4:27–32; 43).

7) To expedite business in every way compatible with the rights of members.

8) To decide all questions of order (23), subject to appeal (24)—unless, when in doubt, the presiding officer prefers initially to submit such a question to the assembly for decision.

9) To respond to inquiries of members relating to parliamentary procedure (Parliamentary Inquiry, 33:3–5) or factual information (Request for Information, 33:6–10) bearing on the business of the assembly.

10) To authenticate by his or her signature, when necessary, all acts, orders, and proceedings of the assembly.

11) To declare the meeting adjourned when the assembly so votes or—where applicable—at the time prescribed in the program, or at any time in the event of a sudden emergency affecting the safety of those present (8, 21).

47:8 At each meeting, in addition to the necessary papers proper to that meeting’s business, the presiding officer should have at hand:

• a copy of the bylaws and other rules of the organization;
• a copy of its parliamentary authority (that is, this book, if it is prescribed in the bylaws);
• a list of all standing and special committees and their members; and
• a memorandum of the complete order of business listing all known matters that are to come up, shown in proper sequence under the correct headings—or with their scheduled times—as applicable.

47:9 Except in a small board or a committee, the presiding officer should stand while calling a meeting to order or declaring it adjourned, and while putting a question to vote. He should also stand—without leaving the chair—while explaining his reasons for a ruling on a point of order (if the explanation entails more than a few words) or when speaking during debate on an appeal or a point of order that he has submitted to the judgment of the assembly (23, 24). When speaking for the first time during debate in either of the latter two cases, he can do so in preference to other members (see 23:2(5), 23:19, and 24:3(5)). While a member is speaking in debate on any question, the presiding officer should remain seated—unless the view between him and the members would be obstructed, in which case he should step back slightly during the member’s speech. At times other than those just mentioned, the presiding officer can stand or sit as he finds convenient for commanding the assembly’s attention, preserving order, etc.—provided that his station is arranged so that even when seated he can see
Whenever a motion is made that refers only to the presiding officer in a capacity not shared in common with other members, or that commends or censures him with others, he should turn the chair over to the vice-president or appropriate temporary occupant (see below) during the assembly’s consideration of that motion, just as he would in a case where he wishes to take part in debate (see also 43:29–30). The chair, however, should not hesitate to put the question on a motion to elect officers or appoint delegates or a committee even if he is included.

Temporary occupants of the chair. If it is necessary for the president to vacate the chair during a meeting, or if the president is absent, the chair is occupied temporarily by another—who also must not be precluded from presiding by any of the impediments mentioned in the preceding paragraph—as follows:

1) A vice-president. If the president for any reason vacates the chair or is absent, the vice-president or first vice-president takes the chair unless he also, because of involvement in the debate or for any other reason, is disqualified from presiding in the particular case; and if the first vice-president is absent or must disqualify himself, the duty of presiding devolves on the other vice-presidents in order. For this reason, the bylaws should number the vice-presidencies if there are more than one, and persons should be elected to specific positions. It should be noted, however, that if the bylaws provide for a president-elect, they usually provide also that the president-elect shall precede the first vice-president in the right to preside.

2) An appointed chairman pro tem. If the president vacates the chair during a meeting and no vice-president is available, he can, subject to the approval of the assembly, as explained in 43:29(b), appoint a temporary chairman who is called the chairman pro tempore, or chairman pro tem. The return of the president, the arrival of a vice-president, or the first adjournment puts an end to this appointment, and the assembly can terminate it even earlier by the adoption of a motion to “declare the chair vacant and proceed to elect a new chairman” (see 62:11). The regular presiding officer, knowing that he will be absent from a future meeting, cannot in advance authorize another member to preside in his place.

3) An elected chairman pro tem. If neither the president nor any vice-president is present, the secretary—or in the secretary’s absence some other member—calls the meeting to order, and the assembly immediately elects a chairman pro tem to preside during that session. Such office is terminated by the entrance of the president or a vice-president, or by the adoption of a motion to “declare the chair vacant and proceed to elect a new chairman” (see 62:11). If the assembly is to elect a chairman pro tem to hold office beyond the current session (in the event that the president and the vice-presidents are unable to perform their duties for that length of time), notice must be given at the preceding meeting or in the call of the meeting at which such election is held.

47:12 The practice in some organizations of permitting the chairman of a committee to preside over the assembly or put questions to vote during the presentation and consideration of the committee’s report violates numerous principles of parliamentary law relating to the chair’s appearance of impartiality and the inappropriateness of his entering into debate, not to speak of the regular presiding officer’s duty to
Invited temporary presiding officer. In certain instances in an ordinary society—for example, if an adjourned meeting or a special meeting (9) must deal with a problem that has intensely divided the organization—it may be that such a meeting can accomplish more under the chairmanship of an invited nonmember who is skilled in presiding. (Sometimes this may be a professional presiding officer.) If the president and vice-president(s) do not object, the assembly, by majority vote, can adopt an incidental main motion to effect such an arrangement for all or part of a session. This motion is a question of privilege affecting the assembly (19). Alternatively, the rules may be suspended to authorize this type of temporary appointment, even over the objection of the president or a vice-president. Cf. 62:13–14.

Suggestions for inexperienced presiding officers. The larger the assembly, the more readily it will detect the slightest weakness in a presiding officer. Efforts to capitalize on any such failing may follow with sometimes disastrous results. It is often said that knowledge is strength, and certainly that is true in this case. The presiding officer should be thoroughly familiar with the duties of the presiding officer of an assembly, as stated in 47:7–10, and should have with him the documents listed in 47:8. There is no acceptable alternative to parliamentary procedure for the conduct of business in a deliberative assembly; yet many presiding officers try to get along with a minimum of knowledge. This approach inevitably results in signs of unsureness.

A presiding officer should make every effort to know more parliamentary procedure than other members. A good first step is to read through Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised In Brief—a concise introductory guide prepared by the authors... of this book and fully compatible with it—paying particular attention to Chapter 15 (“President or Vice-President”). A presiding officer should also at least become familiar with 1 through 9 of this book and memorize the list of motions on page t4, in their order of precedence. The chair should be able to refer to the table of rules relating to motions on pages t6–t33 quickly enough that there will be no delay in deciding all points contained there. These steps are simple and will enable a president to master parliamentary procedure more quickly. As more difficult points arise, a careful reading of the detailed treatment of such points in the body of this book will make them readily understood and mastered.

47:16 The presiding officer must not permit members to press on so rapidly that the parliamentary steps are abridged or go unobserved. When a motion is made, he must not recognize any member or allow anyone to speak until the motion is seconded (where that is required) and he has stated the question.

47:17 The chair should take special care to make sure that the members always understand what is the immediately pending business—the exact question to be voted on the next time a vote is taken. Failure of presiding officers to do so is one of the greatest causes of confusion in meetings. The chair should carefully follow the directions for stating a question on a motion or resolution given in 4:15. Particularly in stating the question on an unwritten motion, the chair should always say, “It is moved and seconded that” and then give the precise words of the motion fully, no matter how clearly the motion may have been framed when moved by its maker. The chair should never try to avoid this critically important duty by saying, “You have heard the motion” or by saying, “The motion is moved and seconded” without repeating its words. The chair must be careful to be exact in stating any proposed amendment so as to make clear the effect its adoption would have on the motion to be amended. After the vote on an amendment, he should fully restate that motion as it stands as a result of the amendment’s adoption or failure (see 12:33–40). Above all, just before the vote, the chair must make clear the precise question the assembly is to decide. It is far better to risk taxing the patience of an assembly by repeating the wording of a motion on which all may be clear, than to risk taking a vote whose effect may be unclear to even a few members.

47:18 When a vote is taken, the result should be announced and also what question, if any, is then pending, before any member who addresses the chair is recognized. In a large assembly where a microphone is required, the chair should insist that a member go to it and identify himself. This brief delay is often very salutary in quieting heated feelings. Efforts to abbreviate the requirements of parliamentary procedure often signal an effort to substitute the member’s will for the parliamentary leadership of the presiding officer. A not uncommon instance of this kind is described in 42:13(1), where a member attempts quickly to obtain the floor to offer a motion in competition with one arranged by the officers to be offered by another member. Firmness and, at the same time, calm insistence on the regular order is a technique essential to the development of a skilled presiding officer.

47:19 While a commanding presence and knowledge are essential in procedural matters, the president of an ordinary deliberative assembly, especially a large one, should, of all the members, have the least to say upon the substance of pending questions. While providing strong leadership, he should be fair. He should never get excited; he should never be unjust to even the most troublesome member, or take advantage of such member’s lack of knowledge of parliamentary law, even though a temporary good might be accomplished thereby. The president should never be technical or more strict than is necessary for the good of the meeting. Good judgment is essential; the assembly may be of such a nature, through its unfamiliarity with parliamentary usage and its peaceable disposition, that strict enforcement of the rules, instead of assisting, would greatly hinder business. But in large assemblies where there is much work to be done, and especially where there is likelihood of trouble, the only safe course is to require a strict observance of the rules.

47:20 Administrative duties of the president of a society. All of the duties of the presiding officer described above relate to the function of presiding over the assembly at its meetings. In addition, in many organized societies, the president has duties as an administrative or executive officer; but these are outside the scope of parliamentary law, and the president has such authority only insofar as the bylaws provide it. In some organizations, the president is responsible for appointing, and is ex officio a member of, all committees (with the exception of the nominating committee, which should be expressly excluded from such a provision, and with the further possible exception of all disciplinary committees; see 56:47). But only when he is so authorized by the bylaws—or, in the case of a particular committee, by vote of the assembly—does he have this authority and status. As an ex-officio member of a committee, the president has the same rights as the other committee members, but is not obligated to attend meetings of the committee and is not counted in determining the number required for a quorum or whether a quorum is present.

47:21 President-Elect. Some organizations desire to elect their president one entire term in advance, and in such cases, during the term following the election, the person chosen is called the president-elect. This office exists only if expressly provided for in the bylaws, in which case the members never vote on any candidate for the office of president, but elect a president-elect and the other officers of the organization. Accordingly, when a member has served his full term as president-elect, he automatically becomes president for a full term. Once a person has been elected president-elect, the assembly cannot alter its decision regarding the succession of that person to the presidency, unless he vacates office during his term as president-elect or unless ground arises for removing him from that office (see 62:16).

47:22 When the bylaws of an organization provide for a president-elect, it is usual to provide also that if the president should be absent, or if the office of the president should become vacant between elections, the president-elect shall preside, if present, or shall fill the vacancy. Unless such provision is made, the first vice-president would preside or complete the president’s term. It is also customary to provide in the bylaws for some method to fill a vacancy in the office of president-elect, should one occur between elections. It is important to consider these provisions with great care. The bylaws can assign the president-elect specific responsibilities.

47:23 Vice-President. In the absence of the president, or when for any reason the president vacates the chair (see 43:29, 47:11, 62:12–14), the vice-president serves in his stead (see the previous paragraph, however, regarding the usual duties of the president-elect in organizations that have one). Thus, it is important to elect a vice-president who is competent to perform the duties of president. When an assembly resolves itself into a committee of the whole, frequently it is the vice-president who is appointed to preside as committee chairman (see 52:2(a), 52:7).
When a vice-president is presiding over the assembly, he or she is addressed as “Mr. President” or “Madam President” (unless confusion might result—for example, when the president is also on the platform—in which case the form “Mr. Vice-President” or “Madam Vice-President” may be used).

Where the bylaws of a state, regional, or national society make the president of each constituent unit automatically a delegate to the society’s convention, the vice-president of a unit serves as the president’s alternate (see 58:12) and usually acts as vice-chairman of the unit’s delegation (see 58:19).

If the bylaws provide that the president shall appoint all committees, this power does not transfer to a vice-president occupying the chair, even when the president is absent (see the second paragraph of 50:13(d)).

The president and vice-president may have occasion to make reports in connection with administrative duties prescribed in the society’s bylaws or other rules (see 48:19). If the president has prepared a report but cannot attend the meeting at which it is to be presented, the vice-president should present it for him. But the vice-president cannot modify the president’s report, or substitute a different one for it, simply because the president is absent.

In case of the president’s resignation, death, or removal, the vice-president automatically becomes president for the remainder of the term, unless the bylaws expressly provide otherwise for filling a vacancy in the office of president (see also 56:32).

Some societies elect several vice-presidents in an order of precedence—first, second, third, and so on—in which case the highest-ranking one present has the duty of serving in place of the president when needed. In case of the president’s resignation, death, or removal, the first vice-president then automatically becomes president (unless, as indicated above, the bylaws expressly provide otherwise for the office of president). Likewise, in case of any vice-president's resignation, death, or removal, or upon his or her automatic promotion to a higher office, the next-highest-ranking vice-president, if there is one, is automatically promoted (unless the bylaws expressly provide otherwise). Thus, for example, if the first vice-president resigns, the second vice-president becomes first vice-president, the third vice-president becomes second-vice-president, and so on, with the vacancy to be filled occurring in the lowest-ranking vice-presidency. A vice-president cannot decline to take the higher office to which he has been automatically promoted; if unable or unwilling to carry out the duties of the new office, his only recourse is then to submit his resignation, upon the acceptance of which he will no longer hold either office.

47:30 Sometimes the bylaws provide that the different vice-presidents shall have administrative charge of different departments. In many such cases, it is inadvisable for the vice-presidents to have to change their duties whenever a vacancy occurs among them, and the bylaws should therefore also provide a method for filling vacancies that expressly applies to the offices of president and all vice-presidents.

47:31 Although in many instances the outgoing vice-president (or first vice-president) will be the logical nominee for president in the next term, the society has the freedom to make its own choice and to elect the most promising candidate at that particular time, unless stated otherwise in the bylaws (cf. President-Elect, above).

47:32 Secretary. The secretary is the recording officer of the assembly and the custodian of its records, except those specifically assigned to others, such as the treasurer’s books. The recording officer is sometimes called the clerk, the recording secretary (when there is also, for example, a corresponding secretary or financial secretary), the recorder, or the scribe.

47:33 Duties of the secretary. The duties of the secretary are:

1) To keep a record of all the proceedings of the organization—usually called the minutes.
2) To keep on file all committee reports.
3) To keep the organization’s official membership roll (unless another officer or staff member has this duty); and to call the roll where it is required.
4) To make the minutes and records available to members upon request (see 47:36).
5) To notify officers, committee members, and delegates of their election or appointment, to furnish committees with whatever documents are required for the performance of their duties, and to have on hand at each meeting a list of all existing committees and their members.
6) To furnish delegates with credentials.
7) To sign all certified copies of acts of the society.
8) To maintain record book(s) in which the bylaws, special rules of order, standing rules, and minutes are entered, with any amendments to these documents properly recorded, and to have the current record book(s) on hand at every meeting.
9) To send out to the membership any required notice of each meeting, known as the call of the meeting, and to conduct the general correspondence of the organization—that is, correspondence that is not a function proper to other offices or to committees (see also Corresponding Secretary and Executive Secretary, below).
10) To prepare, prior to each meeting, an order of business (41) for the use of the presiding officer, showing in their exact order, under the correct headings, all matters known in advance that are due to come up and—if applicable—the times for which they are set.

11) In the absence of the president and vice-president, to call the meeting to order and preside until the immediate election of a chairman pro tem.

47:34 In the absence of the secretary, a secretary pro tem must be elected; the corresponding, financial, or executive secretary in organizations having such officers is not an automatic replacement. If, under “Reports of Officers” in the order of business, correspondence of an official character is to be read, it is normally read by the recording secretary and not by the corresponding secretary.

47:35 Records of the secretary. When written reports are received from boards or committees, the secretary records on them the date they were received and what further action was taken on them, and preserves them among his records. It is not necessary for an assembly to vote that a board or committee report be “placed on file,” as that is done without a vote.

47:36 Any member has a right to examine these reports and the record book(s) referred to in 47:33(8), including the minutes of an executive session, at a reasonable time and place, but this privilege must not be abused to the annoyance of the secretary. Members are free to share their contents with others, except for any content protected by the secrecy of an executive session that has not been lifted (see 9:26). The same principles apply to records kept by boards and committees, these being accessible to members of the boards or committees (see also 49:17–19). When a committee requires certain records for the proper performance of its duties, the secretary turns them over to the committee chairman—after consulting with the president in any cases where he or she is in doubt. The corporation law of each state frequently provides for the availability of records of any group incorporated in that state.

47:37 Corresponding Secretary. In larger societies, the duties of issuing notices of meetings and conducting the general correspondence of the organization as described in 47:33(9) are frequently assigned to a separate elected officer, usually called the corresponding secretary. When there is a corresponding secretary, the unqualified word secretary used alone refers to the recording officer.

47:38 Treasurer, and Financial Secretary. The treasurer of an organization is the officer entrusted with the custody of its funds. The treasurer, and any other officers who handle funds of the society, should be bonded for a sum sufficient to protect the society from loss. The specific duties of the treasurer will vary depending on the size and complexity of the society; but this officer cannot disburse funds except by authority of the society or as the bylaws prescribe. The treasurer is required to make a full financial report annually or as the bylaws may prescribe, and to make such interim reports as the assembly or the executive board may direct. (For the suggested form of this annual report in simple cases, see 48:22ff.)

47:39 In ordinary societies, tasks incident to the collection of dues from members are a part of the treasurer’s duties unless the bylaws provide otherwise. Much clerical work may be attached to this function, however, in large organizations, in societies where dues are payable in frequent installments, or in societies that suspend the voting-membership rights of members who fall in arrears in dues payments (see 1:13n3, 45:1, 56:19). In such cases some organizations have, in addition to the treasurer, a financial secretary—an officer whose usual duties are to bill members for their dues and to receive payment of them, to maintain a ledger of each member’s account, and to turn over to the treasurer and obtain his receipt for moneys received.

47:40 Other Officers. In addition to the officers described above, an organization can provide in its bylaws for any other officers it may wish—including assistant officers. Officers sometimes included, and their usual duties, are:

• Directors (or trustees, or managers), who sit as members of the executive board (49)—usually in addition to the other officers—and perform such duties as the bylaws may require. In some organizations the term trustees refers to officers who perform the duties of elected auditors (see 48:25).

• A historian, who prepares a narrative account of the society’s activities during his or her term of office, which, when approved by the assembly, will become a permanent part of the society’s official history.

• A librarian, who, if the society possesses a collection of books or other written or printed matter, has custody of these items, and—subject to the society’s direction—control over members’ access to them.

• A curator, who serves as custodian of any objects of value that may belong to the society (other than library holdings).

• A chaplain, who recites or leads invocations and benedictions where such prayers are offered at the opening and closing of meetings or other events, and who—if a clergyman—serves the organization in that capacity in such manner as it may require.

• A sergeant-at-arms (or warden, or warrant officer, as sometimes called), who, on the floor of the meeting hall, assists in preserving order as the chair may direct. In a convention or large meeting this officer may have charge of the ushers. He may handle certain physical arrangements in the hall as well, such as being responsible in some cases for seeing that the furnishings are in proper order for each meeting. In a legislative or public body that has the power to penalize or compel the attendance of its members, the sergeant-at-arms may have the duty of serving warrants or notices of fines, or of arresting absent members in the event of a Call of the House (40:13–16).

• A doorkeeper or guard, who, in meetings where only members or some other limited category of persons are permitted to enter, checks the credentials or eligibility of those arriving, and denies entrance to unauthorized persons.

47:41 Directors should always be elected. The other officers mentioned above are usually elected also, but the bylaws can provide for their appointment.

47:42 Honorary Officers (and Members). An honorary office is in fact not an office but—like honorary membership—a complimentary title that may be bestowed on members or nonmembers. When it is desired to honor a nonmember, it is more usual to elect such a person to honorary membership.
An honorary officer—for example, an honorary president or an honorary treasurer—is often elected at the time of retirement from the corresponding actual office, particularly when the person has filled it creditably for a long time. If there are to be honorary officers or honorary members, they must be authorized by the bylaws. Like an honorary degree conferred by a college or university, an honorary office or membership is perpetual—unless rescinded or unless its duration is limited by the bylaws. Rights carried with the honor include the right to attend meetings and to speak, but not to make motions or vote unless the person is also a regular member, or unless the bylaws provide full membership rights.² Honorary presidents and vice-presidents should sit on the platform, but they do not preside. An honorary office entails no duties and in no way conflicts with a member’s holding a regular office or being assigned any duty whatever. It is not improper to include in the published list of honorary officers the names of those who are deceased, if that fact is clearly indicated.

Appointed Officers or Consultants

47:43 Executive Secretary. The term executive secretary, or executive director, is usually applied to a salaried officer who devotes full time to the position of administrative officer and general manager of an organization, especially at the national, regional, or state level; and unless otherwise indicated the term is used in that sense in this book. In most organizations, the executive secretary is employed by the board of directors under contract, but in some this officer is elected by the convention.

47:44 Duties of the executive secretary. The executive secretary is in charge of the central office of the society and acts under the immediate direction of the board and the executive committee, if there is one (see 49:13). He is sometimes ex officio the secretary of the executive committee (and sometimes of the board) and is responsible for seeing that the committee’s instructions are carried out. He is expected to recommend plans of work and to conduct the day-to-day business of the organization. He is often responsible for the work that would otherwise be carried out by an elected corresponding secretary. He usually hires, fires, and determines the salaries of other staff members with the approval of the board or executive committee, which may regulate this function by adopting personnel policies. The bylaws should specify the duties of the executive secretary and should describe the manner in which he is to be selected, and for how long a term.
47:45 Relationship to the president. The relationship between the office of executive secretary and that of president depends on the duties and authority of these officers as defined in the bylaws. In some organizations, the executive and managerial function that would otherwise be exercised by the president is entirely split off and vested in the executive secretary. This arrangement leaves the president his duties as presiding officer and spokesman for the organization. In any case, the president may not give orders to the executive secretary independently unless the bylaws so authorize; in the absence of such a provision, the executive secretary receives his direction from the board or executive committee.

47:46 Parliamentarian. The parliamentarian is a consultant, commonly a professional, who advises the president and other officers, committees, and members on matters of parliamentary procedure. The parliamentarian’s role during a meeting is purely an advisory and consultative one—since parliamentary law gives to the chair alone the power to rule on questions of order or to answer parliamentary inquiries.

47:47 A small local organization should rarely require the services of a parliamentarian, unless it undertakes a general revision of its bylaws; but for large assemblies and conventions or organizations where the transaction of business is apt to be complex, it is advisable to engage one. Some state or national organizations find it advisable to employ a parliamentarian throughout the year to assist with any questions that may arise in interpreting bylaws and rules, or in connection with the work of the board and of officers or committees. In such a case, the parliamentarian’s duties extend beyond giving opinions to the presiding officer during meetings, and may include assisting in the planning and steering of business to be introduced.

47:48 Appointment of the parliamentarian. If a parliamentarian is needed by an organization, the president should be free to appoint one in whom he has confidence. The board or society must approve any fee that will be required, however. If needed for only one meeting, a parliamentarian should be appointed as far as possible in advance of the meeting at which he is to serve, since his main work should be done outside the meeting.

47:49 Duties of the parliamentarian. The president, knowing in advance the business to come before the assembly, should confer with the parliamentarian before the meetings open, and during recesses, in order to anticipate any problems that may arise and to avoid, as much as possible, frequent consultation during the meetings. There is no set rule for the number of additional functions a parliamentarian may be asked to perform as a permanent appointee, such as teaching classes, holding office hours during conventions, and the like.

47:50 During a meeting the work of the parliamentarian should be limited to giving advice to the chair and, when requested, to any other member. It is also the duty of the parliamentarian—as inconspicuously as possible—to call the attention of the chair to any error in the proceedings that may affect the substantive rights of any member or may otherwise do harm.

47:51 There should be an understanding between the parliamentarian and the presiding officer that there will probably be occasions when it may be essential for the chair to listen to suggestions being made by the parliamentarian, even if it means momentarily not giving full attention to others or asking the assembly to stand at ease during the consultation (see 8:2(4), 23:3). This practice will enable the chair to be in a position to act promptly at the correct time and be fully informed. In advising the chair, the parliamentarian should not wait until asked for advice—that may be too late.
An experienced parliamentarian will often see a problem developing and be able to head it off with a few words to the chair.

47:52 Only on the most involved matters should the parliamentarian actually be called upon to speak to the assembly; and the practice should be avoided if at all possible.

47:53 The parliamentarian should be assigned a seat next to the chair, so as to be convenient for consultation in a low voice, but the chair should try to avoid checking with the parliamentarian too frequently or too obviously.

47:54 After the parliamentarian has expressed an opinion on a point, the chair has the duty to make the final ruling and, in doing so, has the right to follow the advice of the parliamentarian or to disregard it. But if the parliamentarian’s advice on important procedural issues is habitually disregarded, he may find it necessary, at the end of the present engagement or session, to resign.

47:55 A member of an assembly who acts as its parliamentarian has the same duty as the presiding officer to maintain a position of impartiality, and therefore does not make motions, participate in debate, or vote on any question except in the case of a ballot vote. He does not cast a deciding vote, even if his vote would affect the result, since that would interfere with the chair’s prerogative of doing so. If a member feels that he cannot properly forgo these rights in order to serve as parliamentarian, he should not accept that position. Unlike the presiding officer, the parliamentarian cannot temporarily relinquish his position in order to exercise such rights on a particular motion.

47:56 Regarding the duties of the parliamentarian in connection with a convention, see also 59:9.
Vacancies

47:57 The power to appoint or elect persons to any office or board carries with it the power to accept their resignations, and also the power to fill any vacancy occurring in it, unless the bylaws expressly provide otherwise. In the case of a society whose bylaws confer upon its executive board full power and authority over the society’s affairs between meetings of the society’s assembly (as in the example in 56:43) without reserving to the society itself the exclusive right to fill vacancies, the executive board is empowered to accept resignations and fill vacancies between meetings of the society’s assembly. For particular vacancies, see 47:22 (president-elect), and 47:28–30 and 56:32 (president and vice-presidents). See also 13:23 (vacancies in a committee).

47:58 Notice of filling a vacancy in an office (including a vacancy in an executive board or executive committee) must always be given to the members of the body that will elect the person to fill it, unless the bylaws or special rules of order clearly provide otherwise.
§48. MINUTES AND REPORTS OF OFFICERS

Minutes

48:1 The official record of the proceedings of a deliberative assembly is usually called the minutes, or sometimes—particularly in legislative bodies—the journal. The minutes should be kept in a substantial book or binder.

48:2 Content of the Minutes. In an ordinary society, the minutes should contain mainly a record of what was done at the meeting, not what was said by the members. The minutes must never reflect the secretary’s opinion, favorable or otherwise, on anything said or done.

48:3 To modify the rules governing what is regularly to be included in the minutes requires adoption of a special rule of order, although a majority vote may direct the inclusion of specific additional information in the minutes of a particular meeting.

48:4 The first paragraph of the minutes should contain the following information (which need not, however, be divided into numbered or separated items directly corresponding to those below):

1) the kind of meeting: regular, special, adjourned regular, or adjourned special;
2) the name of the society or assembly;
3) the date and time of the meeting, and the place, if it is not always the same;
4) the fact that the regular chairman and secretary were present or, in their absence, the names of the persons who substituted for them; and
5) whether the minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved—as read, or as corrected—and the date of that meeting if it was other than a regular business meeting. Any correction approved by the assembly is made in the text of the minutes being approved; the minutes of the meeting making the correction merely state that the minutes were approved “as corrected,” without specifying what the correction was (see first paragraph of form, 48:8).

The body of the minutes should contain a separate paragraph for each subject matter, and should show:

6) all main motions (10) or motions to bring a main question again before the assembly (6:25–27; 34–37) that were made or taken up—except, normally, any that were withdrawn—stating:
   a) the wording in which each motion was adopted or otherwise disposed of (with the facts as to whether the motion may have been debated or amended before disposition being mentioned only parenthetically); and
   b) the disposition of the motion, including—if it was temporarily disposed of (9:7–11, 38:8)—any primary and secondary amendments and all adhering secondary motions that were then pending;

7) secondary motions that were not lost or withdrawn, in cases where it is necessary to record them for completeness or clarity—for example, motions to Recess or to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn (among the privileged motions), or motions to Suspend the Rules or grant a Request to Be Excused from a Duty (among the incidental motions), generally only alluding to the adoption of such motions, however, as “… the matter having been advanced in the agenda on motion of…” or “… a ballot vote having been ordered, the tellers…”;

8) the complete substance of oral committee reports that are permitted to be given in small assemblies in particular cases as provided in 51:60–62;
9) all notices of motions (10:44–51);
10) all points of order and appeals, whether sustained or lost, together with the reasons given by the chair for his or her ruling; and
11) the declaration by the chair in “naming” an offending member as a part of disciplinary procedures, as well as any disorderly words that led to such naming and that the chair directed the secretary to take down (see 61:12–14).

The last paragraph should state:
12) the hour of adjournment.

48:5 Additional rules and practices relating to the content of the minutes are the following:

1) The name of the maker of a main motion should be entered in the minutes, but the name of the seconder should not be entered unless ordered by the assembly.
2) a) When a count has been ordered, the number of votes on each side is entered, unless the vote was on a motion that would not otherwise be entered in the minutes.
b) When the voting is by ballot, the full tellers’ report (45:37–40) is entered.
c) When the voting is by roll call, the names of those voting on each side and those answering “present,” as well as the total number in each category, are entered. If members who are present fail to respond on a roll-call vote, enough of their names must be recorded as present to reflect that a quorum was present at the time of the vote. If the chair voted, no special mention of this fact is made in the minutes.
3) The proceedings of a committee of the whole, or a quasi committee of the whole, are not entered in the minutes, but the fact that the assembly went into committee of the whole (or into quasi committee) and the committee report is recorded (see 52).

4) When a question is considered informally, the same information is recorded as under the regular rules, since the only informality in the proceedings is in the debate.

5) When a committee report is of great importance or should be recorded to show the legislative history of a measure, the assembly can order it “to be entered in the minutes,” in which case the secretary copies it in full in, or attaches a copy of it to, the minutes.

6) The name and subject of a guest speaker can be given, but no effort should be made to summarize his remarks.

48:6 The use by the secretary of a recording device can be of great benefit in preparing the minutes, but a transcription from it should never be used as the minutes themselves.

48:7 The Signature. Minutes should be signed by the secretary and can also be signed, if the assembly wishes, by the president. The words Respectfully submitted—although occasionally used—represent an older practice that is not essential in signing the minutes.

48:8 Form of the Minutes. The principles stated above are illustrated in the following model form for minutes:

The regular monthly meeting of the L.M. Society was held on Thursday, January 4, 20__, at 8:30 P.M., at the Society’s building, the President being in the chair and the Secretary being present. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved as corrected.

The Treasurer reported the receipt of a bill from the Downs Construction Company in the amount of $5,000 for the improvements recently made in the Society’s building. The question put by the chair “that the bill be paid” was adopted.

Mr. Johnson, reporting on behalf of the Membership Committee, moved “that John R. Brown be admitted to membership in the Society.”
The motion was adopted after debate.

The report of the Program Committee was received and placed on file.

The special committee that was appointed to investigate and report on suitable parking facilities near the Society’s building reported, through its chairman, Mrs. Smith, a resolution, which, after debate and amendment, was adopted as follows: “Resolved, That... [its exact words immediately before being acted upon, incorporating all amendments].”

The resolution relating to the use of the Society’s library by nonmembers, which was postponed from the last meeting, was then taken up. This motion and a pending amendment were laid on the table after the chair announced that the guest speaker had received a phone message which would require his early departure.

The President introduced the guest speaker, Mr. James F. Mitchell, whose subject was ________

At the conclusion of Mr. Mitchell’s talk, the resolution relating to the use of the Society’s library by nonmembers was taken from the table. After amendment and further debate, the resolution was adopted as follows: “Resolved, That... [its exact wording immediately before being finally voted on].”

Mr. Gordon moved “that the Society undertake the establishment of a summer camp for boys on its lakefront property.” Mrs. Thomas moved to amend this motion by inserting the word “underprivileged” before “boys.” On motion of Mr. Dorsey, the motion to establish the camp, with the pending amendment, was referred to a committee of three to be appointed by the chair with instructions to report at the next meeting. The chair appointed Messrs. Flynn, Dorsey, and Fine to the committee.

The meeting adjourned at 10:05 P.M.

Margaret Duffy, Secretary

48:9 Approval of the Minutes. In an organization that holds regular meetings at frequent intervals, such as weekly, monthly, or quarterly, the minutes of each regular or special meeting are normally read and approved at the beginning of the next regular meeting, immediately after the call to order and any opening ceremonies. A special meeting does not approve minutes of a previous session unless the meeting was called for that purpose, which is not ordinarily the case. In a session lasting longer than one day, the minutes of meetings held the preceding day are read and approved at the beginning of each day’s business after the first. In particular, an adjourned meeting of an ordinary society approves the minutes of the meeting that established the adjourned meeting; its own minutes are approved at the next adjourned or regular meeting, whichever occurs first.

48:10 Procedures for the reading, correction, and approval of minutes at a meeting are shown in 41:9–12.

48:11 If the assembly does not wish to carry out the reading and approval of the minutes at the regular time, it may, by majority vote without debate, “dispense with the reading of the minutes.” The minutes can then be taken up by majority vote without debate at any later time during the meeting while no business is pending, under the same rules as those governing Take from the Table (34). If the minutes are not thus taken up before adjournment, they are read and approved at the following meeting, before the later minutes are taken up. A motion to “dispense with the reading of the minutes” is not a request to omit their reading altogether; it can be made at any time while the minutes are actually pending for approval regardless of whether the minutes have already been read or corrected in some respect.

48:12 Exceptions to the rule that minutes are approved at the next regular meeting (or at the next meeting within the session) arise when the next meeting will not be held within a quarterly time interval, when the term of a specified portion of the membership will expire before the start of the next meeting, or when, as at the final meeting of a convention, the assembly will be dissolved at the close of the present meeting.
In any of these cases, minutes that have not been approved previously should be approved before final adjournment, or the assembly should authorize the executive board or a special committee to approve the minutes. The fact that the minutes are not read for approval at the next meeting does not prevent a member from having a relevant excerpt read for information; nor does it prevent the assembly in such a case from making additional corrections, treating the minutes as having been previously approved (see 48:15).

48:13 Minutes of an executive session may be read and approved only in executive session, as described in 9:26–27. Common practices when approving minutes at a convention are discussed in 59:55(9).

48:14 When the minutes are approved, the word Approved, with the secretary’s initials (or the signature of the chairman of the approving committee) and the date, should be written below them. If the minutes are approved with corrections, the secretary should prepare a fully corrected version and distribute copies to the members as well as placing it in the minute book. (As noted in 48:4(5) all such corrections should be incorporated in the minutes to which they pertain, and not in the minutes of the meeting making the corrections.)

48:15 If the existence of an error or material omission in the minutes becomes reasonably established after their approval—even many years later—the minutes can then be corrected by means of the motion to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35), which requires a two-thirds vote, or a majority vote with notice, or the vote of a majority of the entire membership, or unanimous consent. In such a case the content of the original minutes must not be altered, although it may be advisable for the secretary to make a marginal notation indicating the corrected text or referring to the minutes of the meeting at which the correction was adopted.
The minutes of the latter meeting must include the full text of the motion to Amend Something Previously Adopted, which necessarily includes all information required to construct an accurate record of the actions taken at the earlier meeting.

48:16 Publication of an Assembly’s Proceedings. Sometimes a society wishes to have a full record of its proceedings made available to the public, and when such a record of the proceedings is to be published (in which case it is often called “proceedings,” “transactions,” or the like), it frequently contains, in addition to the information described above for inclusion in the minutes, a list of the speakers on each side of every question, with an abstract or the text of each address. In such cases the secretary should have an assistant. When it is desired, as in some conventions, to publish the proceedings in full, the secretary’s assistant should be a stenographic reporter or recording technician. The presiding officer should then take particular care that everyone to whom he assigns the floor is fully identified. Under these conditions it is usually necessary to require members to use a public-address system. Reports of committees should be printed exactly as submitted, the record showing what action was taken by the assembly in regard to them; or they can be printed with all additions in italics and parts struck out enclosed in brackets, in which case a note to that effect should precede the report or resolution. Any such record or transcript of the proceedings prepared for publication, however, does not take the place of the minutes, and it is the minutes which comprise the official record of the assembly’s proceedings.
Reports of Officers

48:17 In principle, all reports of officers in a society are incident to administrative duties that these officers have by virtue of provisions in the bylaws or other rules. Strictly speaking, in a purely deliberative assembly, the officers make no reports.

48:18 In an organized society, the bylaws may require each of the principal officers to make a report of the year’s work at the annual meeting (9). At any meeting at which officers’ reports are made, they immediately follow the reading and approval of the minutes.

48:19 Reports of Executive Officers. In addition to their annual reports, the president and vice-president from time to time may wish or need to report on their activities in connection with administrative duties. Such reports are usually for purposes of information only, but may sometimes contain recommendations calling for action by the assembly. In either case, the reports should generally conform to the rules as to form, substance, and disposition that govern committee reports (51). Motions to adopt or implement any recommendations should be made from the floor by a member other than the reporting officer.

48:20 Reports by the Treasurer. At each meeting of a society, the chair may ask for a “Treasurer’s report,” which may consist simply of a verbal statement of the cash balance on hand—or of this balance less outstanding obligations. Such a report requires no action by the assembly.

48:21 In addition, the treasurer is required to make a full financial report annually, and in some societies more often. Such an annual report should always be audited. It is compiled and dated as of the last day of the fiscal year, if there is one, or December 31 if no different financial year is stated in the bylaws.

48:22 Form and content of the financial report. The best form for the financial report depends on particular conditions, such as the kind and size of the society, the nature of its activities, the frequency of reporting, and so on. The form used should be patterned after reports in similar organizations. In any case, since the financial report is made for the information of the members, it should not contain details of dates and separate payments, which are a hindrance to the report’s being understood.

48:23 The brief model report below is in a form suitable for most small societies whose financial affairs are simple and primarily involve cash. In organizations whose finances are more involved, a double-entry set of books may be advisable or required. Such a system should be set up with the assistance of an accountant, and the report would normally consist of a balance sheet showing the society’s assets, liabilities, and fund balance (or members’ equity) as well as an income statement similar to the report below without the opening and closing cash balances. Other statements may be included as needed, such as a statement of changes in members’ equity, a statement of sources and application of funds, and a cash forecast. This system may be on a cash or an accrual basis and will usually require review or audit by an accountant.
48:24 Action on the financial report. No action of acceptance by the assembly is required—or proper—on a financial report of the treasurer unless it is of sufficient importance, as an annual report, to be referred to auditors. In the latter case it is the auditors’ report which the assembly accepts. The treasurer’s financial report should therefore be prepared long enough in advance for the audit to be completed before the report is made at a meeting of the society.

48:25 When the amounts involved are very large and the reports complicated, or the organization’s contributors or others require it, it is desirable to have the audits made by independent certified accountants. But in ordinary societies and those in which the expense of a professional cannot be justified, it is practical to have the financial reports audited by an auditing committee of two or more members of the society—appointed in advance if there is not a standing auditing committee. In some organizations the financial reports are audited by elected officers known as “trustees.” Where professional examination is desired but the organization does not require a full audit, a “review” (as distinct from a mere “compilation”) by an accountant may supply sufficient testing and verification to satisfy the organization. If the auditors’ report consists only of an endorsement on the financial report—to the effect that it has been found correct, as shown in the model above—the treasurer can simply read out this certification as he concludes the presentation of his own report. After the treasurer has made his report to the assembly (and after any detailed report presented by the chairman of the auditing committee, if it is needed), the chair states the question on adopting the auditors’ report. The adoption of the auditors’ report has the effect of relieving the treasurer of responsibility for the period covered by his report, except in case of fraud.

48:26 If the treasurer presents an unaudited annual report or other financial report that the bylaws require to be audited, and if there is a standing auditing committee or if auditors have already been chosen in some other manner, the chair, without waiting for a motion when the treasurer has finished reading his report, immediately says, “The report is referred to the Auditing Committee [or “to the auditors,” or “to the Trustees for audit”].” If no auditors have been chosen, the proper procedure is to adopt a motion to refer the report to an auditing committee to be appointed by one of the methods described in 50.

48:27 Reports of Other Officers. Other officers as may be prescribed in the bylaws, such as a historian or a librarian, may also have occasion to report to the assembly. These reports are usually made annually and, like those of the executive officers, are generally for purposes of information only. They can, however, contain recommendations upon which it is hoped the assembly will act. If the report is to become a permanent official document of the organization, it must be formally adopted by the assembly. Thus, for example, historical accounts prepared by the historian do not become part of the official history of the society until the assembly formally adopts them, with any desired changes, after their presentation by the historian.
Footnotes to Chapter XV

1 See 3:10 regarding variations of this term which have come into use.

2 Some societies provide in the bylaws for electing to “honorary life membership”—or even its automatic conferment upon—a person who has been an active member for a specified long period of years, sometimes with the added requirement that he shall have attained a certain age. The bylaws may prescribe that such an honorary member shall pay no dues but shall retain full voting privileges.

3 There may be certain instances in which a main motion is withdrawn under circumstances that require some mention in the minutes. In such a case, only as much information should be included in the minutes as is needed to reflect the necessary details clearly. For example, if, at one meeting, a main motion was made the special order for the next meeting (41:57), or a main motion was postponed after lengthy consideration to a meeting at which it was withdrawn by consent, action at the first meeting should always be recorded, and the withdrawal at the second meeting should be stated for completeness of the minutes.
§49. BOARDS

49:1 The essential characteristics of a board are stated in 1:22–23. All of the material under the heading Types of Deliberative Assembly in 1:9–23 should be read in connection with this section.

49:2 The authority by which a board is constituted commonly prescribes the times at which it shall hold regular meetings, and the procedure by which special meetings of the board can be called; or the board can establish such provisions to the extent that it has the authority to adopt its own rules (see 49:15).
The Executive Board of an Organized Society

49:3 Except in the simplest and smallest local societies, or those holding very frequent regular meetings, it is generally found advisable to provide in the bylaws for a board to be empowered to act for the society when necessary between its regular meetings, and in some cases to have complete control over certain phases of the society’s business. Such a board is usually known as the executive board, or—in organizations where there is an executive committee within and subordinate to the board as described below—the board of directors, board of managers, or board of trustees. Any such body is referred to in this book as an executive board, however—regardless of whether there is an executive committee—in cases where the distinction is immaterial.

49:4 If a society is to have an executive board, the bylaws should specify the number of board members and how they are to be determined, should define the board’s duties and powers, and should make provision for meetings of the board as stated above. An executive board commonly consists of those of the society’s officers (47) who also have duties apart from the board, together with a number of directors, managers, or trustees who may or may not have other duties such as the chairmanship of important standing committees (50). (See Sample Bylaws, Article IV, Section 1 (56:62) and Article VI, Section 1 (56:64).) The directors usually should be elected in the same way and at the same time as the other officers of the society. Frequently it is provided that a specified percentage of the directors shall be chosen periodically in such a way that their terms of office overlap those of the others—as when, for example, there are six directors and it is provided that two shall be elected at each annual meeting for three-year terms.
A society has no executive board, nor can its officers act as a board, except as the bylaws may provide; and when so established, the board has only such power as is delegated to it by the bylaws or by vote of the society’s assembly referring individual matters to it.

The amount of regular power delegated to an executive board under the bylaws varies considerably from one organization to another. If the society as a whole usually meets less often than within quarterly time intervals (9:7), or if its main purpose is other than to transact business, the entire administrative authority of the society is best left to the board between the society’s meetings. Usually in organizations meeting monthly or oftener, and sometimes in those meeting quarterly, the board is not given so much power, since the society can attend to much of its business at its regular meetings. (For appropriate wordings for the governing provision in the bylaws in each of these two cases, see 56:43, 56:64(2).)

In any event, no action of the board can alter or conflict with any decision made by the assembly of the society, and any such action of the board is null and void (see 56:41 and 23:9). Except in matters placed by the bylaws exclusively under the control of the board, the society’s assembly can give the board instructions which it must carry out, and can rescind or amend any action of the board if it is not too late (see 35). It should be noted, however, that exactly the opposite condition prevails in connection with boards of business corporations, in which the board has exclusive power and authority to operate the business.
Ex-Officio Board Members

49:8 Frequently boards include ex-officio members—that is, persons who are members of the board by virtue of an office or committee chairmanship held in the society, or in the parent state or national society or federation or some allied group; or—sometimes in boards outside of organized societies—by virtue of a public office. In the executive board of a society, if the ex-officio member of the board is under the authority of the society (that is, if he is a member, an employee, or an elected or appointed officer of the society), there is no distinction between him and the other board members. If the ex-officio member is not under the authority of the society, he has all the privileges of board membership, including the right to make motions and to vote, but none of the obligations—just as in a case, for example, where the governor of a state is ex officio a trustee of a private academy. The latter class of ex-officio board member, who has no obligation to participate, is not counted in determining the number required for a quorum or whether a quorum is present at a meeting. Whenever an ex-officio board member is also ex officio an officer of the board, he of course has the obligation to serve as a regular working member and is therefore counted in the quorum.

49:9 When an ex-officio member of a board ceases to hold the office that entitles him to such membership, his membership on the board terminates automatically.

49:10 Concerning ex-officio members of committees, including the president, see 50:16.
Officers of Boards

49:11 A board that is not an instrumentality of a parent assembly or membership body is organized as any deliberative assembly, with a chairman or president, a secretary, and other officers as may be needed. In general, such a board elects its own officers if the authority under which the board is constituted makes no other provision as to how the officers are to be determined. A board that is to elect its officers should meet for this purpose as soon as possible after the selection of its members (see also 49:22). In ordinary societies having executive boards, on the other hand, the president and the secretary of the society serve in the same capacities within the board (and the executive committee, if there is one), unless the bylaws provide otherwise.
Bodies Subordinate to a Board

49:12 As a general principle, a board cannot delegate its authority—that is, it cannot empower a subordinate group to act independently in its name—except as may be authorized by the bylaws (of the society) or other instrument under which the board is constituted; but any board can appoint committees to work under its supervision or according to its specific instructions. Such committees of the board always report to the board.

49:13 Executive Committee. In a society where the board is large or its members must travel from a distance to meet, it is usual for the bylaws to establish an executive committee composed of a specified number of board members, which shall have all or much of the power of the board between meetings (just as the board has all or much of the power of the society between the society’s meetings), but which cannot alter any decision made by the board (just as the board cannot alter any decision made by the society). The executive committee is thus in reality a “board within a board” and operates under the rules in this book applicable to boards rather than those applicable to committees. Usually the membership of the executive committee is specified in the bylaws, rather than being left to the choice of the full board. It is advisable that the executive committee be small and, unless it has been authorized to conduct electronic meetings (see 9:30–36), that its members live near enough to each other to be able to hold frequent regular meetings and also special meetings when necessary. The executive secretary, if there is one, should work closely with the executive committee, but should be appointed by the parent body or at least by the board. A board cannot appoint an executive committee unless the bylaws so authorize.

49:14 Committees of a Board. Where an organization is local—for example, a society for sustaining a foster home for children—the executive board usually divides itself into committees having charge of different branches of the work during the interval between the monthly or quarterly meetings of the board. At the board meetings these committees report on the fulfillment of their assigned responsibilities. In such cases the committees are genuinely subordinate to the board and must ordinarily report back to it for authority to act (in contrast to an executive committee, which usually has power to act as the board, and in contrast to standing committees of the society, which are not subordinate to the board unless made so by a provision in the bylaws). Any board can appoint committees of the kind just described without authorization in the bylaws.
Conduct of Business in Boards

49:15 General Procedure. The executive board of an organized society operates under the society’s bylaws, the society’s parliamentary authority, and any special rules of order or standing rules of the society which may be applicable to it. Such a board may adopt its own special rules of order or standing rules only to the extent that such rules do not conflict with any of the rules of the society listed above. It may protect itself against breaches of order by its members during board meetings, and against annoyance by nonmembers, by employing the procedures outlined in 61:10–21, but the maximum penalty which may be imposed upon a disorderly member of the board is that he be required to leave the meeting room during the remainder of the meeting. A board that is not a part of a society can adopt its own rules, provided that they do not conflict with anything in the legal instrument under which the board is constituted.

49:16 Under the general parliamentary law, business is transacted in large boards according to the same rules of procedure as in other deliberative assemblies. In smaller boards, these rules apply as far as practicable, with the exceptions noted below. In any case, a board can transact business only in a regular or properly called meeting of which every board member has been sent any required notice (see 9:2–5, 9:13–16)—or at an adjournment of one of these meetings—and at which a quorum (see 40:5) is present. The personal approval of a proposed action obtained separately by telephone, by individual interviews, or in writing, even from every member of the board, is not the approval of the board, since the members lacked the opportunity to mutually debate and decide the matter as a deliberative body. (See also

49:17 A record of the board’s proceedings is kept by the secretary, just as in any other assembly. Only members of the board have the right to examine the minute book kept by the secretary (cf. 47:36), unless the board orders otherwise (see next paragraph). Board members are, however, free to share the content of the minutes with others, except for any content protected by the secrecy of an executive session that has not been lifted (see 9:26–27).

49:18 The board can order that any specified person(s)—including, for example, all members of the society—be permitted to view, or be furnished with copies of, board minutes. A motion to do so is an incidental main motion, which can be adopted by a majority vote if the minutes are not protected by executive-session secrecy. If they are protected by such secrecy, the motion requires a two-thirds vote, the vote of a majority of the entire membership of the board, or a majority vote if previous notice has been given.

49:19 Whether or not board minutes are protected by the secrecy of an executive session, the assembly of the society can adopt a motion granting such permission, or can order that the board’s minutes be produced and read at a meeting of the assembly, by a two-thirds vote, the vote of a majority of the entire membership of the assembly, or a majority vote if previous notice has been given.

49:20 At regular board meetings the executive committee, if there is one, should be required to make a report of its activities since the last board meeting. No action need be taken on this report, which is generally intended as information only.

49:21 Procedure in Small Boards. In a board meeting where there are not more than about a dozen members present, some of the formality that is necessary in a large assembly would hinder business. The rules governing such meetings are different from the rules that hold in other assemblies, in the following respects:

1) Members may raise a hand instead of standing when seeking to obtain the floor, and may remain seated while making motions or speaking.
2) Motions need not be seconded.
3) There is no limit to the number of times a member can speak to a debatable question. Appeals, however, are debatable under the regular rules—that is, each member (except the chair) can speak only once in debate on them, while the chair may speak twice.
4) Informal discussion of a subject is permitted while no motion is pending.
5) When a proposal is perfectly clear to all present, a vote can be taken without a motion’s having been introduced. Unless agreed to by unanimous consent, however, all proposed actions must be approved by vote under the same rules as in larger meetings, except that a vote can be taken initially by a show of hands, which is often a better method in small meetings.
6) The chairman need not rise while putting questions to a vote.
7) If the chairman is a member, he may, without leaving the chair, speak in informal discussions and in debate, and vote on all questions.

49:22 Effect of Periodic Partial Change in Board Membership. In cases where a board is constituted so that a specified portion of its membership is chosen periodically (as, for example, where one third of the board is elected annually for three-year terms), it becomes, in effect, a new board each time such a group assumes board membership. Consequently, when the outgoing portion of the board vacates membership, all matters temporarily but not finally disposed of (see 9:8–11, 38:8), except those that remain in the hands of a committee to which they have been referred, fall to the ground under provision (c) in 21:7. (See also 50:30, regarding the continuity of matters that have been referred to a special committee appointed by the board.) If the board is one that elects its own officers or appoints standing committees, it chooses new officers and committees as soon as the new board members have taken up their duties, just as if the entire board membership had changed. The individual replacement of persons who may occasionally vacate board membership at other times, however, does not have these effects.
§50. COMMITTEES

50:1 A committee, as understood in parliamentary law, is a body of one or more persons, elected or appointed by (or by direction of) an assembly or society, to consider, investigate, or take action on certain matters or subjects, or to do all of these things. Unlike a board, a committee is not itself considered to be a form of assembly.

50:2 Although the term committee commonly implies a relatively small number of persons appointed to give a task more detailed attention than is possible in a body the size of the assembly, this characteristic more accurately describes what are known as ordinary committees. An assembly can also designate all of its members present to act as a committee, which is called a committee of the whole and is distinguished from an ordinary committee. In large assemblies, the use of a committee of the whole is a convenient method of considering a question when it is desired to allow each member to speak an unlimited number of times in debate. Committees of the whole are treated separately in §52. The statements in this section apply principally to ordinary committees.

50:3 Ordinary committees are of two types—standing committees (which have a continuing existence) and special committees (which go out of existence as soon as they have completed a specified task).

50:4 Generally the term committee implies that, within the area of its assigned responsibilities, the committee has less authority to act independently for the society (or other constituting power) than a board is usually understood to have. Thus, if the committee is to do more than report its findings or recommendations to the assembly, it may be empowered to act for the society only on specific instructions; or, if it is given standing powers, its actions may be more closely subject to review than a board’s, or it may be required to report more fully. Also, unlike most boards, a committee in general does not have regular meeting times established by rule; but meetings of the committee are called as stated in 50:21–22. Some standing committees, however—particularly in large state or national organizations—function virtually in the manner of boards, although not designated as such.

50:5 When a committee is appointed “with power,” this means with power to take all the steps necessary to carry out its instructions.

50:6 In large assemblies or those doing a great volume of business, much of the preliminary work in the preparation of subjects for consideration is usually done by committees. In many such bodies, in fact, it is advisable to have every main question go to a committee before final action on it is taken by the assembly.

50:7 Standing committees are constituted to perform a continuing function, and remain in existence permanently or for the life of the assembly that establishes them. In an ordinary society, the members of such a committee serve for a term corresponding to that of the officers, or until their successors have been chosen, unless the bylaws or other rules otherwise expressly provide. Thus, a new body of committee members is normally appointed at the beginning of each administration.

50:8 A standing committee must be constituted by name (a) by a specific provision of the bylaws or (b) by a resolution which is in effect a special rule of order and therefore requires for its adoption either previous notice and a two-thirds vote or a vote of a majority of the entire membership, if any of the following conditions are to apply:

- if the committee is to have standing authority to act for the society on matters of a certain class without specific instructions from the assembly;
• if all business of a certain class is to be automatically referred to the committee; or
• if some other rule of parliamentary procedure is affected by the committee’s assigned function.

50:9 If a standing committee’s assigned function does not affect a rule of parliamentary procedure in any of these three ways, it can be established by a standing rule adopted by a majority vote without notice, although, even in such a case, the committee is frequently constituted by name in the bylaws as indicated above. If certain standing committees are enumerated in the bylaws, no standing committee aside from those enumerated can be established without amending the bylaws, unless the bylaws also include a provision authorizing the creation of additional standing committees (see also 56:44–48). A standing committee of a society reports to the assembly of the society, and not to the executive board or board of directors, unless the bylaws provide otherwise. In some societies, standing committees in effect have charge of certain branches of the organization’s work, in which case these committees are really in the nature of boards.

50:10 A special (select, or ad hoc) committee is a committee appointed, as the need arises, to carry out a specified task, at the completion of which—that is, on presentation of its final report to the assembly—it automatically ceases to exist. A special committee may not be appointed to perform a task that falls within the assigned function of an existing standing committee.
Appointment of Committees

50:11 Methods of Appointment. In an assembly or organization that has not prescribed in its bylaws or rules how the members of its committees shall be selected, the method can be decided by unanimous consent or by majority vote at the time the committee is appointed, as described in 13:13; or (in the case of a special committee) the method can be specified in the motion to establish the committee. The power to appoint a committee carries with it the power to appoint the chairman and to fill any vacancy that may arise in the committee. The two paragraphs headed Designating the Committee Chairman, 13:17–18, should be read in connection with the five methods of appointing a committee described below.

50:12 It is possible for persons who are not members of the assembly or the society to be appointed to committees—even to the position of committee chairman—but control over each such appointment is reserved to the assembly in the individual case. From this principle, it follows that, referring to these five methods of appointment, non–assembly members may be appointed to committees by methods (a), (b), (c), and (e), as listed below. When method (d) is used and the chair appoints either a standing or a special committee, however, the governing rule regarding the appointment of non–assembly members is as stated under Naming Members to a Special Committee, in 13:15–16.

50:13 Methods by which committees can be appointed are as follows:

a) Election by ballot. This method is principally applicable to important standing committees having extensive powers. Under this procedure, nominations for committee membership can be made by any of the methods described in 46; then the nominees are voted on by ballot just as in an election of a board, a majority vote being necessary to elect. In the event that more, or less, than the required number receive a majority, places on the committee are filled as explained in 46:33. If it is the assembly’s practice—or its wish in the particular case—to select the committee chairman (rather than leave it to the committee to do so; cf. 13:18), the chairmanship can be treated as a separate position to be voted for on the same ballot with the other committee members; or, in a smaller assembly, if preferred, the chairman can be elected from among the committee’s members on a second ballot, after their names have been announced.

b) Nominations from the floor (open nominations) with viva-voce election (usually called simply “nominations from the floor”). This is a common method of appointing members to a committee when the assembly wishes to reserve the selection to itself without requiring secrecy in the voting. When this method has been decided upon, the chair says, “Members will please nominate,” or, “Nominations for the committee are now in order.” The chair announces each nomination as he hears it, as shown in 46:8. No one has a right to nominate more than one person to membership on the committee until every other member has had an opportunity to nominate a candidate; and thus the nomination of more than one person at a time by a single member can be entertained only by unanimous consent.

If no more than the prescribed number of committee members are nominated, a vote is unnecessary since the fact that no more than the required number are nominated shows that there is unanimous consent that the committee should consist of these persons, which the chair declares as follows: “Messrs. A, B, and C, Mrs. D, and Mrs. E are nominated. Are there any further nominations?… Since there are no further nominations, the committee is composed of the persons just named [or he repeats the names if he feels it advisable].”

If there are more nominees than the required number of committee members, then, when there are no further nominations, the chair repeats all of the names in the order in which they were nominated, and in the same order puts the question on the election of each nominee—one at a time until the proper number have been elected—as described for viva-voce elections (46). For reasons explained in 46:37–39, those nominated last in such a case have less chance of being elected.

After the selection of committee members has been completed, the assembly can elect a committee chairman from among them, if desired; or a chairman can be elected separately, first.

C) Nominations by the Chair (with confirmation by voice vote).

This method is used when the assembly wishes to take advantage of the chair’s knowledge and judgment as to suitable appointees, yet wishes to have veto power. In this case, the chair names the same number of persons as there are to be members of the committee, always naming his choice of committee chairman first, thus: “The chair nominates Mr. X as chairman, Mrs. Y, and Mr. Z. The question is: Shall these persons constitute the committee?” Any member can then move to strike out one or more names—but not to insert new ones, which the chair must do if such a motion to strike out is adopted. After any changes in the original names have thus been made, the chair repeats the proposed names as they stand and puts the question on the entire list: “Mr. X, Mrs. Y, and Mr. W are nominated. Those in favor of these persons constituting the committee, say aye. … Those opposed, say no…, etc.”
d) Appointment by the chair. In the absence of special conditions, appointment of committees by the chair, or by the regular presiding officer, is usually the best method in large assemblies, and it is the ordinary procedure in many smaller societies as well. The president cannot assume such power, however, unless it is given to him by the bylaws or by action of the assembly in the individual case (13:8(c), 13:13, 13:15, 56:46).

When the bylaws provide that the president shall appoint all committees, this power does not transfer to the chair if someone else presides. A clause in the bylaws assigning to the president the duty of appointing all committees should therefore contain appropriate provision for its own suspension if necessary (for example, if there is occasion to appoint a special committee during a meeting from which the president is absent). In addition, a clause conferring on the president such power of appointment should exclude the nominating committee, and it may be advisable for such a clause also to exclude all disciplinary committees.

Whenever it is stated in the bylaws (with or without the proper exceptions just noted) that the president “shall appoint all committees,” this means that the president shall select the persons to serve on such committees as the bylaws prescribe to be established or the assembly may direct to be appointed; it does not mean that the president can himself decide to appoint and assign a task to a group and thereby give it the status of a committee of the society.

When the chair appoints a committee, no vote is taken on the appointees, except any who are not members of the assembly in cases where there is no prior authorization for the chair to appoint non–assembly members to the committee—either in the bylaws or in a motion directing the appointment of the particular committee (see also 13:15, 56:46). But the chair must announce the names of the committee members to the assembly, naming the chairman of the committee first, as in (c) above; and until such announcement is made the committee cannot act. If the assembly orders the appointment of a special committee and it is desired to let the chair select the committee members after adjournment, this delay must be authorized by the assembly; the names of the committee members must then be announced at the next meeting and recorded in the minutes.

e) Appointment by adoption of a motion naming members of a committee. This method finds use in the case of special committees when the rules or particular conditions do not dictate the use of another procedure. The names of the proposed committee members can be included in the motion proposing to appoint the committee, either as it is originally offered or by way of an amendment. Or, if the motion to appoint the committee is adopted without prescribing the manner of appointment, a second motion can be made “That the committee be composed of Mr. X, Mr. Y,…” In either case, the motion naming the committee members can specify the committee chairman or not as the assembly wishes. If other names (intended to replace one or more of those in the motion) are proposed while the motion is pending, all such names and those in the motion are treated as nominations and are voted on as in the case of an election (see also 13:8(c), 13:10–18).

50:14 Unless the bylaws or other governing rules expressly provide that committee members shall serve “… and until their successors are chosen” or for a fixed period, as “… for a term of two years” (in which case the procedure for their removal or replacement is the same as that for officers described in the second bulleted item in 62:16), committee members (including the chairman) may be removed or replaced as follows: If appointment was as provided in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), or (e) above, the removal or replacement of a committee member requires the same vote as for any other motion to Rescind or Amend Something Previously Adopted. If appointment was by the president acting alone under paragraph (d), he may remove or replace committee members by his own act (see 13:23).

50:15 A committee (except a committee of the whole, 52) can appoint subcommittees, which are responsible to and report to the committee and not to the assembly. Subcommittees must consist of members of the committee, except when otherwise authorized by the society in cases where the committee is appointed to take action that requires the assistance of others.

50:16 The rules affecting ex-officio members of committees are the same as those applying to ex-officio members of boards (49:8–9). When the bylaws provide that the president shall be ex officio a member of all committees (or of all committees with the stated exception of those from which the president is best excluded; see 56:47), the president is an ex-officio member who has the right, but not the obligation, to participate in the proceedings of the committees, and he is not counted in determining the number required for a quorum or whether a quorum is present at a meeting.

50:17 The resignation of a member of a committee should be addressed to the appointing power, and it is the responsibility of that power to fill the resulting vacancy (cf. 47:57–58).

50:18 Proper Composition of Committees. The members of a standing committee should be chosen so as to provide the strongest possible group for the handling of any task that may arise within the province of the committee. In the case of a special committee, the purpose for which it is appointed affects the desirable size and composition, as follows:

- When a special committee is appointed to implement an order of the assembly, it should be small and should consist only of those in favor of the action to be carried out. If anyone not in sympathy with the action is appointed, he should ask to be excused.

- When a special committee is appointed for deliberation or investigation, however, it should often be larger, and it should represent, as far as possible, all points of view in the organization, so that its opinion will carry maximum weight. When such a committee is properly selected, its recommendations will most often reflect the will of the assembly. By care in selecting committees, debates on delicate and troublesome questions in ordinary societies can be mostly confined to the committees. The usefulness of the committee will be greatly impaired, on the other hand, if any important faction of the assembly is not represented.

Information, Instructions, and Referred Papers. Upon the appointment of a committee, it is the duty of the secretary of the society to see that all persons appointed are notified, and to furnish a list of the members of the committee to its chairman or, in the chairman’s absence, to some other authorized committee member. When a subject or item of business is referred to the committee (normally at the time of its appointment if it is a special committee, or at any time if it is a standing committee), the secretary provides the committee chairman or his representative with copies of the papers, motion, or other matter formally referred to it, and whatever instructions the assembly has given. Upon the committee’s request, any other papers or books necessary for the proper performance of its duties must be made available to it by the appropriate officers of the society, who can first consult with the president if in doubt whether the requested papers or books are indeed needed by the committee.

50:20 A committee should take care to preserve the papers referred to it from the society, since, after its assignment is completed, they must be returned in the same condition as when received. If the committee wishes to write on copies of the documents, therefore, it must obtain its own photocopies, unless it has been provided with extra copies specified in its instructions as for that purpose. In any case, amendments prepared for recommendation to the assembly when the committee reports should be drawn up on a separate sheet.
Conduct of Business in Committees

50:21 Committee Meetings. When a committee has been appointed, its chairman (or first-named member temporarily acting—see 13:18) should call it together. If some members of the committee believe that the chairman has failed to call this initial meeting or any subsequent meeting when necessary, a meeting of the committee may be called by any two of its members, unless (such as for very large committees) the assembly's rules or instructions prescribe, or empower the committee itself to require, a larger number. It is the responsibility of the person or persons calling a committee meeting to ensure that reasonable notice of its time and place is sent to every committee member. The quorum in a committee is a majority of its membership unless the assembly has prescribed a different quorum (40).

50:22 Adjournment; Provision for Future Meetings. When a committee intends to reconvene, it can simply adjourn, or adjourn to meet at a later time. In the first case—when it adjourns without appointing a time for another meeting—the next meeting is called as provided in the previous paragraph. In the second case—when it sets an adjourned meeting—notice of the adjourned meeting is not required (although it is desirable to give such notice if feasible), but reasonable efforts must be made to inform absent members of its time and place.

50:23 All of the meetings of a special committee constitute one session (8). When a special committee has finished with the business assigned to it, a motion is made for the committee to "rise"—which is equivalent to the motion to adjourn sine die (or without day)—and for the chairman or some other member to make its report to the assembly. The motion to rise is never used in standing committees, or in special committees until they are ready to go out of existence.

50:24 Committee Procedure. In small committees, the chairman usually acts as secretary, but in large ones and many standing committees, a secretary may be chosen to keep a brief memorandum in the nature of minutes for the use of the committee.

50:25 The informalities and modifications of the regular rules of parliamentary procedure listed in 49:21 for use in small boards are applicable during the meetings of all standing and special committees, unless the committee is otherwise instructed by the society (see next paragraph below); also, the rules governing the motions to Rescind, to Amend Something Previously Adopted, and to Reconsider are modified as stated in 35:2(7) and 37:35. In committees, the chairman is usually the most active participant in the discussions and work of the committee. In order that there may be no interference with the assembly’s having the benefit of its committees’ matured judgment, motions to close or limit debate (15, 16) are not allowed in committees.\(^7\)

50:26 Committees of organized societies operate under the bylaws, the parliamentary authority, and any special rules of order or standing rules of the society which may be applicable to them. A committee may not adopt its own rules except as authorized in the rules of the society or in instructions given to the committee by its parent assembly in a particular case. If a standing or special committee is so large that it can function best in the manner of a full-scale assembly, it should be instructed that the informalities and modifications of the regular rules of parliamentary procedure listed for small boards in 49:21 are not to apply to its proceedings. The parent assembly may adopt such instructions to the committee by
When a committee is to make substantive recommendations or decisions on an important matter, it should give members of the society an opportunity to appear before it and present their views on the subject at a time scheduled by the committee. Such a meeting is usually called a hearing. During actual deliberations of the committee, only committee members have the right to be present.

A standing or special committee may protect itself against breaches of order by its members during committee meetings, and against annoyance by nonmembers, by employing the procedures outlined in 61:10–21, but the committee, instead of itself imposing any penalty on a disorderly member, can only report such behavior to the committee’s parent body, which may then take such action as it deems advisable. However, if there will be no opportunity for this to occur within the time needed to effectively resolve the problem and enable the committee to complete its assigned tasks, the committee may protect itself against such disruptive behavior by requiring the disorderly member to leave the meeting room during the remainder of the meeting.

Continuity and Conclusion of Committee Assignment.
Since members of standing committees in ordinary societies are appointed for a term corresponding to that of the officers, such a committee is generally required to report at least once a year, usually at the annual meeting, on its activities and everything referred to it during the year. When a standing committee submits such a report at the conclusion of its members’ term, the committee is not discharged from further consideration of referred matters on which it reports partially at that time, unless the assembly so votes (36); thus such matters normally go over to the new committee. The members of the old committee continue their duties until their successors are chosen.

50:30 A special committee—since it is appointed for a specific purpose—continues to exist until the duty assigned to it is accomplished, unless discharged sooner (see 36); and it ceases to exist as soon as the assembly receives its final report. The fact that an annual meeting intervenes does not discharge a special committee. But in a body which ceases to exist or in which the terms of some or all of its members expire at a definite time, like a convention of delegates, a city council, or a board of directors, a special committee expires with the body that appointed it, unless it is appointed expressly to report at a later time. If it does not report, its life expires with that of the body to which it was to report.
§51. REPORTS OF BOARDS AND COMMITTEES

51:1 A report of a subordinate board or a committee is an official statement formally adopted by, and submitted in the name of, the reporting body, informing the parent assembly of action taken or recommended, or information obtained.
General Considerations Affecting Board and Committee Reports

51:2 Limitation of Report Content to What Has Been Properly Agreed To. Except as noted in this paragraph, a report of a board or committee can contain only what has been agreed to by a majority vote at a regular or properly called meeting of which every member has been notified (or at an adjournment of one of these meetings, 9:17–19)—where a quorum of the board or committee was present. A presentation of facts or recommendations made merely upon separate consultation with every member of a board must be described thus to the parent assembly, and not as an official report of the board (see also 49:16). In the case of a committee, however, if it is impractical to bring its members together for a meeting, the report of the committee can contain what has been agreed to by every one of its members. (See also Electronic Meetings, 9:30–36.)

51:3 Types of Reports. For convenience in the discussions in this section, reports may be divided into two general categories as follows:

a) Annual or periodic reports of boards or standing committees are usually submitted in accordance with requirements in the bylaws, are primarily for information, and should summarize important work done by the board or committee during the year or other period covered by the report. They may also contain recommendations—which may relate to general policy to be followed by the organization, or may propose specific action by its assembly (see next paragraph).

b) Reports relating to single items of business arising during the year fall into a number of particular forms—which are described for the case of committees in 51:30ff. As will be seen from examples there, these reports can often be quite brief unless special circumstances or instructions to the reporting body call for a detailed presentation of facts.

51:4 Recommendations in a Report. In any report of a subordinate board or a committee (of type (a) or (b) above), specific recommendations for immediate action by the parent assembly should be grouped at the end—repeating them if they have already been noted at separate places in the report—and should generally be cast in the form of one or more proposed resolutions. Although it is possible for a report, in the circumstances just described, to present recommendations which are not in the form of resolutions or motions, the "adoption" of such recommendations by the parent assembly may, depending on their wording or that of the motion to adopt, lead to confusion as to whether their adoption authorizes action, or only has the force of a declaration of intent (requiring the adoption of subsequent resolutions for implementation). A board or committee is usually best fitted to prepare resolutions to carry out its recommendations, and it should never leave this responsibility to others.

51:5 When a report is made for the purpose of presenting recommendations on a single subject—especially if it is the report of a committee to which the subject was referred—it is often best for the formal report to be confined as much as possible to the recommendations, whether they are in the form of resolutions or otherwise (see examples in 51:30–51). If this approach is followed and it is desired to bring supporting reasons to the attention of the assembly, the reporting member (that is, the person who presents the report) can include brief oral explanations with his presentation. Or, supporting reasons can be explained at greater length during debate on the report.
—by the reporting member, who has the right to the floor first in debate, and also by other members of the board or committee, if appropriate, as the debate progresses.

51:6 In the foregoing connection, it should be noted that under parliamentary conditions the inclusion of supporting facts or reasoning in a report proposing certain action may tend to work against the taking of that action, since some members who might otherwise have been willing to accept the proposals may be led to vote against them if they disagree with the factual background as reported or the reasoning of the reporting body.

51:7 Form of Detailed Report. If special conditions dictate that a report devoted to a single subject and presenting recommendations should include a full account of the details involved in the case, the body of the report is best organized according to the following topics, as applicable:

1) a description of the way in which the reporting body (usually a committee in such cases) undertook its charge;
2) the facts uncovered or information obtained;
3) the findings or conclusions derived from the facts or information; and
4) resolutions or recommendations.

If for any reason one or more resolutions or recommendations are placed within this type of detailed report before its conclusion, they should be repeated at the end, as stated above. In this way they can be more easily dealt with apart from any implied endorsement of reported facts and reasoning which some members may not accept.

51:8 Presentation and Reception of Reports. A report of a board or committee to an assembly is presented at the proper time by a “reporting member” of the board or committee. For the report of a board whose chairman is also the presiding officer of the assembly, the secretary or another one of its members acts as reporting member. In the case of a committee, the committee chairman is the reporting member unless—because he does not agree with the report or for any other reason—he does not wish to give it, in which event the committee chooses another one of its members.

51:9 A reporting member makes or presents a report on behalf of a board or a committee when, having been assigned the floor for such a purpose in a meeting, he does one of the following things (depending on the nature of the report and other conditions): (a) renders the report orally, if it is not in writing; (b) reads the report to the assembly and passes it to the chair or the secretary; or (c) announces that he is submitting it and passes it to one of these officers to be read by a reading clerk. When the assembly hears the report thus read or orally rendered, it receives the report. The terms presentation and reception accordingly describe one and the same event from the respective viewpoints of the reporting member and the assembly.

51:10 Motions for Action on Reports. Immediately after receiving a board’s or a committee’s report—unless it is a report containing only information on which no action is taken (51:53)—an assembly normally considers whatever action may be recommended in or arise out of the report. In the remainder of this section, it is explained how such action under various conditions may involve the introduction of motions—to implement recommendations or, occasionally, to adopt the entire report.

51:11 Motions to implement recommendations. When a report contains recommendations—except in cases where the recommendations relate only to the adoption or rejection of question(s) that were referred while pending (13) and consequently become pending again automatically when reported (51:37–43)—the reporting board or committee member usually makes the necessary motion to implement the recommendations at the conclusion of his presentation, provided he is a member of the assembly (see examples in 51:31–35 and 51:44–51, in which it is generally assumed that the “reporting member” is a member of the assembly). If the report is read by the secretary or a reading clerk in such a case, the reporting member resumes the floor for the purpose of making the motion immediately after the reading is completed. No second is required in these cases, since the motion is made on behalf of the board or committee (see 4:11).

51:12 If the person presenting the report is not a member of the assembly or for any other reason does not make the required motion to implement the recommendations as just described, any member of the assembly can do so; but the motion must then be seconded. Or, when the proper motion is a matter of clear-cut procedure and must necessarily be introduced to resolve the case, the chair may sometimes expedite matters by assuming the motion—that is, stating the question on it without waiting for it to be made.

51:13 Motion to adopt an entire report. In rare instances after an assembly has received a report, it may have occasion to adopt the (entire) report; an affirmative vote on such a motion has the effect of the assembly’s endorsing every word of the report—including the indicated facts and the reasoning—as its own statement (see also 10:52–53). Unlike motions to take the action recommended in a report as described above, a motion “to adopt the report” should be made by someone other than the reporting member and requires a second. Adoption of an entire report is seldom wise except when it is to be issued or published in the name of the whole organization.

51:14 Equivalence of Terms; Incorrect Motions. As applied to an assembly’s action with respect to board or committee reports or any of their contents, the expressions adopt, accept, and agree to are all equivalent—that is, the text adopted becomes in effect the act or statement of the assembly. It is usually best to use the word adopt, however, since it is the least likely to be misunderstood.

51:15 A common error is to move that a report “be received” after it has been read—apparently on the supposition that such a motion is necessary in order for the report to be taken under consideration or to be recorded as having been made. In fact, this motion is meaningless and is therefore not in order, since the report has already been received. Even before a report has been read, a motion to receive it is unnecessary if the time for its reception is established by the order of business, or if no member objects (see also below).

51:16 Another error—less common, but dangerous—is to move, after the report has been read (or even before the reading), that it “be accepted,” when the actual intent is that of the mistaken motion to receive, as just explained, or of a legitimate motion to receive made before the report is read. If a motion “to accept” made under any of these circumstances is adopted and is given its proper interpretation, it implies that the assembly has endorsed the complete report.

51:17 Applicability of Regular Rules to Questions Arising out of Reports. When a board or committee report has been received and the chair has stated the question on the adoption of the motion, resolution(s), recommendation(s), or report—whether the question became pending automatically, or the proper motion was made or was assumed by the chair as explained above—the matter is treated as any other main question, is open to debate and amendment, and can have any of the subsidiary motions applied to it. Similarly, if a committee to which the main question was referred has recommended that it be amended or definitely or indefinitely postponed, the motion to take such action is debatable and (for primary amendment or definite postponement) amendable, under the regular rules for these motions.

51:18 In the foregoing connection it should be noted that the consideration of a matter that was referred to a board or committee cannot be objected to (26) when it is reported on—regardless of whether the matter was referred as a pending question (13) or as a subject on which no question was pending. The reason is that an Objection to the Consideration of a Question can be raised only against an original main motion at the time of its introduction; and the reported matter in no case has this status since (a) if it was referred as a pending question, it was introduced at an earlier time, or (b) if it was referred as a subject on which no question was pending, the main question introduced following the report is an incidental main motion (see 10:4–6).

51:19 Conditions for Amendment of a Report by the Assembly Before Its Adoption. An assembly that is to adopt an entire report which it has received can amend the report, but the text as published or recorded must not make the reporting board or committee appear to say anything different from the wording that was actually reported. For this reason, the published or recorded text must show clearly the reported version and the changes that the assembly has made—for example, by enclosing in brackets all that was struck out and underlining or putting in italics all that was inserted, and including a note explaining this notation at the beginning of the report (see also 51:13, 51:22).
Board Reports

51:20 Occasion and Manner of Preparation. The executive board (or board of directors) of a society reports to the assembly annually on the work done during the year, and at such other times and upon such subjects as the bylaws may prescribe or the society’s business may require.

51:21 A board report is usually drafted by the president or secretary, and this draft often passes through the executive committee first, if there is one, before it comes up for consideration and adoption by the board at one of its meetings (see also 51:1–3). A board report should be signed by the president or chairman of the board and its secretary only.

51:22 Reception and Disposition of Board Reports. In meetings at which the executive board is to make a report, the chair calls for it at the time provided in the order of business, or, if there is no such provision, before committee reports are received or unfinished business is taken up. After the reading of the report, the reporting member moves the adoption of any resolutions included in it, which, as indicated above, should be grouped or repeated at the end. If the annual report of the board is to be formally adopted by the society before being published, an appropriate wording for the minutes in such a case is the following: “The Executive Board [or “Board of Directors,” etc.] submitted its report, which, after debate and amendment [if any], was adopted as follows, the words in brackets having been struck out and those underlined [or, “in italics”] having been inserted before the report was adopted.” A society need not endorse the report of its board, and can even decline to allow the report to be printed, or it can adopt only a part; but whatever it prints or records from the report must show any changes clearly marked.
Form and Reception of Committee Reports in General

51:23 General Form of Committee Reports. All committee reports should be submitted in writing, except as noted (for particular types of brief reports in a small assembly) in 51:60–62. In the case of such exceptions, a report can be given orally only if it is brief enough that the secretary can record its complete substance in the minutes on hearing it given—which he must do if no written copy is submitted for file.

51:24 Usually a written committee report is not addressed or dated. It is understood to be addressed to the assembly, and its date is that on which it is presented in a meeting of the assembly as recorded in the minutes.

51:25 A committee report should always be worded in the third person—that is, as shown in the next paragraph (not “I report…” or “We recommend…”). Similarly, in an assembly a committee report is always spoken of by the chair and others as, for example, “the report of the Finance Committee” or “the report of the committee to which was referred… [stating the subject].” It should never be spoken of as “the report of the chairman of the Finance Committee” and never as “Mr. Smith’s report,” even though it is usually presented by the committee chairman and even if he may have personally drafted it or done most of the work reported.

51:26 A committee report should begin with an identification of the committee submitting it—the name of the committee in the case of a standing committee, or the subject that was referred in the case of a special committee; thus:

For a standing committee:
The Committee on… wishes to report [or, “reports”] that… [or, “submits the following report:...."

Or:

Report of the Committee on....

[For a special committee:]
The committee to which was referred [stating the subject] reports [or "recommends"] that...

Or:

The committee appointed to [stating the purpose] reports that... [or, "submits the following report:...."]

51:27 If a written committee report is of considerable importance, it should be signed by all the members concurring. Otherwise, the committee can authorize its chairman to sign the report alone, in which case he adds the word Chairman after his signature. By so signing, the committee chairman certifies that the report has been adopted by the committee as explained in 51:2. When all concurring members sign the report, it is customary for the chairman to sign first, but this is not obligatory. In any case, he should not place the word Chairman after his name except when he signs alone on behalf of the entire committee. The use of the words Respectfully submitted preceding the signature(s) on a committee report is unnecessary and no longer customary.

51:28 Reception of Committee Reports. Reports of committees are called for or can be presented in a meeting as follows:

• If, as is usually the case, a place has been provided in the order of business for the reports of committees, the chair calls for the reports of standing committees first, in the order in which they are listed in the bylaws or other rules; after that he calls for the reports of the special committees, in the order of their appointment. (The chair omits calling for the report of any committee that he knows has no report to make; see also 41:13.) As each report is called for, the committee chairman or other reporting member rises, addresses the chair, and presents the report.

- Or, if the order of business makes no provision for committee reports, the committee chairman or other reporting member seeks to obtain the floor when no business is pending and, addressing the chair, informs the assembly that the committee has agreed upon a report which he is prepared to submit. If the chair thinks that the assembly wishes to hear the report, the chair directs the member to proceed. If anyone objects to the report's reception or if the chair is in doubt as to whether the report should be received at that time, the chair asks if there is a motion to receive the report, or the chair assumes such a motion and puts the question to the assembly:

CHAIR: The question is, “Shall the report be received now?” Those in favor of receiving the report now, say aye.... Those opposed say no. ..., etc.

This question requires a majority vote and is neither debatable nor amendable. If the vote is in the negative, a later time for the reception of the report should be set, either by unanimous consent or by a vote on an incidental main motion setting such a time. The manner of presenting the report is the same as described above.

51:29 (For the reception of “minority reports,” see 51:69–70.)
Disposition of Particular Types of Committee Reports

51:30 The proper method of presenting and disposing of different types of committee reports is explained below, with sample reports being given in certain cases. Whenever a motion by the reporting member is a normal part of the procedure in the examples, it is assumed that this member actually makes the motion rather than leaving it to the chair to state the question without a formal motion (see 51:10–13).

51:31 A Report at the Initiative of a Standing Committee Recommending Action. If a standing committee wishes on its own initiative to recommend action by the assembly on a matter within the committee’s concern, it is generally desirable, as stated above, for the report to consist of or conclude with one or more proposed resolutions embodying the committee’s recommendations. Such resolutions should always be in writing. Although the reporting member in a small assembly may sometimes give accompanying explanations orally, it is usually better to submit a formal written report if it is to contain anything other than the resolutions themselves. In any event, after giving or reading the report, the reporting member moves the adoption of the resolution(s). He may make such a presentation, for example, as follows:

REPORTING MEMBER (reading written report):
The Buildings and Grounds Committee wishes to report that the clubhouse roof was extensively damaged by the hurricane last week. The committee therefore recommends the adoption of the following resolution: “Resolved, That the Buildings and Grounds Committee be authorized to request bids for repair of the clubhouse roof and to award a contract for the same, provided that, without further authorization, the cost shall not exceed $5,000.”
George Wilson, Chairman

Mr. President, by direction of [or “on behalf of”] the committee, I move the adoption of the resolution just read.

51:32 The chair then states the question on the resolution, and it is considered just as any other main motion. If the report contains more than one resolution, the reporting member makes a single motion for the adoption of them all, and the rules given in 10:25 apply.

51:33 Although it is not generally the best procedure, a report may sometimes contain recommendations not in the form of motions or resolutions. In any case, as stated above, the recommendations should be placed at the end of the report even if they have been given separately before. Sometimes also, in this connection, it is moved “to adopt the committee’s recommendation(s),” although, as noted in 51:4, this can lead to confusion as to the precise effect of the motion. A better method of treating a committee recommendation that is not in the form of a resolution—in a case, for example, where the recommendation is to authorize a $2,000 expenditure for a personnel consultant’s fee—is to offer a motion like this: “In accordance with the recommendation in the committee’s report, I move that the expenditure of $2,000 for a personnel consultant’s fee be authorized.” The reporting member can make such a motion after reading the report, or another member can obtain the floor to do so. In cases where the committee has offered no resolutions embodying its recommendations and the drafting of satisfactory resolution(s) covering them is likely to require the further attention of a committee, another member can move to refer the matter to the same or another committee for this purpose.9

51:34 A Report on a Referred Subject on Which No Resolution or Motion Was Pending. If a subject on which no resolution or motion was pending has been referred to a committee for recommendations, the report usually should conclude with one or more resolutions, unless the committee recommends that no action be taken. The committee’s report on the subject referred to it may be presented, for example, thus:

REPORTING MEMBER (reading written report):
The committee that was appointed to recommend a suitable recreational facility for the Club to donate to the new Runnymede Park project finds that no provision has been made for tennis courts. The committee therefore recommends the adoption of the following resolution: “Resolved, That the Club underwrite the cost of two tennis courts to be constructed in Runnymede Park.”

Howard Ford, Chairman

Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I move the adoption of the resolution just read.

51:35 The resolution is treated as any other main question, just as in the preceding case dealing with the recommendation of a standing committee. Recommendations not in the form of resolutions are also handled as described in the preceding case.

51:36 A Report on a Resolution Previously Referred to a Committee. When a committee reports on a resolution or other main question which was referred to it or which the rules require to be considered by it before coming before the assembly with the committee’s recommendation, the form of the report and the type of action depends on the nature of the case, as follows:

51:37 Recommending adoption, or rejection, or (when a majority of the committee fail to agree) making no recommendation. Such a report in a small assembly can be given orally (provided that the secretary records it in the minutes); for example, thus:

REPORTING MEMBER: The committee to which was referred the resolution “Resolved, That the Federation endorse the so-called Farnsworth Plan for financing the proposed new school construction program” recommends that the resolution be adopted [or “not be adopted”].

Or:

The committee to which was referred… has been unable to arrive at a recommendation.

51:38 If the resolution is too long to fit into the form given above, a form such as the following may be used:

REPORTING MEMBER: The committee to which was referred the resolution relating to governmental reorganization reports it with the recommendation that it be adopted as referred.

51:39 The reporting member then hands to the chair or the secretary the copy of the resolution that was turned over to the committee.

51:40 When the presentation of the report is concluded in each of the above cases, the resolution or main question becomes pending automatically and the chair states the question accordingly, no motion being necessary. If the committee recommends adoption or makes no recommendation, the chair, as soon as the reporting member has resumed his seat, proceeds:

CHAIR: The committee to which was referred the resolution on… recommends its adoption [or, “is unable to arrive at a recommendation”]. The resolution is… [reading it]. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.
The question is always stated and put on the adoption of the resolution (that is, so that a vote of aye is a vote in favor of it). Thus, when the committee’s recommendation is in the negative, the chair states the question as follows:

CHAIR: The committee to which was referred… recommends that it not be adopted. The resolution is… [reading it]. The question is on the adoption of the resolution, the recommendation of the committee to the contrary notwithstanding. [Or, simply, “The question is on the adoption of the resolution,” in which case the chair may add, “The committee recommends that the resolution be rejected.”]

51:42 Recommending action on a resolution and an amendment that were pending when referred. If an amendment was pending when the resolution was referred, the report can be given orally in a small assembly provided that it is recorded in the minutes; and it should first state the committee’s recommendation as to the disposition of the amendment, then as to the disposition of the resolution. For example:

REPORTING MEMBER: The committee to which was referred the resolution “Resolved, That the proposed expansion of the yacht basin be authorized,” together with the pending amendment “to add the words, ‘at a cost not to exceed $150,000,’” recommends that the amendment be adopted and that the resolution as thus amended be adopted.

As in the preceding case, no motions are necessary, and the chair states the question first on the amendment, and after it is voted on, then on the resolution. The same principles apply if a primary amendment and a secondary amendment were pending when the resolution was referred. The report states the committee’s recommendations first on the secondary amendment, then on the primary amendment, and finally on the resolution; and the chair states the questions in that order.

51:44 Recommending definite or indefinite postponement. If a resolution or other main question is referred to a committee while a motion to postpone it indefinitely is pending, that motion to Postpone Indefinitely (11) is ignored by the committee and by the assembly when the committee reports. But whether or not such a motion was pending at the time of referral, the committee can report the main question with a recommendation that it be postponed indefinitely or that it be postponed to a certain time (14). Thus, if (a) no amendment was pending at the time of referral, or if (b) an amendment was pending and the committee recommends postponement to a certain time, the reporting member makes a motion for the postponement at the conclusion of his presentation. But if (c) an amendment was pending and the recommendation is for indefinite postponement, the motion to Postpone Indefinitely cannot be made until after the amendment has been voted on (see Order of Precedence of Motions, 5). In each of the three cases, the report can be given orally in a small assembly, provided that it is recorded in the minutes, as follows:

a) If no amendment was pending at the time of referral:

REPORTING MEMBER: The committee to which was referred the resolution “Resolved, That…” recommends, and on behalf of [or “by direction of”] the committee I move, that the resolution be postponed until… [or “be postponed indefinitely”].

The chair then states the question first on the postponement, and if that is voted down, next on the resolution.

b) If an amendment was pending and the recommendation is for postponement to a certain time:
REPORTING MEMBER: The committee to which was referred the resolution “Resolved, That…,” together with the pending amendment [stating the amendment], recommends, and by direction of the committee I move, that the resolution be postponed until…

The chair states the question first on the postponement as in (a); but if that is voted down, the question in this case is next on the amendment, and then on the resolution.
c) If an amendment was pending and the recommendation is for indefinite postponement (in which case the motion to Postpone Indefinitely is not in order when the report is made):

REPORTING MEMBER: The committee to which was referred the resolution “Resolved, That…,” together with the pending amendment [stating the amendment], recommends that the resolution be postponed indefinitely.

The reporting member resumes his seat without making a motion, and the chair immediately states the question on the amendment. After it has been voted on, he can state the question on the indefinite postponement (thus assuming this motion), or he can recognize the reporting member to move it by direction of the committee, and the procedure is then as in (a) above.

51:45 Recommending amendments. When a committee reports back a resolution or paper with amendments that it proposes, the amendments, at least, should be in writing unless they are very simple. In a small assembly, depending on the complexity of the case, the amendments can be written out on a separate sheet that is handed to the chair or the secretary at the conclusion of an oral presentation, or a more formal written report can be submitted; the latter procedure should be followed in a large body. In the report, the resolution can be included in full and be followed by a statement of the proposed amendments as in the example below; or, if the resolution or document is long and copies are available to the members, the report can contain only the amendments with enough of the context of the resolution to make them understood.

51:46 If no amendment was pending at the time of referral, the reporting member at the conclusion of his presentation moves the adoption of the amendments proposed by the committee, making a single motion covering them all. But if an amendment was pending at the time of referral, the chair (unless the committee recommends a secondary amendment, whose adoption the reporting member would first move) states the question on the referred amendment first—the reporting member making no motion until after that amendment has been voted on.

51:47 The following example (although equally suitable for treatment by the method of reporting a substitute as in 51:49–51) illustrates the presentation of a written report proposing amendments to a resolution short enough to be read in full, in a case where no amendment was pending at the time of referral.

REPORTING MEMBER (reading written report):

The committee to which was referred the resolution relating to a proposed scholarship in journalism hereby submits its report. The resolution is the following: “Resolved, That the Guild establish a four-year scholarship in journalism at the State University, to be open to sons and daughters of Guild members, the recipient to be chosen annually by the Board of Directors of the Guild.”

The committee recommends that the resolution be amended as follows:
1) by striking out the words “four-year scholarship” and inserting the words “scholarship covering the last three undergraduate years”;
2) by striking out the words “to be open to sons and daughters of Guild
3) by adding the words “upon the recommendation of the Dean of the School of Journalism”; and the committee further recommends that, as thus amended, the resolution be adopted.

Milton Roth, Chairman
[Or (see 51:27):]
Milton Roth
John Harley
Elizabeth Norton
Elwood Quinn

Mr. President, by direction of the committee, I move the adoption of the amendments contained in the report.

51:48 After the chair states the question on the adoption of the amendments proposed by the committee, the procedure is by one of the following methods:

a) Normally the chair immediately rereads or calls for a rereading of the first of these amendments, after which it is open to debate and secondary amendment. A vote is then taken on the adoption of the first committee amendment, after which the next one is read, and so on. Until all of the committee’s amendments have been voted on, no other primary amendments are in order, but only secondary amendments as each committee amendment comes up. After all of the committee’s amendments have been acted upon, other amendments which are not precluded by action taken on the committee amendments can be proposed from the floor. When these have been voted on, the chair puts the question on adopting the resolution or paper as amended.

b) Alternatively, the chair puts a single question on all of the committee’s amendments together, except those for which a member asks for a separate vote, thus: “Those in favor of adopting the amendments recommended by the committee, except those for which a separate vote has been asked, say _aye_.…. Those opposed, say _no_.…. This is called putting the question on the amendments _in gross_. He then takes up the remaining amendments separately in their order. This alternative, although it is in order whenever a committee reports multiple amendments to a referred resolution, may be most advisable when the amendments may be expected not to occasion debate or secondary amendment—for example, if they are reported from a committee of the whole (52) where they have already been open to debate and amendment.

c) By unanimous consent (4:58–63), the assembly can allow the introduction of a motion to adopt all recommendations in the report, without considering the amendments separately.

51:49 Recommending a substitute. If a committee reports back a resolution with a substitute that it recommends for adoption, at least the substitute should be in writing, just as in the case of any other report proposing amendments.

51:50 If no amendment was pending when the resolution was referred, the reporting member concludes his presentation by making the motion to substitute; for example, thus:

REPORTING MEMBER: The committee to which was referred the resolution “_Resolved, That the proceeds from the recent bequest to the Association from the Asquith estate be invested in stock of the Consolidated Development Corporation_” recommends that, for the resolution, the following substitute be adopted: “_Resolved, That the Executive Board be authorized to retain reputable investment counsel with a view to determining appropriate investment of the proceeds from the Asquith bequest._” On behalf of the committee I move that the resolution last read be substituted for the referred resolution.

51:51 The chair then states the question on the motion to substitute. But if amendment(s) were pending when the resolution was referred, then, before the motion to substitute can be made, the question is first on the secondary amendment if one was pending, then on the primary amendment that was pending. When these amendments have been voted on, the reporting member makes the motion to substitute and the chair states the question on it (or the chair can state the question assuming the motion). In any event, the substitute proposed by the committee is treated as in the case of any other motion to substitute (see 12:69–90). If the motion to substitute is lost, the “original” resolution is open to further amendment; but if the motion to substitute is adopted, the resolution thus substituted can be amended only by adding. (Regarding substitutes proposed by committees, see also 12:77–78.)

51:52 In regard to referred questions reported back, see also Resolutions Committee, 59:67–75, 59:80–83.

51:53 A Report Containing Only Information. Even if a report contains only an account of work done or a statement of fact or opinion for the assembly’s information, it should be in writing. Apart from filing such a report, however, no action on it is necessary and usually none should be taken. (See also Motion to Adopt an Entire Report, 51:13, and Conditions for Amendment of a Report by the Assembly Before Its Adoption, 51:19.)

51:54 Membership and Nominating Committee Reports; Reports of Other Kinds of Committees. When a membership committee reports on names of persons referred to the committee as applicants for society membership, the report can be rendered orally, but a list of the names of the persons recommended for membership should be submitted in writing. When such a report is made, the chair at once states the question on the admission to membership of the candidates recommended by the committee.

51:55 The report of the nominating committee consists of a written list of candidates for office, just as in the case of the membership committee’s report. No vote on the nominating committee’s report is taken, however; the procedure is as described in 46.

51:56 For the handling of the report of an auditing committee, see 48:24–25.

51:57 For the report of a committee on bylaws, see 54 and 56.

51:58 For the reports of the three principal committees that perform parliamentary functions in the organization of a convention—the Credentials Committee, the Committee on Standing Rules, and the Program Committee—see 59.

51:59 For the report of an investigating committee appointed under disciplinary procedures, see 63.
Oral Reports; Partial and Minority Reports

51:60 Summary of Types of Reports That Can Be Rendered Orally in a Small Assembly. As stated in 51:23, committee reports should be submitted in writing, with the permissible exceptions noted in the following two paragraphs (51:61–62), which apply to very brief reports in a small assembly, provided that the secretary records the complete substance of the report in the minutes as it is given orally.

51:61 With respect to a resolution or main question that was referred while pending:

1) If the committee report consists only of a recommendation as to the disposition of the referred resolution or motion, the report can be given orally if implementation of the recommendation involves:
   a) no further motion, as when the committee recommends that the referred resolution or motion be adopted, or rejected; or
   b) the introduction of a subsidiary motion that can be made orally, as when the committee recommends that the referred resolution be postponed definitely or indefinitely, or be amended by the change of only a few words.

2) If an amendment or a primary and a secondary amendment were pending with a resolution or main question that was referred and the committee has no new amendments to propose, the report can also usually be oral, in which case the reporting member simply states the committee’s recommendation as to the adoption or rejection, first, of the secondary amendment, and then of the primary amendment, and finally its recommendation as to the disposition of the resolution or main motion—all before any of the referred questions are voted on.

3) When the committee wishes to propose amendments, the amendments themselves should always be in writing if they involve more than a few words; but the complete report—that is, the declaration on behalf of the committee that it recommends the amendments—can be oral or written depending on the complexity of statement required by the resulting parliamentary situation.

51:62 If a subject that was not in the form of a pending resolution or motion was referred to a committee for recommendations, and if the committee in its report presents the recommendations in one or more resolutions offered with no comment, only the resolutions need be in writing and the statement that the committee recommends their adoption can be given orally.

51:63 Action Required by a Partial Report. A partial report of a committee is handled in the same way as the final report. If it is a progress report only, with no recommendations or conclusions, it is treated as any other report for information only, and no action need be taken. But if the partial report recommends action, the question is put on adopting its proposed resolutions, or its recommendations, or the report itself, just as if it were the final report. A committee can be discharged (36) by a majority vote at the time at which it makes a partial report.

51:64 Formal Expression of Minority View (“Minority Report”). The formal presentation of a so-called “minority report”—that is, the presentation of an expression of views in the name of a group of committee members not concurring with the committee report—is usually allowed by the assembly when such permission is requested, as explained below. Regardless of whether a minority report is submitted, however, the report adopted by vote of a majority in the committee should always be referred to as “the committee report,” never “the majority report.”

51:65 Nature of committee minority’s rights with respect to reports. As indicated above, the formal presentation of a “minority report” is a privilege that the assembly may accord, not a matter of right—since the appointment of the committee implies that the assembly is primarily interested in the findings of the majority of the committee’s members. But in debate on any written or oral report in the assembly, any member of the reporting committee who does not concur has the same right as any other member of the assembly to speak individually in opposition. No one can make allusion in the assembly to what has occurred during the deliberations of the committee, however, unless it is by report of the committee or by unanimous consent.

51:66 Form of minority report; minority recommendations. A “minority report” in writing may begin:

The undersigned, a minority of the committee appointed to…, not agreeing with the majority, desire to express their views in the case.…

51:67 If the committee report concludes with a proposed resolution, the minority can (a) recommend rejection of the resolution; (b) recommend amendment of it; or (c) recommend adoption of some other suitable motion designed to dispose of the resolution appropriately.

51:68 If the committee report is for information only, the views of the minority may be similarly constructed or may conclude with a motion.

51:69 Reception of minority report. When the minority of a committee wishes to make a formal presentation of its views, it is customary, unless the assembly refuses permission, to receive its report immediately after the report of the committee. In such a case, the member presenting the committee report can properly notify the assembly that the minority wishes to submit its views in a separate report. As soon as the chair has stated the appropriate question on the committee report, he calls for the minority presentation unless someone objects, in which case he puts the question on the report’s being received. A majority vote is required to receive a minority report; the question is undebatable.

51:70 When the minority report is presented, it is for information, and it cannot be acted upon except by a motion to substitute it for the report of the committee. Whether the views of the minority are formally presented or not, however, any member can move that resolutions proposed by the committee be amended, or that they be postponed indefinitely, or that some other appropriate action be taken.

51:71 Indicating Agreement with a Report Except in a Specified Particular. If a written report of a committee is signed by all who concur and a committee member is in agreement with the report except in one particular, he can, after all who agree to the report have signed, add a statement that he concurs with the report except the part that he specifies, and then sign the statement—regardless of whether a minority report is to be submitted. Similarly, a committee member who agrees with most of a minority report can sign it with an added note indicating what he does not agree with, just as in the case of a committee report. If the committee members in the minority do not agree, the assembly can allow more than one minority report to be submitted.
§52. COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE AND ITS ALTERNATE FORMS

52:1 The committee of the whole and its two alternate forms, the quasi committee of the whole (or consideration as if in committee of the whole) and informal consideration, are devices that enable the full assembly to give detailed consideration to a matter under conditions of freedom somewhat like those of a committee. Under each of these procedures, any member can speak in debate on the main question or any amendment—for the same length of time as allowed by the assembly’s rules—as often as he is able to get the floor. As under the regular rules of debate, however, he cannot speak another time on the same question so long as a member who has not spoken on it is seeking the floor.

52:2 Each of these three devices is best suited to assemblies of a particular range in size and provides a different degree of protection against disorderliness and its possible consequences—which are risked when each member is allowed to speak an unlimited number of times in debate, such risk increasing in proportion to the size of the assembly. With respect to this type of protection, the essential distinctions between the three procedures may be summarized as follows:

a) In a committee of the whole, which is suited to large assemblies, the results of votes taken are not final decisions of the assembly, but have the status of recommendations which the assembly is given the opportunity to consider further and which it votes on finally under its regular rules. Also, a chairman of the committee of the whole is appointed and the regular presiding officer leaves the chair, so that, by being disengaged from any difficulties that may arise in the committee, he may be in a better position to preside effectively during the final consideration by the assembly.

b) In the quasi committee of the whole, which may be convenient in meetings of medium size (about 50 to 100 members), the results of votes taken are reported to the assembly for final consideration under the regular rules, just as with a committee of the whole. But in this case the presiding officer of the assembly remains in the chair and presides.

c) Informal consideration, which is suited to small meetings of ordinary societies, simply removes the normal limitations on the number of times members can speak in debate, as stated in the first paragraph of this section. The regular presiding officer remains in the chair; and the results of votes taken during informal consideration are decisions of the assembly, which are not voted on again.

52:3 The complete rules governing committees of the whole, proceedings in quasi committee of the whole, and informal consideration are given below.
Committee of the Whole

52:4 Although the committee of the whole is not used extensively except in legislative bodies, it is the oldest of the three devices described above and is the prototype from which the other two are derived. Unlike the processes of quasi committee of the whole and informal consideration, a committee of the whole is a real committee in the parliamentary sense. Therefore, during the time that a meeting is “in committee of the whole,” even though the committee consists of the entire body of members in attendance at the assembly’s meeting, it is technically not “the assembly.”

52:5 The parliamentary steps in making use of a committee of the whole are essentially the same as those involved in referring a subject to an ordinary committee. The assembly votes to go into a committee of the whole (which is equivalent to voting to refer the matter to the committee), and a chairman of the committee is appointed. The committee considers the referred matter, adopts a report to be made to the assembly, then votes to “rise and report.” Finally, the committee chairman presents the report and the assembly considers the committee’s recommendations—all as in the case of an ordinary committee.

52:6 Going into Committee of the Whole. As implied above, the motion to go into a committee of the whole is a form of the motion to commit (13). The motion is made as follows:

MEMBER (obtaining the floor): I move to go into a committee of the whole [or, “I move that the assembly now resolve itself into a committee of the whole”] to consider the pending question [or “to take under consideration… (stating the subject)”]. (Second.)

Instructions to the committee of the whole can be included in
If the motion of referral to the committee of the whole is adopted, the presiding officer immediately calls another member to the chair—frequently, but not necessarily, the vice-president—and takes his place as a member of the committee. In large assemblies, the secretary may also leave his seat, the committee chairman may preside from that position, and an assistant secretary may act as secretary of the committee. For the committee’s use until it reports, its secretary keeps a temporary memorandum of the business it transacts, but the committee’s proceedings are not entered in the minutes of the assembly. Those minutes carry only the same kind of record of the referral to a committee of the whole, the committee’s report, and the assembly’s action on the report, as if the committee had been an ordinary one.

Conduct of Business. Like ordinary committees, a committee of the whole cannot alter the text of any resolution referred to it; but it can propose amendments, which it must report in the form of recommendations to the assembly. Amendments to a resolution originating in the committee are in order, however; and if such amendments are adopted within the committee, they are incorporated in the resolution before it is reported to the assembly for action.

A committee of the whole is under the rules of the assembly, except as follows:

1) The only motions that are in order in a committee of the whole are to adopt (within the committee, for inclusion in its report), to amend (what it is proposed to report), and to “rise” or “rise and report”\textsuperscript{12}—except that, among the incidental motions, a point of order (\textsuperscript{23}) can be raised, an appeal from the decision of the chair (\textsuperscript{24}) can be made, a division of the assembly (\textsuperscript{29}) can be called for, and applicable requests and inquiries (32, 33) can be made.

2) In debate on motions to adopt or amend, unless a limit is prescribed by the assembly before it goes into committee of the whole as explained below, each member can speak an unlimited number of times under the rules given in the first paragraph of this section.13

If the committee of the whole wishes action to be taken which requires the adoption of any motion other than those that are in order in the committee as listed in (1) above, it must vote to rise and report a recommendation that the assembly take the desired action (see below). The motion to rise must be seconded, is undebatable, cannot be amended, and requires a majority vote. It is always in order in committee of the whole, except during voting or verifying a vote and when another member has the floor.

52:10 Among the consequences of the rules stated in the preceding paragraph are the following:

1) A committee of the whole cannot appoint subcommittees or refer a matter to another (ordinary) committee.

2) An appeal from the decision of the chair must be voted on directly, since it cannot be postponed or laid on the table in the committee.

3) The only way for debate to be closed or limited in the committee is for the assembly to specify such conditions before going into committee of the whole. If the committee develops a desire to have debate limited, it can only do so by rising and requesting the assembly to impose the desired limits, as explained below. If debate has been closed at a particular time by order of the assembly, the committee does not have the power, even by unanimous consent, to extend the time.

4) A roll-call vote or a vote by ballot cannot be ordered in a committee of the whole, nor can a counted rising vote be ordered except by the chair.

5) A committee of the whole has no power to impose disciplinary measures on its members, but can only report the facts to the assembly. If the committee becomes disorderly and its chairman loses control of it, the presiding officer of the assembly should take the chair and declare the committee dissolved.

6) A committee of the whole cannot adjourn or recess, but must rise in order that the assembly may do so.

52:11 Rising and Reporting. When a committee of the whole has completed its consideration of the matter referred to it, or when it wishes to bring the meeting to an end, or wishes the assembly to take any other action requiring the adoption of a motion which is not in order in the committee, the committee rises and reports.

52:12 If the committee originates a resolution, it concludes by voting to report the resolution, as perfected. If a resolution was referred to the committee, however, it votes only on any amendments that it will recommend, not on the resolution, which it reports back to the assembly with the recommended amendments. On a motion, or by unanimous consent, the committee rises and the presiding officer of the assembly resumes the chair. The committee chairman returns to a place in the assembly in front of the presiding officer, at which, standing, he addresses the chair:

COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration… [describing the resolution or other matter] and has directed me to report the same as follows:…

52:13 The sample reports in the subsection Disposition of Particular Types of Committee Reports (see 51:31–51) may be used as guides for reporting similar cases from a committee of the whole, and the procedures for disposing of such reports as described in the same subsection are likewise applicable. If no amendments are reported, the chair states the question on the resolution that was referred to the committee or that it recommends for adoption; and this question is then open to debate and amendment in the assembly. If amendments proposed by the committee are reported, the committee chairman reads them and hands the paper to the chair, who reads them again or has the secretary do so. The chair then states and puts the question on all of the committee’s amendments in gross (that is, taken together), unless a member asks for a separate vote on one or more of them. If so, a single vote is taken on all of the other amendments, and then the question is stated separately on each of the amendments for which a separate vote was asked. These amendments can be further debated and amended in the assembly, as can the main question after action on all the committee’s amendments—under the same rules as when any other committee reports.

52:14 If the committee, to facilitate completion of its work, wishes the assembly to take an action outside the committee’s powers that requires the adoption of an undebatable motion—for example, to limit debate in the committee—a motion to rise should be made in a form like the following:

MEMBER (obtaining the floor): I move that the committee rise and request that debate be limited… [specifying the desired limitation].

(Second.)

If this motion is adopted, the committee chairman reports to the assembly as follows:

COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration... [describing the referred matter] and has come to no conclusion thereon, but asks permission [or “leave”] to continue sitting with debate limited... [specifying the limitation].

The presiding officer then puts the question on granting the request, and if the result is affirmative, the committee chairman resumes the chair.

52:15 A committee of the whole can also rise, before completing its work, to request instructions, in which case the nature or wording of the request needs to be agreed to before the motion to rise is made.

52:16 If the committee wishes to bring its proceedings to an end because it believes the matter can be better handled under the assembly’s rules, or because it wishes the meeting to be adjourned, the motion to rise can be made in this form:

MEMBER (obtaining the floor): I move that the committee rise.
(Second.)

If this motion is adopted, the committee chairman then reports:

COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN: The committee of the whole has had under consideration... [describing the matter] and has come to no conclusion thereon.

With such a report, the committee passes out of existence unless the assembly directs it to sit again. In this connection, however, the committee in reporting can “ask permission to sit again,” with or without specifying a time; and in granting such a request, the assembly can make the sitting a general order or a special order (41) for a particular time. If the assembly grants the committee permission to sit again without specifying a time, the sitting is unfinished business. A committee of the whole cannot itself arrange a future meeting.

52:17 If an hour for adjournment has been preset in the assembly and it arrives while the meeting is in committee of the whole, the committee chairman announces, “The hour for adjournment of the assembly has arrived and the committee will rise.” The committee chairman then reports that the committee has come to no conclusion on the referred matter, as described in the preceding paragraph.

52:18 Quorum in Committee of the Whole. The quorum of a committee of the whole is the same as that of the assembly unless the bylaws provide, or the assembly establishes, a different quorum for the committee. If the bylaws do not provide a different quorum for the committee, the assembly can establish one in the particular case before going into committee of the whole, regardless of the quorum that the bylaws require for the assembly. If at any time the committee finds itself without a quorum, it must rise and report the fact to the assembly. If the assembly itself is thereupon without a quorum, it must then adjourn or take one of the other courses that are open in the absence of a quorum (40:6–10).
Quasi Committee of the Whole (Consideration as if in Committee of the Whole)

52:19 A somewhat simpler version of the committee of the whole, in effect, is the procedure of consideration in quasi committee of the whole (or consideration as if in committee of the whole), which is convenient in assemblies of medium size. In contrast to a committee of the whole, the quasi committee of the whole is not a real committee, but is “the assembly acting as if in committee of the whole.”

52:20 Going into Quasi Committee of the Whole. The motion for consideration in quasi committee is made in a form like this:

MEMBER (obtaining the floor): I move that the resolution be considered in quasi committee of the whole [or “be considered as if in committee of the whole”]. (Second.)

This motion is debatable as to the desirability of going into quasi committee, just as any other motion to Commit. If it is adopted, the chair concludes his announcement of the result of the vote as follows:

CHAIR (after declaring the voting result): The resolution is before the assembly as if in committee of the whole.

52:21 The presiding officer of the assembly does not appoint a chairman of the quasi committee, but remains in the chair himself throughout its proceedings. The assembly’s secretary keeps a temporary memorandum of the business transacted in quasi committee; but, just as in the case of a real committee of the whole, the minutes of the assembly carry only a record of the report from quasi committee and the action thereon, as shown below.
52:22 Conduct of Business. In the quasi committee of the whole, the main question and any amendments that may be proposed are open to debate under the same rules as in a real committee of the whole—each member being allowed to speak an unlimited number of times as explained in 52:1. In contrast to the case of a real committee of the whole, however, any motion that would be in order in the assembly is also in order in the quasi committee, where it is debatable only to the extent permitted under the assembly’s rules. But if any such motion except an amendment or other motion that would be in order in a real committee of the whole is adopted, it automatically puts an end to the proceedings in quasi committee. Thus, for example, if a motion to refer the main question to an ordinary committee is made in quasi committee of the whole, such a motion to Commit would be equivalent to the following series of motions if the matter were being considered in a real committee of the whole: (1) that the committee of the whole rise; (2) that the committee of the whole be discharged from further consideration of the subject; and (3) that the question be referred to an ordinary committee.

52:23 Reporting. The motion to rise is not used in quasi committee of the whole. If the quasi committee is not brought to an end as described in the preceding paragraph, then, when no further amendments are offered in response to the chair’s call for them, the presiding officer immediately proceeds to report to the assembly and to state the question on the amendments as follows:

CHAIR: The assembly, acting as if in committee of the whole, has had under consideration… [describing the resolution] and has made the following amendments… [reading them]. The question is on the adoption of the amendments.
The proceedings in a quasi committee of the whole are thus concluded, and from this point the procedure is the same as in disposing of the report of a real committee of the whole (52:13)—the chair putting the question on the reported amendments in gross, except those for which a separate vote may be asked, and so on.
Informal Consideration

52:24 As explained above, if a question is considered in either a real committee of the whole or in quasi committee of the whole, the recommendations of the committee or quasi committee must be reported to the assembly and then the assembly must take action on these recommendations. In ordinary societies whose meetings are not large, a much simpler method is to consider the question informally, which in effect only suspends the rule limiting the number of times a member can speak in debate on the main question and any amendments to it.

52:25 When it is desired to consider a question informally, a member makes the motion that this be done:

MEMBER (obtaining the floor): I move that the question be considered informally. (Second.)

This is a variation of the motion to Commit, and can be debated only as to the desirability of considering the question informally. If the motion is adopted, the chair announces the result thus:

CHAIR (after declaring the voting result): The question is now open to informal consideration. There is no limit to the number of times a member can speak on the question or any amendment.

52:26 The “informal” aspect of the consideration applies only to the number of speeches allowed in debate on the main question and its amendments; all votes are formal, and any other motion that is made is under the regular rules of debate. In contrast to the case of a committee of the whole or quasi committee of the whole, the proceedings under informal consideration are recorded in the assembly’s minutes, just as they would be if the consideration were formal. While considering a question informally the assembly can, by a two-thirds vote, limit the number or length of speeches, or in any other way limit or close debate. As soon as the main question is disposed of, temporarily or permanently, the informal consideration automatically ceases without any motion or vote.

52:27 Before the main question is disposed of, the informal consideration can be brought to an end, if desired, by adopting by majority vote a motion “that the regular rules of debate be in force,” or “that the question be considered formally.”
Aids to the Crystallization of Opinion

The more traditional aids to the crystallization of opinion in societies have been, simply, to take a Recess or to refer the matter to a committee—often a large committee composed of members representing differing views in the society, such as a committee of the whole or one of its alternate forms. In more recent years, a practice has developed of establishing breakout groups with every member in attendance being urged to participate in a group. Each breakout group, of which there may be many, is usually kept small—frequently ten or twelve persons—and a moderator is appointed for each group. Often, the groups meet during a recess or adjournment of the assembly. Sometimes, the conclusions reached by the various breakout groups are conveyed to a committee that assembles them and attempts to report a consolidated response to the assembly. At other times, the breakout groups report through their moderators directly to the assembly after it has been reconvened and the matter under consideration is again pending. These reports are in the nature of debate. Whatever method is used, in the end, the pending measure must be returned to the full assembly for final consideration under normal parliamentary procedure—just as in the case of a referred question reported back by a committee—and the assembly must make the final decision, if whatever is to purport to be a product of the assembly is to be valid as the assembly’s act.
Footnotes to Chapter XVI

1. See 3:10 regarding variations of this term that have come into use.
2. For an adjourned meeting (9:17–19), no additional notice is required—except, of course, when it is to meet at the call of the chair rather than at a specified time—although it is desirable to give such notice if feasible.
3. However, motions to close or limit debate (15, 16), including motions to limit the number of times a member can speak to a question, are in order even in meetings of a small board (but not in meetings of a committee; see 50:25), although occasions where they are necessary or appropriate may be rarer than in larger assemblies.
4. Informal discussion may be initiated by the chairman himself, which, in effect, enables the chairman to submit his own proposals without formally making a motion as described in 4:4–8 (although he has the right to make a motion if he wishes).
5. The first person that the chair names is automatically chairman of the committee unless the assembly rejects that person as a committee member or unless he or she declines the chairmanship; but it is good practice for the chair to mention him or her as chairman (see 13:17).
6. For cases in which it is impractical to bring the members of a committee together for a meeting, the report of the committee can contain what has been agreed to by every one of its members (see 51:2). Also, committees are sometimes authorized to hold “electronic meetings”; see 9:30–36, especially Electronic Meetings in Committees (9:35).
7. If a member abuses his privilege of speaking an unlimited number of times in debate in order to obstruct the business of the committee, such dilatory behavior should be reported to the committee’s parent, which may then remove that member from the committee, adopt an order limiting or closing debate in the committee, or take such other action as it deems advisable. However, if there will be no opportunity for this to occur within the time needed to effectively resolve the problem, it is the duty of the committee chairman to deny such a member any further recognition to speak in debate on the pending question.
8. Regarding signature with an expression of disagreement in a certain particular, see 51:71.

9. The motion to refer in such a case is a main motion, since the matter being referred is not a pending question (see 13:6).

10. The step of taking a vote on the adoption of the entire paper applies only to cases where that paper is pending. This step does not apply in the case of a report on a series of amendments to something previously adopted (35), such as bylaws that are in effect (see also 57).

12. As applied to committees in general, the word rise simply describes the parliamentary step of ceasing to function as a committee, preparatory to making a report. As stated in 50:23, the motion to rise is not used in ordinary standing committees, and in ordinary special committees it is used only when the committee is ready to make its final report and go out of existence. In a committee of the whole, on the other hand, the word rise applies to any case of the committee’s returning to the status of the assembly—whether it is expected to be temporarily or permanently.

13. Appeals in committee of the whole are debatable under the same rules as in the assembly—that is, each member (except the chair) can speak only once in debate on them.
CHAPTER
XVII

MASS MEETINGS; ORGANIZATION OF A PERMANENT SOCIETY

§53. MASS MEETINGS

Distinguishing Characteristics of a Mass Meeting

53:1 A mass meeting, as understood in parliamentary law, is a meeting of an unorganized group, which—in a publicized or selectively distributed notice known as the call of the meeting—has been announced:

• as called to take appropriate action on a particular problem or toward a particular purpose stated by the meeting’s sponsors, and
• as open to everyone interested in the stated problem or purpose (or to everyone within a specified sector of the population thus interested).

53:2 To the extent that persons in the invited category are clearly identifiable—as, for example, registered voters of a particular political party, or residents of a certain area—only such persons have the right to make motions, to speak, and to vote at the meeting, and none others need be admitted if the sponsors so choose. In any event, a mass meeting is convened—and those who attend are admitted—upon the implied understanding that the sponsors (who have engaged the hall and assumed the expenses of promoting the meeting) have the right to have the proceedings confined to the overall object they have announced; but that the entire assembly (which is made up of persons whose help the sponsors are seeking) has the right to determine the action to be taken in pursuit of the stated object. With respect to this limitation of the right of attendance—or, at least, of participation—to persons in general sympathy with the announced object of the meeting, a mass meeting differs from a “town meeting,” a public forum, a “lecture-and-discussion-period” type of meeting, or an open hearing held by an instrumentality of government.
Organization of a Mass Meeting

53:3 Call of the Meeting. The call or announcement of a mass meeting should specify the date, hour, and place of the meeting, its purpose, and—where applicable—who is invited to attend. It may also carry an identification of the sponsorship. Depending on the funds available and the people to be reached, the call can be given the desired publicity or distribution by whatever means are expected to be most effective—announcements in the newspapers or by radio or television, a website, mailings, posters, handbills or flyers, or the like.

53:4 Preparation. While a mass meeting should be conducted so as to accord the assembly its proper role in determining the outcome as described above, at the same time, a certain amount of planning by the sponsors is advisable to avoid the risk of the meeting’s foundering.

53:5 Before the meeting, the sponsors should agree on the following:

• whom they prefer for its chairman;
• who shall call the meeting to order and nominate their choice of chairman;
• who shall be nominated for secretary and by whom;
• what rules—if any—shall be proposed for adoption; and
• who shall make the initial talk explaining the purpose of the meeting.

(See also the detailed discussion of these steps below.)

53:6 The person chosen as chairman should be competent as a presiding officer and in sympathy with the object of the meeting, and it is an advantage if he personally knows many of the people who may attend. Depending on conditions, it is sometimes good policy to have a set of resolutions drafted in advance to submit to the meeting. Provision should also be made for occupying the time of the gathering in the event that resolutions are referred to a committee—or a committee is assigned to draft them (see below).

53:7 The “Membership” of a Mass Meeting. At a mass meeting, the “membership” consists of all persons in the invited category who attend. If no qualification was placed in the call, anyone who attends is regarded as a member and has the same rights as members in other assemblies—to make motions, to speak in debate, and to vote. If the call specified only a particular category of persons as invited and if no attempt is made to screen the attendance at the door, anyone attending is presumed to be entitled to participate as a member, subject only to his subsequent identification to the contrary. If only those invited are admitted, anyone legitimately admitted has the rights of a member, and a person who is discovered to have entered fraudulently can be asked to leave.

53:8 Rules in a Mass Meeting. Mass meetings frequently operate with no formally adopted rules, upon the assumption that the meeting will proceed according to the common parliamentary law—or that any differences of opinion on procedural questions can be resolved by citing a recognized parliamentary manual as persuasive (see 1:5, 2:18–19). Depending on the probable character of the assembly, however, it may be wise to adopt a standard parliamentary authority, which can be done by a majority vote on the motion of a member—made, as prearranged by the sponsors, immediately after the election of the secretary (see below). Other rules are seldom necessary at a mass meeting unless it is desired to modify the general rules (43:8–13) as to the allowable length and number of speeches. If such a modification is desired, the assembly can adopt a standing rule covering the desired provisions at the same time as it adopts the parliamentary authority, or at a later time. In regard to the vote required for their adoption, amendment, rescission, or suspension, standing rules of a mass meeting (or a series of mass meetings) are similar to standing rules of a convention as described in 59:32–37.

53:9 In any event, without adoption at a mass meeting and regardless of what rules the meeting may adopt, the provisions of the call, specifying the meeting’s purpose and those invited to attend it, have a force equivalent to bylaws of an organized society; that is, they define the subject matter within which motions or resolutions are in order, and determine who have the right to participate as members (see also 53:7, 53:14–17). This effect is a consequence of the sponsors’ rights as explained in the first paragraph of this section.

53:10 Any person at a mass meeting who, after being advised, persists in an obvious attempt to divert the meeting to a different purpose from that for which it was called, or who otherwise tries to disrupt the proceedings, becomes subject to the disciplinary procedures described in 61.

53:11 Opening of the Meeting; Election of Officers. A chairman and a secretary are in general the only officers required by a mass meeting. Their election takes place immediately after the meeting is called to order, a convenient method of electing them being by voice vote. As explained in 46, the first person nominated is voted on first under this method. In the interest of electing competent persons, it is therefore advisable that a name chosen by the sponsors be placed in nomination first for each office. Additional nominations can be made from the floor and the assembly can elect anyone it wishes, but except under unusual circumstances it is likely to elect the apparent choices of the sponsors.
Although the person who calls the meeting to order can call for nominations for chairman, and another can nominate the sponsors’ choice, it is proper—and simpler—for one person to perform both functions (see Nominations by the Chair, 46:5). In the latter case, at the scheduled hour or shortly thereafter, this person steps to the chair and, after waiting or signaling for quiet, says, “The meeting will come to order. I nominate Mr. A for chairman of this meeting.” After any additional nominations from the floor, the chair puts the question on each name in succession, beginning with the one he placed in nomination himself, as described under Viva-Voce Election, 46:37–41.

When the chairman of the meeting has been elected, he takes the chair and may say a few words of acknowledgment if he wishes, after which he says, “Nominations are now in order for secretary of this meeting.” The person agreed upon to nominate the sponsors’ choice for secretary should promptly place that name in nomination; members can also make additional nominations. The secretary is elected viva voce in the same manner as the chairman. When the secretary has been elected, he takes his seat near the chairman and keeps a record of the proceedings. If additional officers are desired, they can be elected in the same way.
Transaction of Business Specified in the Call

53:14 Explanation of the Meeting’s Purpose. When the elections are completed, the chair says, “The Secretary will now read the call of this meeting.” This reading of the call should include the names of the sponsors. The chair then recognizes the person who is to explain the purpose of the meeting more fully, or the chairman gives this presentation himself if he has been selected to do so.

53:15 Resolutions to Accomplish the Purpose. After the purpose of the meeting has been explained, it is in order for a member to offer a resolution, or a series of resolutions, to accomplish this purpose; or, if believed more suitable to the conditions, it can be moved that a committee be appointed to draft such resolution(s).

53:16 If the plan is for the resolution(s) to be offered immediately after the initial explanation, they can have been prepared in advance—with double-spaced reproduced copies for distribution to those in attendance—and a preselected member can now move their adoption. (For considerations to be observed in the drafting of resolutions, see The Framing of Main Motions, 10:9–25.) After another member has seconded the resolution(s), the chair states the question on them, they are open to debate and amendment, and the assembly proceeds to consider them, the entire procedure being as described in 4 and (for a series of resolutions) in 10:25.

53:17 In stating the question, the chair should make sure that those present understand the means by which the assembly can modify the proposals contained in the resolutions (see 10:29–30), and should provide such explanations as he believes necessary. With reference to the proposal of substitutes or other amendments—or alternative resolutions if those first introduced are rejected—any motion within the scope of the meeting’s purpose as announced in the call is in order; but any motion outside of or contrary to that purpose is not in order. For example, if the announced purpose of a mass meeting is to oppose the construction of a proposed airport in a particular location, any motion or resolution directed toward preventing the airport’s construction can be brought up at the meeting; but a motion whose effect would be to endorse the airport construction project is not in order.

53:18 The rules governing the assignment of the floor and debate, as given in 42 and 43, are generally applicable. In a mass meeting, however, there is no appeal from the chair’s decision in assigning the floor. The rule requiring the assembly’s permission to speak for longer than ten minutes at a time in debate on pending questions applies if the meeting has adopted no other rule.

53:19 Resolutions Drafted by a Committee Appointed at the Meeting. If resolutions have not been prepared in advance, a committee should be appointed at the meeting to draft them. Such a procedure is appropriate when it is believed advisable to obtain expressions of opinion from persons who attend the meeting, before attempting to frame resolutions. In a small mass meeting, the chair at his discretion can permit those present to make brief statements of this nature after the initial explanation of the meeting’s purpose and before the motion to appoint the committee is made. In that case, the chair should specify the time to be allowed each member—which is a matter entirely under the chair’s control unless the meeting has adopted a special rule, since the procedure is in effect a relaxation of the general parliamentary rule prohibiting speeches when no question is pending (see 4:7–8). In any event, the same kind of discussion can also take place in regular debate on the motion to appoint the committee, since it is relevant to the committee’s instructions to draft resolution(s) “expressing the sense of the meeting” on the specified subject, as explained below.

53:20 The person who is to make the motion to appoint the committee should be agreed upon by the sponsors in advance, as well as the matter of whether preliminary discussion is to be permitted before the motion is made. The motion may be made in a form such as the following:

MEMBER (obtaining the floor): I move that a committee of five be appointed by the chair to draft resolutions expressing the sense of this meeting on… [the subject for which the meeting was called]. (Second.)

This is a main motion, since it is made when no question is pending. It is debatable and amendable and can have any subsidiary motion applied to it.

53:21 In a mass meeting it is usually advisable to have all committees appointed by the chair—assuming that the chairman has been well chosen. If the assembly prefers a different method of appointment, however, the procedures that can be followed are as described in 50. When the committee has been appointed, it should immediately retire and prepare the resolution(s).

53:22 During the committee’s absence from the hall, the assembly can attend to any other business related to the object of the meeting; or it can occupy the time in listening to talks, in engaging in forums or seminar-type discussions, or in watching a relevant film; or it can recess (20).

53:23 If the assembly does not recess and the chair sees the committee return to the room, he asks, as soon as the pending business is disposed of (or as soon as the person giving a talk closes, etc.), “Is the committee that was appointed to draft resolutions prepared to report?”

53:24 When the committee chairman has answered affirmatively, the chair says, “If there is no objection, the meeting will now hear the committee’s report. [Pause.] The chair recognizes the chairman of the committee appointed to draft resolutions.” (See treatment of unanimous consent, 4:58–63.)

53:25 If the chair does not notice the committee’s return, the committee chairman, at the first opportunity, obtains the floor and says, “The committee appointed to draft resolutions is prepared to report.” Unless objection is then made, the chair directs the committee chairman to proceed. If anyone objects, the chair puts the question on the report’s being received (see second bulleted item in 51:28).

53:26 The committee chairman, addressing the presiding officer of the assembly, presents the report as follows:

COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN: Madam President, the committee appointed to draft resolutions recommends, and on behalf of the committee I move, the adoption of the following resolution(s)… [reading them].

53:27 On the presentation of this report, the committee is discharged automatically. The chair then states the question on the resolutions, and they are considered in the same way as summarized above for the case in which resolutions are offered by a member from the floor (see also 51).
Adjournment

53:28 In a mass meeting, unless a time for another meeting has already been set (by adopting a motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn, 22, or by adopting temporary rules as described below), a motion to adjourn is not in order while business is pending (see 21:2, 21:3(3)).

53:29 When the business for which the mass meeting was called has apparently been completed and no question is pending, someone should move “to adjourn,” or the chair can call for such a motion. Unless a time has been set for another meeting, the adoption of this motion dissolves the assembly—so that, as explained in 21, it is a main motion and can be debated and amended just as any other main motion. An example of an amendment to a main motion “to adjourn” might be “to add the words ‘until eight o’clock Wednesday evening,’” which would thereby include in the motion a provision to set a time for another meeting.

53:30 In cases where it is desired to close the meeting before its business has been completed, the rules are as follows:

a) If the time for another meeting has already been set, the motion to adjourn is privileged, just as in a meeting of an ordinary permanent society, and is subject to the rules given in 21.

b) If no time has been set for another meeting and a question is pending, a motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn (22) should first be moved and adopted, after which the privileged motion to Adjourn (21) is in order; the procedure is as shown in 22:17–20.

c) If no time has been set for another meeting and no question is pending, any member can move, for example, “to adjourn until eight o’clock Wednesday evening,” which is a main motion.

53:31 When a motion to adjourn a mass meeting has been adopted and no time is set for another meeting, the chair says, “The ayes have it and the meeting is adjourned.” This announcement in effect declares the assembly dissolved. If a time for an adjourned meeting has been set, on the other hand —either previously or by means of a provision included in the motion to adjourn—the chair announces the result by saying, “The ayes have it and this meeting is [or “stands”] adjourned until eight o’clock Wednesday evening.” Before declaring the adjournment, or even taking a vote on adjourning, the chair should make sure that all necessary announcements have been made.
Series of Mass Meetings; Temporary Society

53:32 If more than one mass meeting is necessary to achieve a certain objective, or if the group is working toward the formation of an organized society, a temporary organization to continue beyond a single mass meeting may become necessary. If so, the officers elected at the first meeting are designated chairman pro tem and secretary pro tem—although the words pro tem are not used in addressing these officers. If a permanent society is the aim of the group, the temporary officers serve until the election of permanent officers. If special rules were not adopted at the first meeting, a committee on rules can be appointed to recommend a few rules, providing for the hour and place for holding the meetings, the number and length of speeches allowed (if the general rules given in 43:8–13 are not satisfactory), and a work on parliamentary law to be used as parliamentary authority. If such rules specify periodic dates on which meetings are to be held, each meeting is a separate session (8) as in an ordinary society; but if the time of each succeeding meeting is set at the previous meeting or is “at the call of the chair,” the entire series of meetings constitutes a single session.
§54. ORGANIZATION OF A PERMANENT SOCIETY

54:1 When it is desired to form a permanent society, the organizers proceed in much the same way as for a mass meeting, except that the meetings while the organization is being formed should usually be carefully limited to persons whose interest in the project is known. For this reason, it may be desirable to solicit attendance for these meetings by personal contact or by letter, rather than by public announcement.
First Organizational Meeting

54:2 The first meeting, at which the business portion should be kept brief, sometimes follows a luncheon or dinner. At these meetings for purposes of organization, the call to order can be delayed a few minutes beyond the scheduled time, if desired.

54:3 Election of Temporary Officers, and Introductory Talks. When the person designated for the purpose has called the meeting to order, he announces, “The first business is the election of a chairman.” As in a mass meeting, the one who calls the meeting to order can either nominate a chairman pro tem or immediately call for nominations from the floor, and the nominees are voted on by voice. After the chairman pro tem has taken the chair, a secretary is elected, also as in the case of a mass meeting (see 53:11–13).

54:4 The chair then calls on the member most interested in the formation of the society to provide background information, or he himself can make the talk. Others can also be asked to give their opinions on the subject, but the chair should not permit any one person to monopolize the meeting.

54:5 Adoption of a Resolution to Form a Society. After a reasonable time for such informal discussion, someone should offer a resolution proposing definite action. Those who planned the meeting should have prepared in advance a suitable resolution, which may be in a form essentially as follows:

54:6 Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that a society for… [the object of the proposed society] now be formed [or “shall now be formed”].

54:7 This resolution, when seconded, is stated by the chair, and is then open to debate and amendment. Such a resolution, it should be noted, is only a declaration of intention; its adoption does not bring the organization into being, which is accomplished by the adoption of bylaws and the signing of the membership roll by those who initially join the society, as described below. If the meeting is a large one, it is usually better that, except for a brief statement of purpose, the resolution be offered before the introductory talks mentioned above.

54:8 Further Business Relating to Organization. After the resolution to organize the society is adopted, the succeeding steps generally are:

1) Introduction and adoption of a motion that a committee of a specified number be appointed by the chair to draft bylaws for the society—and, where incorporation may be necessary, to consult an attorney as described below.

2) Introduction and adoption of a motion to fix the date, hour, and place of the next meeting, at which the report of the bylaws committee will be presented. If it is impractical to set a time and place for the next meeting, the motion can be that “when the meeting adjourns, it adjourn to meet at the call of the chair.”

3) Introduction and adoption of a motion authorizing the committee on bylaws to provide reproduced copies of the completed draft for distribution to all who attend the next meeting. In this connection, persons seeking to form a society should take into account the fact that expenses may be involved, whether or not an organization materializes. Initiation fees or dues cannot be collected or received in the name of the society until its organization, as described in this section, is completed. Expenses advanced can be reimbursed.

54:9 Other business before adjournment may include informal discussion of aims and structure of the proposed society—which may serve to guide the bylaws committee (see also below).

54:10 When the business of the first meeting is concluded and a motion to adjourn is adopted (see 53:28–31), the chair says either: (1) “The meeting stands [or “is”] adjourned to meet again at… [the date, hour, and place of next meeting]”; or (2) “The meeting is adjourned to meet again at the call of the chair.”
Work of the Bylaws Committee

54:11 General principles for guidance in the drafting of bylaws are given in 56. The drafting committee may find it helpful to procure and study copies of the bylaws of other organizations similar to the one being formed, although the possible applicability of their provisions must be carefully evaluated in the light of expected conditions within the new society. The committee may also find it advisable to consult a professional parliamentarian.

54:12 If it is expected that the society will own real estate, become a beneficiary under wills, engage employees, or the like, it may need to be incorporated according to the laws of the state in which it is situated (see 2:5–7). In such a case, the bylaws committee should be authorized to have one or more of its members consult an attorney to secure information and advice regarding the legal requirements that must be taken into account in drawing up the society’s bylaws. If the society is to be incorporated, the same attorney should draft the charter or other instrument of incorporation, which the committee submits for approval at the second organizational meeting, before the bylaws are considered, unless there is some reason for delay (see below).

54:13 As indicated above, it is advisable to prepare double-spaced reproduced copies of the proposed bylaws—as drawn up by the committee—for distribution to each person entering the hall for the second organizational meeting. If desired, such copies can be sent in advance to everyone who attended the first meeting.
Second Organizational Meeting

54:14 Reading and Approval of the Minutes. With the temporary officers elected at the first organizational meeting serving until the regular officers are elected, the first item of business at the second meeting is the reading and approval of the minutes of the first meeting, with corrections if necessary.

54:15 Consideration and Adoption of Proposed Bylaws. After the minutes are approved, the report of the bylaws committee normally is received. If there is a proposed corporate charter, that document is presented first. The assembly can amend the draft of the charter, but any resulting modification should be checked by the attorney, to whom the charter is returned after its adoption, for processing under the legal procedure for incorporation in the particular state.

54:16 If there is no proposed corporate charter, the bylaws committee chairman, when recognized for the purpose of presenting the report, begins somewhat as follows:

COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Chairman, the committee appointed to draw up proposed bylaws has agreed upon the following draft and has directed me to move its adoption. [Reads proposals in full—members following on their own copies—unless the first reading is dispensed with; then moves the adoption of the document, as follows:] Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee, I move the adoption of the bylaws.

54:17 No second is necessary, since the motion is offered by a committee of more than one person. Since a complete set of bylaws is commonly considered by article or section (see 28), the chair states the question as follows:

CHAIR: The question is on the adoption of the bylaws as proposed by the committee. The committee chairman [or “the Secretary”] will now read the proposed bylaws, one article or section at a time. After each article or section is read, it will be open to debate and amendment. When amendment of one article or section is completed, the next one will be read and considered. No section or article will be adopted until all have been opened to amendment.

54:18 Each article or section is read separately, each provision being carefully explained by the chairman of the bylaws committee, as described above; and after the last one has been completed, the chair gives opportunity to insert additional paragraphs or sections and to correct any inconsistency or oversight that may have arisen during the process of amendment, as follows:

CHAIR: The entire set of bylaws is now open to amendment. Are there any further amendments?

54:19 If, at any point during the consideration of the bylaws, it develops that important additions or amendments are desirable but will require time or investigation to prepare, it is in order to move to recommit (13) the proposed bylaws, with instructions that the committee report at another meeting for which the time can be fixed. Or, further consideration of the bylaws can simply be postponed (14) to such a meeting. This third meeting in forming an organization, although in many cases unnecessary, in others often pays dividends in increased understanding and a larger membership. In any event, at the second or third meeting, when there are no further amendments, the question is put on adopting the bylaws:

CHAIR: The question is on the adoption of the bylaws as amended. Those in favor of adopting the bylaws, say aye.... Those opposed, say no.... [and so on, taking a voice vote in the regular manner].
In case of doubt, the chair calls for a rising vote and, if necessary, directs that a count be made; or a member can call for a division (29), and can move that the vote be counted, as described in 4:50–53. Unlike the case of amending or revising the bylaws of an organization already established (57), the adoption of the bylaws through which a society is brought into being requires only a majority vote. The bylaws take effect immediately upon their adoption. A negative vote on their adoption can be reconsidered, but not an affirmative one.

Recess to Enroll Members. After the adoption of the bylaws, only those who join the society are entitled to vote in further proceedings. At this point, therefore, the meeting recesses to enroll initial members. Immediate admission to membership is contingent upon signing a permanent record sheet provided in advance by the secretary pro tem—to be filed with the original papers of the organization. This signature constitutes agreement to abide by the bylaws, and is a commitment to prompt payment of the initiation fee (if there is one) and dues for the first year or other period prescribed by the bylaws. Persons thus signing become “charter members.”2 The secretary pro tem records and gives receipt for payments received from members until the treasurer is elected and takes office.

Reading of the Roll and Election of Permanent Officers. After the recess the chairman pro tem calls for the reading of the roll of members, and the secretary pro tem does so. The chair then says, “The next business in order is the nomination and election of the permanent officers as prescribed in the bylaws.”

The nomination and election processes are as described in 46, the election being by ballot if the bylaws so prescribe, which they usually should. The members for whom one can vote are not limited to nominees, since each member is free to vote for any member who is not made ineligible by the bylaws. After the election is completed, the chair declares the results. Unless a proviso attached to the bylaws (57:15–17) prescribes otherwise, the newly elected officers immediately replace the temporary ones.

54:24 Any Other Essential Business. When the offices have been filled and the new president has taken the chair, he should call for any business requiring immediate attention. In a new society it is generally important that the president have time to give careful thought to committee appointments after examining the list of members. It is therefore often advisable to provide for an adjourned meeting to complete the organization before the first regular meeting. The president may find it essential, however, to name the chairmen of certain committees, such as the membership or program committees, immediately.

54:25 When the business of the meeting has been completed, or when an adjourned meeting has been provided for, a motion to adjourn is in order. If it is adopted, the chair announces the result and declares the meeting adjourned.

54:26 Subsequent meetings of the society are conducted as described in 3 and 4. For additional information regarding the organization of a federation by a convention of delegates from prospective member societies, see 60.
§55. MERGER, CONSOLIDATION, AND DISSOLUTION OF SOCIETIES

Combining of Societies

55:1 Distinction Between Merger and Consolidation. In cases where two existing societies wish to combine, there are two possible procedures, which are legally distinct:

- In the case of a merger, one of the two organizations continues, while the other loses its independent identity and ceases to exist, since it is merged—that is, absorbed—into the former.
- In the case of a consolidation, two or more organizations each discontinue their independent existence, and a new entity is formed that includes the memberships of the consolidating organizations, continues their work, and assumes their assets and liabilities.

In either a merger or a consolidation, the resulting organization may be given a new name, which may include, for example, elements of the names of each of the combining organizations.

55:2 Cases Involving Incorporated Societies. If one or more of the organizations involved in a merger or a consolidation are incorporated, an attorney should be consulted to draw up the proper papers and advise as to all steps necessary to fulfill the legal requirements.

55:3 Cases Involving Unincorporated Societies. If none of the organizations involved in a merger or a consolidation is incorporated, the respective procedures are as follows:

- In the case of a merger, the organization that is giving up its independent identity should adopt a resolution substantially as follows: “Resolved, That the A Society be, and hereby is, merged into the B Society as of [date] or when such merger shall be accepted by the B Society.” For its adoption, such a resolution requires the same notice and vote as for amending the bylaws (see 56:50–56). This resolution should be joined with, or its adoption should be followed by the adoption of, resolutions transferring all of the assets and liabilities to the organization into which it is merging, and providing for whatever other administrative details will be required in the mechanics of transition. The society into which the first organization is being merged should adopt a resolution accepting the merger, and this motion similarly requires the same notice and vote as to amend the accepting organization’s bylaws, because it so greatly alters the per-capita interest of each member. Often, resolutions authorizing and approving mergers contain stipulations and qualifications, sometimes even to the extent of naming the officers who will serve during the first year after the merger. Usually these resolutions are the work of a joint committee of the two organizations and form a part of its recommendations.

• In the case of a consolidation, the two or more consolidating organizations adopt resolutions authorizing the consolidation, similar to the resolutions described in the preceding item relating to merger. Often—but not necessarily—these meetings are held simultaneously in the same building. As in the case of a merger, the resolutions containing details relating to the mechanics of transition are usually drafted by a joint committee. After the consolidating organizations have each adopted resolutions which are substantially identical and which provide for consolidation as of a stated date, a joint meeting of the members of the consolidating groups is held for the purpose of organizing the new society that is to emerge. In contrast to the case of a merger, a new set of bylaws must be drawn up and adopted. The procedure is similar to that for the original establishment of a society as described in 54, except that the necessary resolutions and motions normally are worded so that the date on which the new organization is established, its bylaws take effect, and its officers assume office coincides with the date on which the consolidating groups discontinue separate existence.
Dissolution of a Society

55:4 It may sometimes happen over a period of time that the needs which led to the formation of a society have largely disappeared, and the organization may wish formally to disband or dissolve.

55:5 Dissolution of an Incorporated Society. If a society is incorporated, the laws of the state in which it is incorporated provide in some detail the legal requirements for the dissolution of the corporation. An attorney should be consulted to draw up the necessary papers and advise the society as to the procedure to be followed.

55:6 Dissolution of an Unincorporated Society. In the case of an unincorporated society, a resolution should be prepared, such as: “Resolved, That the X Society be dissolved as of March 31, 20__.” This resolution may be preceded by a preamble setting forth the reasons for the dissolution. It is in effect a motion to rescind the bylaws, and therefore requires for its adoption the same notice and vote as to amend them (see 56:50–56). The required notice must be sent to all members of record.

55:7 Such a resolution can be coupled with other resolutions stating the manner in which the society’s assets shall be disposed of and attending to other administrative details—or these can be adopted separately. In certain tax-exempt organizations of a charitable or educational character, federal and state tax laws must be adhered to in the disposal of the organization’s assets. Often such assets are distributed to societies with similar objectives, or to a superior body.
Footnotes to Chapter XVII

1. Called the constitution or constitution and bylaws in some organizations (see 2:8–13). For factors affecting the appropriate size of this committee, see 56:4.

2. Sometimes, in forming a society, all who join before a specified date after the actual establishment of the organization are included in the roll of charter members.
§56. CONTENT AND COMPOSITION OF BYLAWS

Nature and Importance of Bylaws

56:1 The constitution and/or bylaws of a society, as explained in 2, contains its own basic rules that relate to itself as an organization, except for what must be included in the corporate charter of an incorporated society. Under the preferred practice for ordinary societies today, the constitution and the bylaws—once usually separate—are now combined in a single instrument, referred to in this book as the bylaws (although in some organizations called the constitution, or—even though only one document—the constitution and bylaws). A precise statement of the essential characteristics of bylaws, in the sense of the combination-type instrument, and their relation to the other kinds of rules that an organization may have is given in 2, which should be read in connection with this chapter. Because bylaws in this sense are the most important rules which an organization must compose for itself, and because certain considerations must be taken into account that affect their construction as a unified document rather than a series of separate rules, bylaws are given more detailed treatment below.

56:2 The content of a society’s bylaws has important bearing on the rights and duties of members within the organization—whether present or absent from the assembly—and on the degree to which the general membership is to retain control of, or be relieved of detailed concern with, the society’s business. Except as the rules of a society may provide otherwise, its assembly (that is, the members attending one of its regular or properly called meetings) has full and sole power to act for the entire organization, and does so by majority vote. Any limitation or standing delegation of the assembly’s power with respect to the society as a whole can only be by provision in the bylaws—or in the corporate charter or separate constitution, if either of these exists.
Committee to Draw Up Bylaws

56:3 Appointment of Committee. A committee to draw up proposed bylaws is usually appointed at the first organizational meeting when a new society is being formed, as described in 54; or, if an existing society wishes to undertake a general revision of its bylaws, a committee to draw up the proposed revision can be appointed at any regular meeting, just as any other special committee.

56:4 A committee to draw up proposed bylaws should generally be large, and should include the most judicious persons available, those who have a special interest in the rules of the society, and those who would otherwise be likely to consume much time in discussing the bylaws when they come before the assembly for adoption. Persons having writing ability of the kind required should also be included, unless a professional parliamentarian is to do the actual drafting of the bylaws. Even if the drafting is to be done by members of the committee, a parliamentarian can often be of great assistance as a consultant.

56:5 The committee should consult an attorney with reference to the considerations indicated in 54:12 if there is any possibility that the society should be incorporated. If it is to be incorporated, the committee works with the attorney to provide him with the necessary information for drafting an appropriate corporate charter, to which the bylaws must conform. The committee should review the draft of the charter before submitting it to the assembly.

56:6 Initial Discussions; Factors Influencing Content of Bylaws. The committee normally begins its work—with the entire committee present—in general discussion of the desired content of the bylaws. Besides reviewing the existing bylaws
(in the case of a revision), it is well for the committee to study the bylaws of a number of similar organizations, or—if applicable—of other subordinate units within the same state or national society. Before any provisions from other documents are used as a pattern, however, possible differences between the conditions in the other organizations and the one for which the bylaws are being prepared should be carefully analyzed.

56:7 If the unit for which the bylaws are to be drawn up is subject to a parent organization or superior body, such as a state or a national society (or both), or a federation, the bylaws governing at these higher levels should be studied for provisions which are binding upon subordinate units in a way that must be taken into account. The bylaws of a subordinate unit need to conform to those of a superior body only on clearly requisite points. For example, if the superior body limits the size of its subordinate units to 200 members, the bylaws may not contain a higher limit. But the subordinate unit should not adopt provisions from the other document that have no local application, and the bylaws of the superior body should not require it to do so.

56:8 In order to give the organization the greatest freedom to act within its object, bylaws should be made no more restrictive nor more detailed in specification than necessary.

56:9 The description of the basic bylaw articles in 56:16–57 provides a brief indication of the framework within which the particular needs of the society should be considered in determining the content of its bylaws. A sample set of bylaws of the type that might be adopted by a small and independent local society is shown in 56:58–67. Such a model can only illustrate how a typical document of this kind is put together, however; and the provisions must be varied, additional ones inserted, or inapplicable ones omitted, as appropriate to the individual organization.
Drafting of Bylaws; Appointment of Subcommittee(s).

After conferences on the topics described above, the committee should appoint a drafting subcommittee, or several of them for various articles if the bylaws are expected to be long and complex. Another subcommittee may be needed in the latter case to eliminate inconsistencies, make the style uniform, and make sure that, as far as possible, everything relating to a single subject is placed in the same or adjacent articles.

The composition of bylaws is somewhat different from ordinary expository writing, in that it places greater demand on a “tight” clarity and precision in word choice, sentence structure, and punctuation. In bylaws, every punctuation mark may have an important effect; and what is omitted may carry as much significance as what is included. Indisputability of meaning and application is a more important consideration than “readability,” and the latter must be sacrificed when both cannot be achieved. Each sentence should be written so as to be impossible to quote out of context; that is, either its complete meaning should be clear without reference to sentences preceding or following, or it should be worded so as to compel the reader to refer to adjoining sentences—as by beginning, “Any member so elected…” Exceptions or qualifications to statements should be included, as far as possible, within the sentence to which they apply—which can often be accomplished by ending sentences with clauses beginning “except that…” or “provided, however, that…” Where such a technique is impractical, a sentence should contain at least an allusion or reference to any exceptions to its own applicability—as in “Except as provided in Article VI, Section 2 of these bylaws, officers shall…”

Provisions of a temporary nature or relating to the mechanics of transition from old to revised bylaws should not be included within bylaws (see 57:15–17).

56:13 Regarding the inclusion of provisions in the nature of rules of order within bylaws, see 2:20–21.

56:14 Critical Review by Full Committee. After the first draft of the bylaws has been completed, it should be given thorough critical examination in discussions by the full committee. The probable long-range effect of each provision should be weighed, and particular care taken to detect and eliminate any remaining inconsistencies or ambiguities. It is much better to take a good deal of time in consideration of bylaws before their adoption than to find an early need for extensive amendment.

56:15 Presentation of Report. After the proposed bylaws are approved by the committee, the report of the committee is presented to the assembly and is considered seriatim—article by article and, whenever an article consists of more than one section, section by section. The procedure is as described in 54:15–20 and in 28—except that:

a) especially in the case of a revision of bylaws, the motion to adopt them may include provisos relating to transition, as explained in 57:15–17; and

b) a revision of bylaws is adopted by the vote required to amend the existing ones (56:50–56), rather than by a majority vote as in the case of bylaws that bring a society into being.

In presenting the report of the bylaws committee to the assembly, the committee chairman should explain each section and—in the case of a proposed revision of bylaws—make clear what is new about each provision or how it differs from the corresponding provision of the existing bylaws.
Content of Bylaw Articles

56:16 Basic Bylaw Articles. While the number of bylaw articles will be determined by the size and activities of the organization adopting them, and more than those listed below will be needed in some cases, the average society will find it sufficient to include articles on the following numbered headings. The description of appropriate provisions in these articles, while in no sense exhaustive, should prove of help in framing bylaws. Articles are commonly designated with Roman numerals, and sections with Arabic numerals (see also Sample Bylaws, 56:58–67). For ready reference, it may be helpful to precede lengthy bylaws with a table of contents when they are printed or copied for distribution.

56:17 Article I: Name. In unincorporated societies, the full, exact, and properly punctuated name of the society should be given. In incorporated societies or those with separate constitutions, however, the bylaws can omit this article, since the official name of the organization is then stated in the corporate charter or constitution. If the name is in both locations, conflicts may creep in, and it is the name as stated in the superior document that is official.

56:18 Article II: Object. In unincorporated societies, the object of the society should be concisely expressed in a single sentence, the various aspects or phases being written in sequence, set off by semicolons, or in lettered subparagraphs, also set off by semicolons. The statement should be general in its application, since it sets boundaries within which business can be introduced at the society’s meetings—a two-thirds vote being required to allow the introduction of a motion that falls outside the society’s object. For the same reason stated above in reference to the society’s name, this article also can be omitted from the bylaws in incorporated societies or in those having a separate constitution. Some societies prefer to set forth the object in a preamble to the bylaws rather than in an article, in which case the preamble precedes Article I, and the numbering of the remaining articles described below is modified as necessary. This device is especially useful in societies incorporated many years before, whose charter no longer states its object in modern terms or with the specificity now desired.

56:19 Article III: Members. Usually the article on members consists of several sections, covering, for example: (1) classes of members—as “active,” “associate,” and the like—with any distinctions between them being set forth, and, as applicable, the rights of each, and any limitation on their number; and (2) qualifications or eligibility for membership, with application and acceptance procedures, including the method of reviewing and voting on applications. Unless the financial obligations of members are especially complicated, a section of this article should also state: (3) the required fees and dues, the date(s) when payable (whether annually, semiannually, quarterly, etc.), the time and prescribed procedure for notifying members if they become delinquent in payment, and the date thereafter on which a member will be dropped for nonpayment of dues.
Before a member in arrears has been finally dropped under such a provision, his voting rights cannot be suspended unless the bylaws so provide. (See also 1:13n3, 32:8, 45:1, 47:39, 56:61(3).) Members cannot be assessed any additional payment aside from their dues unless it is provided for in the bylaws. If the necessary provisions relating to the financial obligations of members to the society are too complex to be included in this article, such provisions can be set out in a
Some organizations require attendance at a certain proportion of the meetings or a specified minimum participation in the society’s activities as a requirement for continued membership; this also can be done only by provision in the bylaws.

Sometimes this article also contains provisions for: (4) resignations; and (5) honorary members (see 47:42).

In a state or national body or a federation, local units or constituent clubs, rather than individuals, may be the “members” referred to in this article.

Article IV: Officers. As stated in 47, every society should specify in this article of its bylaws the officers it requires, including honorary ones, and how they shall be elected or appointed. The officers rank in the order listed, so that the president should be named first, the vice-president or first vice-president next (unless there is to be a president-elect; see 47:21–22), and so on. Directors should be classed as officers.

Normally all that need be said about the duties of officers (apart from occasional references in other articles, under the topics to which specific duties relate) can be included in the section designating the officers, to the effect that “These officers shall perform the duties prescribed by these bylaws and by the parliamentary authority adopted by the Society.” In cases where the extraordinary duties of officers are numerous, however, a separate article titled “Duties of Officers” may sometimes follow this article, and treat the duties for each office in a separate section. Such a procedure is advantageous in collecting related information in one place, but it results in repetition and may occasion problems of interpretation. Great care must be taken in the writing of the article not to omit any duty, since an implication that the duty is not required could be read into the omission. For this reason, if such an article is to be included, it is well to conclude the section on each office with a clause such as “... and such other duties applicable to the office as prescribed by the parliamentary authority adopted by the Society.”

56:25   A method of nominating officers (see 46) may be prescribed in a section of this article; in the absence of such a provision or any rule adopted by the society, nominations are made in accordance with established custom (if any) or as otherwise directed by vote of the society at the time of each election (see also 31). If the bylaws provide for a nominating committee and prescribe that the committee shall nominate “candidates for each office,” the committee is not limited to one candidate for each office. If it is desired to impose such a limitation, the provision should state that the committee shall nominate “a candidate for each office.”

56:26   Election by ballot should usually be prescribed in the section pertaining to elections and terms of office—often with additional details of election procedure as discussed in 46. A provision can be included to dispense with the ballot when there is only one candidate for an office, although this deprives members of the privilege of voting for “write-in” candidates in such a case. If it is desired to elect by mail, by plurality vote, by preferential voting, or by cumulative voting, this must be expressly stated, and necessary details of the procedure should be prescribed (see 45).

56:27   The length of the terms of office should be prescribed; and unless the terms are to begin at the instant the chair declares each officer elected, the time when they are to begin must be specified. When the bylaws specify the number of years in a term of office, it is understood that the actual term may be more or less than a whole number of calendar years, owing to permissible variation in the dates on which successive elections are scheduled. For example, suppose that the bylaws provide that the annual meeting for the election of officers shall take place “in October or November,” that their terms of office shall begin “at the close of the annual meeting,” and that they shall serve for a term of “one year and until their successors are elected” (or simply for a term of “one year,” which is not recommended; see below). If the annual meeting is held on October 20 of one year and on November 1 of the next (or vice versa), the officers elected at the second meeting take office immediately upon the adjournment of that meeting—and the previous officers remain in office until that time—even though this represents a term of office longer than (or shorter than) one calendar year. (For procedures when an election is not completed at the scheduled time, see 46:44–45.)

56:28 To ensure the continued services of officers in the event, for example, of public emergency or of difficulty in obtaining a nominee for an office, the unqualified wording “for a term of… year(s)” should be avoided, because at the end of that time there would be no officers if new ones had not been elected. The exact wording that instead ought to be used depends on a further consideration, namely, the manner in which the organization wants to make it possible to remove officers before the expiration of their normal term.

56:29 Careful thought should be given to whether, given the circumstances of the particular organization, it is preferable (1) to permit removal of officers only for cause, through disciplinary proceedings that may involve a formal trial, or (2) instead to permit their removal at the pleasure of the membership by a two-thirds vote, a majority vote when previous notice has been given, or a vote of a majority of the entire membership—any one of which will suffice (see 62:16).
To accomplish the first alternative, the bylaws may provide that officers “shall hold office for a term of ______ year(s) and until their successors are elected.” To accomplish the second alternative, the bylaws may provide that officers “shall hold office for a term of ______ year(s) or until their successors are elected.” (Emphases added.) Because the significant difference in effect between the use of “and” and “or” is unlikely to be clear to most members, it may be desirable (although it is not essential) to add an explanatory sentence, such as:

- For the first alternative: “Officers may be removed from office for cause by disciplinary proceedings as provided in the parliamentary authority.”
- For the second alternative: “Officers may be removed from office at the pleasure of the membership as provided in the parliamentary authority.”

Since a reasonable rotation in office is desirable in almost all organizations, a section of this article may well provide that “No person shall be eligible to serve… consecutive terms [specifying the number] in the same office.” For purposes of determining eligibility to continue in office under such a provision, an officer who has served more than half a term is considered to have served a full term in that office.

The method of filling vacancies may also be provided (cf. 47:57–58). Unless the bylaws clearly provide otherwise, notice of filling a vacancy in office must always be given to the members of the body that will elect the person to fill it. If the bylaws are silent as to the method of filling a vacancy in the specific case of the presidency, the vice-president or first vice-president automatically becomes president for the remainder of the term, and the vacancy to be filled arises in the vice-presidency or lowest-ranking vice-presidency; if another method of filling a vacancy in the presidency is desired, it must be prescribed and specified as applying to the office of president in particular.

56:33 Article V: Meetings. The first section of the article on meetings should fix the day on which regular meetings of the society are to be held—as by specifying, for example, “the first Friday of each month.” If the words “unless otherwise ordered by the Society [or “Executive Board”]” are added, the date can be changed in an unusual circumstance, but only for that single meeting on that particular occasion, and not for a period of time including several meetings. To change the general rule fixing the time for meetings would require amendment of the bylaws. The hour and place at which meetings are to be held should not be specified in the bylaws, but should be established by a standing rule (2) adopted by the society or, if it is empowered to do so, by the executive board.

56:34 Some organizations prefer to schedule meetings by resolution. If so, the bylaws should provide for the number of days’ notice required before regular meetings, since under such a practice members cannot determine the meeting dates by consulting the bylaws. Unless otherwise provided in the bylaws, the number of days is computed by counting all calendar days (including holidays and weekends), excluding the day of the meeting but including the day the notice is sent.

56:35 In a separate section it should be provided that “The regular meeting… [specifying which one, as “on the last Tuesday in May”] shall be known as the annual meeting.” As explained in 9, this meeting is conducted in the same way as any regular meeting, except that officers are elected and annual reports are received from officers and standing committees.

56:36 A section authorizing the calling of special meetings should state by whom such meetings can be called—such as the president, the board, or a specified number of members nearly equal to a quorum—and the number of days’ notice required. It may be well to provide that no business shall be transacted except that mentioned in the call (that is, the notice) of the special meeting, although this rule would apply even if not expressly stated (see 9:15). If the bylaws do not authorize the calling of special meetings, such meetings are not permitted—except when authorized by the assembly itself, as part of formal disciplinary procedures, for purposes of conducting a trial and determining a punishment (see 63:21n9).

56:37 The quorum for all meetings should be established in a section of this article (see 40).

56:38 In state or national bodies where one session—usually called a convention—is held annually, biennially, or at less frequent intervals, the article on meetings is titled “Conventions.” While much that is stated above would be generally applicable to such an article, considerable adaptation is needed, as described in 58:6–10.

56:39 Article VI: Executive Board (or Board of Directors). As explained in 49:3–7, all but the smallest societies usually find it advisable to establish a board whose members are the officers of the society, such a body being entrusted with administrative authority and responsibility to a degree that varies with the organization. If there is to be such a board, sections of this article should:

• specify the board’s composition;
• delineate the powers of the board; and
• set forth any special rules by which the board is to conduct its business, such as when and how often it is to meet, its quorum, and the like.
In most societies this body is called the Executive Board unless there is to be a smaller body within it to act for the board between its meetings, in which case the full board is usually designated the Board of Directors and the smaller body is called the Executive Committee (see 49:13). The Executive Committee is then established in a separate article following the one on the complete board, with similar provisions. The bylaws may provide for how the presiding officer and the secretary of the board, and those of the Executive Committee, are to be determined. In the absence of such provisions in the bylaws, however, the president and the secretary of the society also serve in the same capacities within these bodies. Organizations may sometimes give varied names to their full boards, such as Board of Managers, Board of Trustees, Board of Governors, Administrative Council, etc. In such cases, the nature of the particular body as one of the types described above can be determined from the bylaw article that establishes it.

A board may never alter a decision of the society’s assembly (and an executive committee may never alter a decision of either the assembly or the board), even by a motion to Rescind or Amend Something Previously Adopted or by adoption of a proposal which has been rejected, unless expressly authorized by the superior body or by the bylaws (see 49:7). Thus, for example, if it is desired that the assembly adopt an annual budget but that the board be empowered to alter it to deal with contingencies that may develop, the bylaws (or the budget resolution) must specifically confer this power on the board.

Article VI, Section 2 of the Sample Bylaws (56:64) shows an appropriate wording for defining the board’s powers so that the board’s authority will be limited to the power to supervise, and to determine the details of, implementation of the decisions of the society’s assembly and, in a manner not inconsistent with such decisions, to attend to any business of the society that cannot wait until the next meeting.

56:43 If the organization desires to leave the entire administrative authority of the society to the board between the society’s meetings—as may occur, for example, in organizations that meet infrequently or whose main purpose is other than to transact business—the same section might read:

The Executive Board [or “Board of Directors,” etc.] shall have full power and authority over the affairs of the Society except... [specifying classes of business over which the assembly of the society is to retain sole authority].

56:44 Article VII: Committees. The article on committees should provide for the establishment of each of the standing committees (50) that it is known will be required. A separate section devoted to each of these committees should give its name, composition, manner of selection, and duties. If this article names certain standing committees, no other standing committees can be appointed without amending the bylaws, unless a provision is included—usually in a separate section of the article as described below—permitting the establishment of such other standing committees as are deemed necessary to carry on the work of the society. In any event, if a standing committee is to have standing authority to act for the society without specific instructions, if business of a certain class is to be automatically referred to it, or if some other rule of parliamentary procedure is affected by the committee’s assigned function, such procedure must be prescribed in a provision of the bylaws or in a special rule of order, establishing the committee by name.

56:45 The number and nature of the standing committees that may be named in individual sections of this article will depend on the size and object of the organization. The standing committees most frequently established by local societies are few in number; they may include a committee on membership, a program committee, and sometimes a finance committee. (A section relating to the nominating committee, when included, is usually located not in this article but in the article on officers, where nomination and election procedures are usually prescribed.) In national or state bodies more committees may be needed, but local units should not try to establish a committee to correspond to each one in the superior body, and the superior body generally should not require them to do so.

56:46 Appointment of special committees is usually provided for in a separate section that may also, as indicated above, provide for the appointment of additional standing committees. When this section empowers the president to appoint such special committees or additional standing committees as the society or the board shall direct, he is not thereby authorized to appoint other committees on his own initiative. If the president is to appoint committees and it is desired that he have standing authority to appoint non-assembly members to positions on the committees without submitting these persons’ names to the assembly for approval, this section should contain a provision to that effect (see 13:15, 50:12, 50:13(d)).

56:47 This section may also provide that certain officers—for example, the president—“shall be ex officio a member of all committees except the Nominating Committee.” In that case, the president has the right, but not the duty, of participating in the work of the committees (see also 49:8, 50:16). Without such a provision, he has no vote within the committees, nor can he attend their meetings except as invited by a particular committee. The nominating committee should always be expressly excluded in a provision making the president an ex-officio member of committees. It may also be advisable to exclude all disciplinary committees—such as trial and investigating committees—both from a provision making the president an ex-officio member of committees and from a provision authorizing the president to appoint committees.

If no article on committees is included in the bylaws, standing and special committees are established as directed by the society (see 13, 50).

56:49 Article VIII: Parliamentary Authority. The parliamentary authority—through the adoption of which a society establishes its rules of order—should be prescribed in a one-sentence article reading: “The rules contained in the current edition of… [specifying a standard manual of parliamentary practice, such as this book] shall govern the Society in all cases to which they are applicable and in which they are not inconsistent with these bylaws and any special rules of order the Society may adopt.” Societies can adopt special rules of order as they are needed to supplement their parliamentary authority, as explained in 2. It should be noted that the bylaw language recommended above does not authorize the adoption of a special rule of order that would supersede a rule that the parliamentary authority states can be altered only by a provision in the bylaws. When a particular work is adopted as the parliamentary authority, what any other book may say on any point is of no authority if in conflict with the adopted work. In other cases, it may be persuasive but is not binding upon the society.

56:50 Article IX: Amendment of Bylaws. The bylaws should always prescribe the procedure for their amendment, and such provision should always require at least that advance notice be given in a specified manner, and that the amendment be approved by a two-thirds vote. If the bylaws contain no provision for their amendment, they can be amended by a two-thirds vote if previous notice (in the sense defined in 10:44) has been given, or they can be amended by the vote of a majority of the entire membership. In making a requirement that notice be given by submitting the amendment at a meeting in advance of the one at which it is to be considered, the provision should always specify submission at “the previous meeting,” and not “a” previous meeting, since the latter would permit indefinite delay and would defeat the object of giving notice—namely, to alert the members to the proposed amendment so that all those interested can arrange to be present at its consideration. The requirement of notice restricts amendment of the proposed bylaw amendment to changes within the scope of the notice, as explained in 57:10–13 (see also 35:2(6)).

56:51 The manner prescribed for giving notice should suit the needs of the particular assembly. For some, oral notice is sufficient; others may require written notice. Some may require only a general statement of the purport of the amendment; others may require that the exact wording of the amendment be given. If the bylaws require only previous notice of an amendment without limitation of the period within which it must be acted upon, and a committee is appointed to revise the bylaws and report at a specified meeting, the appointing action is all the notice required, and the amendments can be immediately acted upon at the time the committee reports. But if it is required that the amendment itself, or “notice of such amendment,” be submitted at the previous regular meeting, the revision cannot be taken up until the meeting following the meeting at which the committee submitted its report.

56:52 In societies having very frequent regular meetings primarily for presentation of a program, and also monthly or quarterly business meetings (9:1), it is well to permit action on amendments to the bylaws only at a quarterly or annual meeting or their adjournments.

56:53 Where assemblies meet regularly only once a year, instead of requiring amendments to be submitted at the previous annual meeting, the bylaws should provide for both notice and copies of the proposed amendment to be sent to the member delegates or constituent societies a specified minimum number of days in advance.

56:54 If there is a constitution separate from the bylaws, the requirement for amendment of the constitution should be made more difficult than that for amendment of the bylaws; otherwise there would be no purpose in having separate documents. In either case, however, the necessary vote should be at least two thirds.

56:55 In prescribing the vote necessary for the adoption of an amendment, the expression “a vote of two thirds of the members” should never be used in ordinary societies, especially in large organizations. In such societies two thirds of the entire membership would rarely, if ever, be present at a meeting. It is more reasonable to require “a two-thirds vote” (see 44:3–6).

56:56 The wording of this article should avoid redundant phraseology such as “amend, alter, add to, or repeal,” or “alter or amend,” or “amend or in any way change.” The word amend covers any change, whether a word or a paragraph is to be added, struck out, or replaced, or whether a new set of articles is to be substituted for the old one. Efforts to define the meaning of such expressions as “two-thirds vote” should also be avoided in the wording of this article, since these definitions are found in the parliamentary authority.

56:57 Additional Bylaw Articles. Some societies may have cause to include additional bylaw articles, such as those mentioned above, bearing on the subjects of finance, duties of officers, and an executive committee of the board of directors. In a national organization, an article providing for constituent societies or units at regional, state, or local levels and establishing their relationships within the organizational structure may be required. In associations divided into departments, the article establishing them—titled “Departments”—follows the article establishing committees. In professional and some other societies there may be an article on disciplinary procedure; and such an article can be simple or very elaborate. Most such provisions, however, are generally unnecessary in ordinary societies, at least at the local level (see 61–63).
Sample Bylaws

56:58 Regarding the applicability of the following model, see 56:9. Titles of sections are optional, but they may be felt to be desirable, particularly if the bylaws become elaborate, as may be the case, for example, in a complex national organization.

BYLAWS

OF THE _________ SOCIETY

OF _________

56:59 ARTICLE I: NAME

The name of this Society shall be _________.

56:60 ARTICLE II: OBJECT

The object of this Society shall be to _________; to _________; and to _________.

A proposal for membership, signed by the two endorsers, shall be sent to the Recording Secretary, who shall report it, together with the names of the sponsors, at the next regular meeting of the Society. Voting upon the admission shall take place at the next regular meeting thereafter. A two-thirds vote shall elect to membership. A person so elected shall be declared a member of the Society upon payment of the initiation fee and the annual dues for the first year.

Section 3. Initiation Fee and Dues. The initiation fee shall be _________ dollars. The annual dues shall be _________ dollars, payable in advance on or before ______ of each year. The Treasurer shall notify members ______ months in arrears, and those whose dues are not paid within ______ thereafter shall be automatically dropped from membership in the Society.

Section 5. Honorary Life Membership. Upon the signed recommendation of one member, seconded by another member, and by a three-fourths vote by ballot at the annual meeting, honorary life membership may be conferred upon an adult resident of ______ who shall have rendered notable service to the Society. An honorary member shall have none of the obligations of membership in the Society, but shall be entitled to all of the privileges except those of making motions, of voting, and of holding office.

56:62 ARTICLE IV: OFFICERS

Section 1. Officers and Duties. The officers of the Society shall be a President, a First Vice-President, a Second Vice-President, a Recording Secretary, a Corresponding Secretary, a Treasurer, and four Directors. These officers shall perform the duties prescribed by these bylaws and by the parliamentary authority adopted by the Society.

Section 2. Nomination Procedure, Time of Elections. At the regular meeting held on the second Tuesday in February, a Nominating Committee of five members shall be elected by the Society. It shall be the duty of this committee to nominate candidates for the offices to be filled at the annual meeting in April. The Nominating Committee shall report at the regular meeting in March. Before the election at the annual meeting in April, additional nominations from the floor shall be permitted.

Section 3. Ballot Election, Term of Office, Removal from Office. The officers shall be elected by ballot to serve for one year or until their successors are elected, and their term of office shall begin at the close of the annual meeting at which they are elected. Officers may be removed from office at the pleasure of the membership as provided in the parliamentary authority.

Section 4. Office-Holding Limitations. No member shall hold more than one office at a time, and no member shall be eligible to serve three consecutive terms in the same office.

56:63 ARTICLE V: MEETINGS

Section 1. Regular Meetings. The regular meetings of the Society shall be held on the second Tuesday of each month from September to May inclusive unless otherwise ordered by the Society.

Section 2. Annual Meetings. The regular meeting on the second Tuesday in April shall be known as the annual meeting and shall be for the purpose of electing officers, receiving reports of officers and committees, and for any other business that may arise.

Section 3. Special Meetings. Special meetings may be called by the President or by the Executive Board and shall be called upon the written request of ten members of the Society. The purpose of the meeting shall be stated in the call, which shall be sent to all members at least three days before the meeting.

Section 4. Quorum. Fifteen members of the Society shall constitute a quorum.

56:64 ARTICLE VI: THE EXECUTIVE BOARD

Section 1. Board Composition. The officers of the Society, including the Directors, shall constitute the Executive Board.

such other duties as are specified in these bylaws.

Section 3. Board Meetings. Unless otherwise ordered by the Board, regular meetings of the Executive Board shall be held on the first Tuesday of each month from September to June, inclusive. Special meetings of the Board may be called by the President and shall be called upon the written request of three members of the Board.

56:65 ARTICLE VII: COMMITTEES

Section 1. Finance Committee. A Finance Committee composed of the Treasurer and four other members shall be appointed by the President promptly after each annual meeting. It shall be the duty of this committee to prepare a budget for the fiscal year beginning the first day of April, and to submit it to the Society at its regular meeting in March. The Finance Committee may from time to time submit amendments to the budget for the current fiscal year, which may be adopted by a majority vote.

Section 2. Program Committee. A Program Committee of five members shall be appointed by the President promptly after the annual meeting, whose duty it shall be to plan the annual program of the Society. This committee’s report shall be submitted to the Society for its approval at its regular meeting in September.

Section 3. Auditing Committee. An Auditing Committee of three members shall be appointed by the President at the Society’s March meeting, whose duty it shall be to audit the Treasurer’s accounts at the close of the fiscal year and to report at the annual meeting.

Section 4. Other Committees; President’s Ex-Officio Committee Membership. Such other committees, standing or special, may be established by the Society as it shall from time to time deem necessary to carry on its work. Their members shall be appointed by the President unless this rule is suspended by a two-thirds vote before their appointment. The President shall be ex officio a member of all committees except the Nominating Committee and any disciplinary committees.

56:66 ARTICLE VIII: PARLIAMENTARY AUTHORITY

The rules contained in the current edition of Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised shall govern the Society in all cases to which they are applicable and in which they are not inconsistent with these bylaws and any special rules of order the Society may adopt.

56:67 ARTICLE IX: AMENDMENT OF BYLAWS

These bylaws may be amended at any regular meeting of the Society by a two-thirds vote, provided that the amendment has been submitted in writing at the previous regular meeting.
Some Principles of Interpretation

56:68 In preparing bylaws and interpreting them, the following principles of interpretation—which have equal application to other rules and documents adopted by an organization—may be of assistance.

1) Each society decides for itself the meaning of its bylaws. When the meaning is clear, however, the society, even by a unanimous vote, cannot change that meaning except by amending its bylaws. An ambiguity must exist before there is any occasion for interpretation. If a bylaw is ambiguous, it must be interpreted, if possible, in harmony with the other bylaws. The interpretation should be in accordance with the intention of the society at the time the bylaw was adopted, as far as this can be determined. Again, intent plays no role unless the meaning is unclear or uncertain, but where an ambiguity exists, a majority vote is all that is required to decide the question. The ambiguous or doubtful expression should be amended as soon as practicable.

2) When a provision of the bylaws is susceptible to two meanings, one of which conflicts with or renders absurd another bylaw provision, and the other meaning does not, the latter must be taken as the true meaning. For example, assume the bylaws define the officers as “a president, a vice-president, a secretary, a treasurer, and five other members, all of whom shall serve as members of the Board…” Assume also that elsewhere the bylaws speak of “Directors” being board members. A suggestion that the “Directors” are not officers and are additional members of the board would create a conflict within the bylaws and cannot be taken as the true meaning. The “other members” are the same as the “Directors.”

3) A general statement or rule is always of less authority than a specific statement or rule and yields to it. It is not practical to state a rule in its full detail every time it is referred to. General statements of rules are seldom strictly correct in every possible application. The specific statement of the rule that gives the details applying to the particular case must always be examined. For instance: in the Sample Bylaws, Article III, Section 2 (56:61), it is provided that any “adult resident” shall, by a two-thirds vote, be elected to membership. This is a general statement which yields to the proviso stated in Section 1 of the same article that restricts membership to two hundred. Thus, the Society is not empowered to elect a two-hundred-and-first member by a two-thirds vote. No one has a right to quote a general statement as of authority against a specific statement.

4) If the bylaws authorize certain things specifically, other things of the same class are thereby prohibited. There is a presumption that nothing has been placed in the bylaws without some reason for it. There can be no valid reason for authorizing certain things to be done that can clearly be done without the authorization of the bylaws, unless the intent is to specify the things of the same class that may be done, all others being prohibited. Thus, where Article IV, Section 1 of the Sample Bylaws (56:62) lists certain officers, the election of other officers not named, such as a sergeant-at-arms, is prohibited.

5) A provision granting certain privileges carries with it a right to a part of the privileges, but prohibits a greater privilege. The Sample Bylaws, in Article VI, Section 2 (56:64) provide that the executive board may “fix the hour and place of meetings” of the society. The board may, therefore, change the time or the place, or both, of a society’s meeting. But it may not change the day for which the meeting is scheduled.

6) A prohibition or limitation prohibits everything greater than what is prohibited, or that goes beyond the limitation; but it permits what is less than the limitation, and also permits things of the same class that are not mentioned in the prohibition or limitation and that are not evidently improper.

The Sample Bylaws, Article IV, Section 4 (56:62) limits a member to holding one office at a time. This limitation carries with it, of course, the prohibition of holding more than two or three offices as well. The next clause in Article IV, Section 4 prohibits officers from serving three consecutive terms in the same office. Hence, an officer cannot serve four consecutive terms, but may serve two consecutive terms. Article IX of the Sample Bylaws (56:67) limits amendments to the bylaws to those of which notice has been given and which are adopted by a two-thirds vote. Thus, the change of a single word is prohibited unless these conditions are met, and a revision of the entire bylaws requires that the same steps be taken.

7) The imposition of a definite penalty for a particular action prohibits the increase or diminution of the penalty. If the bylaws state that a member shall be dropped from membership on a board if he misses three consecutive regular meetings of the board, he cannot be retained by vote of the board, nor can more severe penalties be imposed, such as a fine in addition. If, for example, it is desired to allow the board to diminish or waive the penalty, or increase it, the bylaw must not make it definite or must specifically provide for diminution, waiver, or enlargement.

8) In cases where the bylaws use a general term and also two or more specific terms that are wholly included under the general one, a rule in which only the general term is used applies to all the specific terms. Where the bylaws provide in the basic enumeration of the classes of membership that “members may be active, associate, or honorary,” the general term “member” is used to apply to all three classes of members. But if, in the article on Members, it is stated that members may be either active or associate members, or if that article simply describes “members” without classification, as in the Sample Bylaws, Article III (56:61), the term “member” applies only to those classes or that class of members, even if honorary members are provided for elsewhere—in which case honorary membership is not real membership. Similarly, if the bylaws provide for “elected officers” and “appointed officers,” the word “officers” or the expression “all officers,” used elsewhere in establishing the term during which office shall be held, applies to both the elected and the appointed officers.
§57. AMENDMENT OF BYLAWS

57:1 A motion to amend the bylaws is a particular case of the motion to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35); it is therefore a main motion, and it is subject to the same rules as other main motions with the following exceptions:

1) Special requirements for this motion’s adoption should be specified in the bylaws, and they should always include at least notice and a two-thirds vote, which (with a vote of a majority of the entire membership as an allowable alternative) are the requirements for its adoption if such specification in the bylaws is neglected (see 56:50–56).

2) Permissible primary and secondary amendment of the motion to amend the bylaws is usually limited by the extent of change for which notice was given, as explained below.

3) An affirmative vote on the motion to amend the bylaws cannot be reconsidered (37).

4) The rule that, when a main motion is adopted, no other conflicting main motion is thereafter in order is not applicable to the motion to amend the bylaws, since several notices of proposals representing different approaches to the same problem may have been given, and all such bylaw amendments are entitled to be considered (see 57:6–8).
Method of Handling Bylaw Amendments

57:2 The extensiveness of amendments to the bylaws will determine the method of handling them, as follows:

57:3 Isolated Changes. If only an isolated change is to be made in the bylaws, it can be treated as any motion to Amend Something Previously Adopted (35), subject to the particular rules indicated immediately above. When a series of isolated changes to the bylaws are needed to achieve one end—such as abolishing the office of “Historian” and eliminating all references to it—the changes should be offered in a single motion. If the changes are related in such a way that all of the individual amendments must be made, if any one of them is made, in order for the bylaws to be coherent, then the motion cannot be divided (see 27:5).

57:4 Sometimes a more extensive change is proposed involving the substitution of an entire section, group of sections, or article. In such a case, often only a few separated passages are actually involved in the changes, and they are offered in the form of a single proposed substitute in order to avoid time-consuming separate action on each change. The text of the substitute should then be given with the notice of proposed amendment, or the notice should delineate each of the actual changes, and only changes within the scope of those contained in the substitute can be considered. Portions of the substitute which remain as in the existing version cannot be amended, since they involve areas for which no notice of proposed change was given.

57:5 General Revisions. Changes of the bylaws that are so extensive and general that they are scattered throughout the bylaws should be effected through the substitution of an entirely new set of bylaws, called a revision. Notice of such a revision is notice that a new document will be submitted that will be open to amendment as fully as if the society were adopting bylaws for the first time. In other words, in the case of a revision, the assembly is not confined to consideration of only the points of change included in the proposed revision as submitted by the committee that has drafted it. The revision can be perfected by first-degree and second-degree amendments, but as in the case of any other bylaw amendment, the old document is not pending; and therefore, while the revision can be rejected altogether, leaving the old bylaws intact, the old document cannot be altered with a view to retaining it in a changed form. Consideration of a revision of the bylaws is in order only when prepared by a committee that has been properly authorized to draft it either by the membership or by an executive board that has the power to refer such matters to a committee.\textsuperscript{2}

57:6 Procedure of Consideration. A revision of bylaws or a lengthy amendment involving more than one section should be considered seriatim as described in 28\textsuperscript{2}. If notice is given of several amendments which conflict so that all cannot be given effect, the chair should arrange them in a logical order, much as in the case of filling blanks (12), generally taking the least inclusive amendment first and the most inclusive last so that the last one adopted is given effect. That arrangement of the amendments can be altered by the assembly; a motion to rearrange the amendments requires a second, is not debatable, is amendable, and requires a majority vote. An affirmative vote adopting such an arrangement is not subject to a motion to Reconsider, nor may a later, separate amendment be offered as a substitute for a pending one.

57:7 However, as already stated in 57:1(4), all bylaw amendments of which notice was given are entitled to be considered, as a matter of the rights of their proposers, and a bylaw amendment is not dropped simply because it would conflict with one previously adopted. This procedure does not violate the normal parliamentary rule as might appear, because when any bylaw amendment is adopted, that amendment becomes a part of the bylaws immediately; and it is the bylaw language as thus amended, rather than the previous language, which any bylaw amendments subsequently considered would now propose to modify.

57:8 If an amendment that has not been considered no longer presents a rational proposition because it was applicable only to language which has disappeared from the bylaws in this process, such a bylaw amendment must, of course, be dropped; but this situation should generally not arise if the amendments are taken up in proper order as indicated above.

57:9 The final vote on a bylaw amendment should be counted and recorded in the minutes unless it is nearly unanimous.
Amending a Proposed Amendment to the Bylaws

57:10 While amendments to a proposed bylaw amendment can be made in both the first and the second degrees (as applicable) and can be adopted by a majority vote without notice, they are subject to restrictions on the extent of the changes they propose.

57:11 If the bylaws require previous notice for their amendment (as they should), or if they do not but notice has been given and a majority of the entire membership is not present, no amendment to a bylaw amendment is in order that increases the modification of the article or provision to be amended (see 35:2(6)). This restriction prevents members from proposing a slight change and then taking advantage of absent members by moving a greater one as an amendment to the amendment. Thus, if the bylaws place the annual dues of members at $10 and an amendment is pending to strike out 10 and insert 25, an amendment to change the 25 to any number between 10 and 25 would be in order, but an amendment to change the number to less than 10 or greater than 25 would not be in order, even with unanimous consent. Had notice been given that it was proposed to increase the dues to more than $25 or to reduce them below $10, members who opposed such a change might have attended the meeting to vote against the amendment.

57:12 The same principle applies to an amendment in the nature of a substitute for sections or articles (short of a revision), as already indicated above; the proposed substitute is open to amendments that diminish the amount of change, but not to amendments that increase it or that introduce new changes. Thus, if an amendment is pending to substitute a new rule for one that prescribes the initiation fee and the annual dues, and the substitute proposes to alter the initiation fee but does not propose any change in the annual dues, then an amendment which recommends changing the annual dues would not be in order.

57:13 Amendments to strike out a sentence, paragraph, or section deserve special care. In such cases, the existing bylaw is not itself open to consideration, but only the amendment. If notice is given to strike out a provision of the bylaws and some members feel it should be retained with certain changes whose substance would be outside the scope of that notice, those members should immediately give notice of the amendments to the existing provisions which they think are advisable. Otherwise, friends of the existing provision will be cut off from opportunity to work out compromises for its partial retention by perfecting the existing language.
Giving Notice of Amendments

Notice of a bylaw amendment should be formally worded in a form such as “To amend Article IV, Section 2, by striking out ‘March’ and inserting ‘April’ after the words ‘second Tuesday in.’” When the bylaws do not place a limitation on those who can give notice of a bylaw amendment, any member is entitled to do so. If notice is to be given at a meeting, this is usually done under new business, although it can be done at any time, even after it has been voted to adjourn if the chair has not actually declared the meeting adjourned. A bylaws committee can give notice in that part of the order of business set aside for committee reports. If notice is to be sent with the call of the meeting at which the amendment will be introduced, the society is responsible for paying the cost of sending such notice, not the member proposing the amendment. The notice should fairly inform the members of the changes contemplated. Showing the existing bylaw and the bylaw with the proposed changes in parallel columns is a good device so long as the exact amendment, stated in a formal manner, is set out at the top across both columns. When notice of a bylaw amendment is given in open meeting, it cannot be considered at that time, except to be discussed informally and briefly at the discretion of the presiding officer (see also 43:31–34).
Time at Which a Bylaw Amendment Takes Effect

57:15 An amendment to the bylaws goes into effect immediately upon its adoption unless the motion to adopt specifies another time for its becoming effective, or the assembly has set such a time by a previously adopted motion. While the amendment is pending, a motion can be made to amend the enacting words of the motion to amend by adding a clause such as this: “… with the proviso that [or, “… provided, however, that”] this amendment shall not go into effect until after the close of this annual meeting.” Or, while the amendment is pending, an incidental motion can be adopted that, in the event of the amendment’s adoption, it shall not take effect until a specified time. Either method requires only a majority vote. It is a mistake to encumber the bylaws themselves with provisions which have effect for only a limited time. If the mechanics of transition to operation under a revised set of bylaws will be complicated in ways for which the act of adoption must provide temporarily, such provisions can be numbered and attached to the revision draft on a separate sheet headed “Provisos Relating to Transition.” The motion to adopt the revision can then be made in this form: “I move the adoption of the revised bylaws with the provisos attached thereto.”

57:16 Amendments to the article on officers may raise difficulties in relation to the time at which adopted changes take effect, unless special care is taken. A society can, for example, amend its bylaws so as to affect the emoluments and duties of the officers already elected, or even to abolish an office; and if it is desired that the amendment should not affect officers already elected, a motion so specifying should be adopted before voting on the amendment, or the motion to amend can have added to it the proviso that it shall not affect officers already elected. There is virtually a contract between a society and its officers, and while to some extent action can be taken by either party to modify or even terminate the contract, such action must be taken with reasonable consideration for the other party.

57:17 It is important to note that, although the time when a bylaw amendment takes effect can be delayed by the assembly, the amendment becomes part of the bylaws immediately upon adoption. If the amended bylaws are printed, a footnote or similar device should indicate that the amended language is not yet in effect and, if language was removed by the amendment, the text of that provision should be given if it is still applicable in the organization.
Captions, Headings, and Article and Section Numbers

57:18  It was formerly customary to permit the secretary to fill in captions, headings, and article, section, or paragraph numbers or letters, and the like, after the assembly had adopted by-laws or other long documents. Such designations were treated as mere marginal notations which could be clerically modified. It is now the usual practice to include these subtitles or identifying numbers or letters as an integral part of what is adopted by action of the assembly.

57:19  In the process of amending previously adopted documents of this kind, indisputably necessary changes in designation by number or letter may be presumed to have been included in the assembly’s action even if they were not mentioned. For example, if an assembly adopts a motion “to insert after Article III a new Article IV reading as follows:…,” the secretary or a committee would, of course, raise the numerical designation of each of the later articles by one, even if the enacting motion made no reference to doing so. Only the assembly can amend captions or headings under the rules applicable to bylaws or other papers if such change could have any effect on meaning, and this authority may not be delegated. Corrections of article or section numbers or cross-references that cannot result in a change of meaning can be delegated, however, to the secretary or, in more involved cases, to a committee. An assembly may delegate its authority in this connection in a particular case, by adopting, for example, a resolution such as the following:

Resolved, That the secretary [or, “the… committee”] be authorized to correct article and section designations, punctuation, and cross-references and to make such other technical and conforming changes as may be necessary to reflect the intent of the Society in connection with…
Footnotes to Chapter XVIII

1. Where a particular type of organization is subject to local, state, or national law containing provisions relating to its procedure—as for certain procedures in a labor organization, in condominium associations, or in an incorporated association—it may be desirable to add at this point a phrase such as, “and any statutes applicable to this organization that do not authorize the provisions of these bylaws to take precedence.” However, such statutes (those that do not authorize bylaws to take precedence) supersede all rules of the organization which conflict with them, even if no mention is made of it in the bylaws.

2. A proposal to substitute a new set of bylaws that is submitted by anyone other than such an authorized committee is not improper, but it is not treated as a general revision. In such a case, only changes within the scope of those contained in the substitute can be considered, as described in the previous paragraph (57:4).
CONVENTIONS

§58. CONVENTIONS OF DELEGATES

58:1 As commonly understood in parliamentary law and as used in this book, the word convention refers to an assembly of delegates (other than a permanently constituted public lawmaking body), who are usually chosen specially for each session as representatives of the constituent units or subdivisions within a larger group of people, to sit as a single deliberative body acting in the name of the entire group. The most common type of convention is that of an established state or national society—in which the delegates are selected by, and from among, the members of each local unit. Other terms by which such a convention may be described in some organizations include congress, conference, convocation, general assembly, house of delegates, and house of representatives.

58:2 The term house of delegates, or house of representatives, is often applied particularly in the case of learned or professional associations, to distinguish the voting body of delegates from large numbers of other members of the constituent units, who come to the convention to attend seminars, workshops, educational or social activities, or the like. In some societies, also, house of delegates or house of representatives may describe a body of delegates who, instead of being elected only for a convention session, are elected for a fixed term during which they hold sessions from time to time as the bylaws may prescribe.

58:3 Conventions vary in size, duration, and complexity of operation. A relatively small state society may hold a one-day convention consisting of two or three meetings at which all delegates are present. A week’s convention of a national scientific or educational association, on the other hand, may be divided into a number of specialized sections meeting separately at the same time, with only a few meetings when the entire body of delegates gathers in one hall.

58:4 In addition, a convention is sometimes called for the purpose of forming an association or federation; or (like a mass meeting, 53) it may be convened to draw interested parties or representatives of interested organizations together in acting upon a particular problem.

58:5 This chapter is limited to the features common to most conventions and relates principally to the convention of an established society. (For variations of procedure applying to other types of conventions, see 60.)
Basic Provisions in Bylaws

58:6 In the case of an established state, regional, or national society composed of constituent units, the bylaws (see 2:8–13; 56:33ff., especially 56:38) or other governing instrument of the association or parent body should:

- authorize a periodic convention;
- define its powers and duties;
- fix its quorum;
- specify its voting members;
- prescribe the qualifications of its delegates and alternates, the basis of determining their number, and the method of electing them;
- specify when, how, and to whom the call (notice) of the convention is to be sent; and
- make such provision as the particular convention may require for its organization and operation.

58:7 Basic provision for the voting body of members may be worded in the bylaws as appropriate to the particular organization—for example, as follows:

The voting members of the State Convention shall be the state officers (including members of the Executive Board of the State Association), the president (or, in his absence, the vice-president) of each club within the Association, and the elected delegates of each club.

58:8 In addition, the bylaws at the level on which the convention is held should prescribe: (1) the conditions for a constituent unit to be in good standing for purposes of the right to representation—commonly including a minimum membership requirement; and (2) the number of delegates to which a unit shall be entitled depending on its size—usually by specifying, for example, that each unit shall be represented by its president, plus one additional delegate if the unit has more than a certain number of members, or two additional delegates if the unit has more than twice that number of members, and so on.

58:9 The bylaws at the level at which the convention is held should also provide for the election of alternates as described in 58:13–15.

58:10 To avoid a change of officers during the convention, the bylaws should provide that newly elected officers shall take up their duties at the close of the convention (see 56:27).
Convention Members and Alternates

58:11 Ways in Which Voting Membership Comes About. Voting membership in a convention of an established society generally comes about in one of the following ways:

1) through being an accredited delegate elected by a constituent body especially to act as its authorized representative (or one of several representatives) in a particular convention;

2) through provision in the bylaws, as in many organizations, that the president or chief officer (or, in his absence, the vice-president) of each constituent local unit shall be the delegate or one of the delegates;

3) through being an incumbent elective officer of the organization on the level at which the convention is held—for example, an officer of a state society in a state convention, where the officers of the state society as listed in the bylaws are ex officio the officers of the convention as well as members of it, irrespective of the number of delegates that the local unit to which an officer belongs is entitled to elect; or

4) through being an accredited elected alternate and replacing, at the time of the convention, a delegate who is unable to attend or who withdraws from registered status.

58:12 Filling of Vacancies Arising in a Delegation. If the president of a constituent unit is unable to be present at the convention of an established society, his place there is taken by the vice-president (or by the second, third, or ranking available vice-president if necessary and if there are such officers), just as for any other duty in which the vice-president acts in the president’s place. If the vice-president is himself an elected delegate but takes the president’s place, the vice-president’s original position as an elected delegate is filled by an elected alternate in the manner explained below—just as when any other elected delegate does not serve.

58:13 Provision for alternates. To ensure as complete representation at the convention as possible, the bylaws at the convention level should provide that each unit shall elect a certain number of alternates—frequently equal to the number of delegates. To maintain a uniform standard of representation, the qualifications for election as an alternate—which may include membership in good standing for a prescribed number of years—are made the same as for a delegate.

58:14 Alternates normally are elected with a designated order, in which they will be called to serve, if available, as vacancies arise in the delegation of their constituent unit. When a unit has more than one delegate, an elected alternate (other than the vice-president) is not associated with any particular delegate. The vacancy that occurs first in point of time (except one involving the president when the vice-president is able to serve in his stead) is filled by the first elected alternate or the ranking one available, and so on.

58:15 In cases where the individual delegates within a unit’s delegation represent particular areas or groups, it may sometimes be desirable to make exception to the foregoing rule by providing, in the bylaws at the convention level, for the pairing of each alternate with a specific delegate. The disadvantage of such a system arises when both a particular delegate and his only alternate are unable to attend the convention—thus depriving a constituent unit of part of the representation to which it is entitled.

58:16 Status and seating of alternates; replacement procedure.
Alternates registered as such are usually provided with badges of a different color or shape from those of delegates and are seated in sections apart from them. (In large conventions, assigned seats in the assembly hall ordinarily can be guaranteed only to the voting body.) When an alternate is officially registered by the Credentials Committee (59:14(5), 59:25) as taking the place of an elected delegate, however, he is supplied with a delegate’s badge and becomes a voting delegate with the same duties and privileges as if originally so elected.

58:17 If an alternate is to replace a delegate who has registered, proper evidence of that delegate’s withdrawal from such status must be presented to the Credentials Committee, and the alternate must be reregistered as the new delegate before he can sit or vote as a member of the convention. It is the duty of any registered delegate who ends his presence at the convention to see that his departure is promptly reported to the Credentials Committee, and to whatever authority is concerned with locating the proper accredited alternate if one is available. Unless the rules of the body provide otherwise, no alternate or other person can “substitute” for a delegate who remains registered. In other words, a delegate’s temporary absence from the convention hall does not entitle an alternate to make motions, speak in debate, or cast the delegate’s vote—even with the delegate’s authorization—unless a rule of the body permits this procedure.

58:18 Duties of Delegates. When a member of a constituent unit has accepted election as a delegate, he has the obligation to attend the convention, with such expense allowance as the unit may provide; he should not leave it to an alternate to serve in his place except for serious reason. At the convention, the delegate has the duty to be present at the business meetings, and to be prepared on returning from the convention to present to his unit an information report of what transpired. A delegate is free to vote as he sees fit on questions at the convention, except as his constituent unit may have instructed him in regard to particular matters scheduled for consideration.
Caucuses

58:19 Prior to or during a convention, members of a delegation may need or wish to meet as a group to decide how they will act with reference to certain matters to come before the convention; a meeting of this kind is usually called a caucus. Unless instructed otherwise by its parent society or unit, such a caucus is governed by the rules of procedure applicable to committees (50), since the delegation is in effect a committee to represent and act at the convention for the constituent society or unit that chose it. If the president of a constituent society (or in his absence the vice-president) is automatically a delegate to a convention, he usually acts as chairman of his delegation; otherwise the delegation chairman is selected as outlined for the case of any other committee (13:17–18).

58:20 Sometimes caucuses are held of different groupings of delegates, as, for example, all delegates from a certain district, territory, or other geographic area as defined by the organization; and they are similarly governed by the rules generally applicable to committees.

58:21 As in the case of any committee, in the absence of a superior rule to the contrary a constituent society or unit can instruct its delegation, although this is not always a good practice in ordinary societies. Such instructions are binding upon the delegation to the extent that the convention’s presiding officer and other officials have a duty to enforce instructions of which they have been properly and officially notified. Such instructions, for example, frequently require a delegation to take a position for or against a measure expected to come before the convention, or to vote for certain candidates. As stated above, the delegates are free to vote as they see fit except where an instruction has been given; but a society can, by instructing its delegation, bind it to vote as a unit (that is, to cast all of its votes in accord with the decision of the majority of the delegation) on all issues, on a particular class of business, or on certain matters to be acted on by the convention.

58:22 The term caucus is also sometimes applied to a similar meeting of all the known or admitted partisans of a particular position on an important issue—in a convention or any other deliberative assembly—who meet to plan strategy toward a desired result within the assembly. Such a meeting may be held on the presumed informal understanding that those who attend will follow the decisions of the caucus.
§59. ORGANIZATION OF A CONVENTION OF AN ESTABLISHED SOCIETY

59:1 Most conventions must operate on a closely controlled schedule and transact a large amount of business quickly—often with rented facilities available only for a prearranged length of time and with each added day of meetings entailing considerable expense both to the association and to the delegates personally. Maximum effort toward a well-organized convention is therefore essential.
Advance Preparation

59:2 The work of organizing and preparing for a convention normally begins weeks or months in advance and involves many committees, under the general direction of the officers and the board of the association.

59:3 The principal parliamentary functions most directly connected with the formal organization of the convention itself are performed by three committees, each of which has been appointed by the president or the board as prescribed in the bylaws. These three committees are: (1) the Credentials Committee, which prepares and certifies to the convention the list of officers, delegates, and alternates that it has registered after finding them entitled to accreditation; (2) the Committee on Standing Rules, which drafts rules of operating procedure specially required for the particular convention; and (3) the Program Committee, which works out a convention program combining a suitable order of business (41) with special features designed to promote and develop the association or society as a whole. Because the duties of these committees are exacting, a member should never be appointed to one of them for any other reason than his ability in the field involved.

59:4 In addition, depending on the size of the convention, one or more committees concerned with the necessary physical arrangements, such as securing the hall, hotel accommodations, and related services, should be appointed. If a single committee is responsible for all of these matters, it may be known as the Convention Arrangements Committee.

59:5 Another important committee that usually works before as well as during the convention is the Resolutions Committee. This committee screens and recommends appropriate action on resolutions and original (as distinct from incidental) main motions to come before the convention.

59:6 The duties of the convention committees are more fully explained in the succeeding portions of this chapter.

59:7 Each of the regular standing committees of the association—in consultation with the presiding officer, the executive body or board, and the Program Committee—should also carefully plan the presentation and management of the convention business that is the particular committee’s concern.

59:8 A preconvention meeting of the board of the association is often held in the convention city a day or more in advance of the convention opening. A number of decisions bearing on business to come before the convention may be made at this meeting.
Services of a Parliamentarian

59:9 A key consultant in the preparation for a convention should be the parliamentarian, who should be engaged well in advance. It is desirable that this person be a professional—the more seasoned in actual operating experience within organizations, the better. Although he has the duty of giving parliamentary advice and opinions at convention meetings (where he should be seated next to the presiding officer), the parliamentarian’s most important work may well be performed before the convention opens (see 47:46–54). During the period of preparation and while the convention is in progress, he should serve as the principal adviser to the president, the officers, and the committee chairmen regarding management of the convention as it relates to the actual transaction of business. The chairmen of the Credentials Committee, the Committee on Standing Rules, the Program Committee, the Resolutions Committee, the Elections Committee if there is one, and the standing committees who are to present business to the convention should all consult with the parliamentarian during this time; and it may be advisable that he should attend certain meetings of these committees. The parliamentarian should always be present at the preconvention board meetings mentioned above.
Formal Organization Procedure at the Convention

59:10    Before a convention can transact any other business, it must officially form itself into a single voting body—which is done at the first business meeting. Preliminary ceremonies—whether at the commencement of the convention or at the beginning of each day—are not regarded as business. A separate formal opening of inspirational nature can be held, if desired, before the convention is officially organized. When the assembly of delegates of an established society has been so organized in accordance with the bylaws or other governing rules as described below, it then acts as and in the name of the whole society and may be referred to as “The Tenth Annual Convention of the National Society of _________” or, as common formerly, “The National Society of _________ in convention assembled.”

59:11    The official organization of the convention is brought about by the separate consideration and adoption of the reports of three committees mentioned above—the Credentials Committee, the Committee on Standing Rules, and the Program Committee, in that order.

59:12    As each report comes up for consideration, it is presented to the convention by a reporting member, normally the respective committee chairman. This person concludes his report with a statement that “by direction of the committee” he moves its adoption—unless he is not a voting member of the convention, in which case anyone who is such a voting member can make this motion; a convenient practice is for the recording secretary of the convention or a qualified member of the committee to do so. No second is required if the motion is made by a member of the committee. If no one offers the motion promptly, the chair can call for it, or can assume it by stating, for example, “The question is on the adoption of the report of the Program Committee.”

59:13 Each of these committee reports is debatable and amendable. In an ordinary convention of a society, however, debate or proposals for amendment of any of them seldom occur, and the reports are likely to be adopted without dissenting vote—if the committees have done their work well. (The vote required for their adoption is a majority for the reports of the Credentials Committee and the Program Committee, and normally a two-thirds vote for that of the Committee on Standing Rules, as explained in 59:34–35.) With the adoption of these three separate reports, the convention is officially organized for conducting business.
Credentials Committee

59:14 Responsibilities. The specific duties of the Credentials Committee are listed below. Items (1) through (4) must of necessity be spread over a considerable period of time in advance of the convention. Items (5) and (6) must be performed at the convention location during the period leading up to the convention opening. Items (7) and (8) relate to the committee’s duties during the convention.

1) Distribution well in advance, to each constituent body entitled to representation, of (a) information, in accordance with the bylaws, as to the authorized number of representatives and alternates, eligibility requirements, and the time and manner of their election;¹ and (b) credentials forms with instructions that they are to be returned by a specified date after having been filled in with the names of the representatives and alternates designated by the constituent unit, and having been signed by the unit’s secretary and sometimes also by its president. A single form can be used for all representatives and alternates, or a separate form in the form of a card can be used for each delegate and each alternate, with different colors to distinguish delegates from alternates. If alternates are paired with specific delegates as described in 58:15, double cards can be used.

2) (a) Examination of all forms returned, to verify the eligibility of each member listed; and (b) notification to the proper constituent unit whenever an elected delegate or alternate is found ineligible (through nonpayment of dues, insufficient duration of membership, etc.), advising the unit of its right to designate one of the elected alternates named on its credentials form to take the place of any ineligible delegate (unless replacement is automatic because of pairing of alternates with individual delegates).

3) Compilation of the list of members entitled to register and the basis of this right (officer who is a convention member ex officio, unit president, elected delegate, alternate, etc.) arranged for quick reference—as alphabetically by districts, clubs, sections, or as may be suitable.

4) Arrangements for registration to take place at the convention—beginning one or two days before the convention opens (see 59:16).

5) Registration—which normally includes these steps:
   a) Submission, by the member intending to register, of evidence that he is entitled to do so;
   b) Verification by the committee, or a subcommittee of it, that the member’s credentials are correct;
   c) Recording of the member as officially registered, upon his paying the registration fee (which is sometimes sent in in advance) and signing the list of registrations; and
   d) Issuing of the particular badge to which the member is entitled, the official program, and additional necessary information, such as time and place of individual section or committee meetings or workshops.

6) Preparation of the committee’s first report to the convention, which can include registrations only to such an hour as will enable the chairman of the Credentials Committee to present this initial report as the first item of official business of the convention.

7) Continuation of the committee until the convention ends—to record changes in the registration rolls occasioned by: (a) additional registrations (which the bylaws or the convention’s standing rules (59:27ff.) may require to be closed at a specified time slightly earlier than the final adjournment); or
(b) the departure of delegates and the reregistration of alternates who replace them.

8) Submission of a supplementary credentials report—at the beginning of the first business meeting each day and at other times when required—as resulting from changes in the registration rolls.

59:15 In societies that maintain a permanent administrative headquarters, most of the clerical duties required of the Credentials Committee in advance of the convention usually develop into a routine technique preserved from year to year and performed largely by the regular paid staff; but the authority and responsibility for general direction of this work remain with the Credentials Committee.

59:16 Times and Place of Registration. The times and the place of registration should be announced in the printed convention program. In a convention of any size lasting for a number of days, registration may begin one or two days before the convention opens, and provision should be made to handle a heavy volume of registrations during the afternoon and evening before the opening business meeting, as well as on the morning of that meeting. This registration normally takes place in a separate room or hall whose size and equipment depend on the probable total number of registrants. Throughout the convention, a registration desk of the Credentials Committee in a convenient location should be manned a reasonable time before each business meeting begins, and should always remain open during meetings. Near the end of the convention, usually only one or two committee members stay on duty.

59:17 Method of Registration. The method used by the Credentials Committee to register the delegates and alternates will vary according to the size of the convention. A procedure in common use is outlined as follows:

59:18 The entire association holding the convention is divided into parts, such as states, districts, or counties, and a separate section of the register—often prepared in triplicate, as noted below—is set up for each subdivision. Each section of the register contains—arranged in an appropriate logical order—the typed names of the constituent societies or units located within the corresponding geographical area; and under each unit’s name are typed alphabetically the names of the delegates and alternates that have been sent in on the unit’s credentials blanks, provided that these persons have been found eligible by the committee.

59:19 During the initial period when the bulk of registrations take place, usually two committee members are assigned to a separate and conspicuously marked table or station for each section of the register. In a large convention, ushers may be helpful in guiding delegates and alternates to the proper section, where they present their credentials and sign the register to the right of their typewritten names.

59:20 At least one, and frequently two, duplicate registers (or photocopy-reproduced sets of the register pages) are desirable in addition to the Credentials Committee’s master copy—one duplicate list to be submitted as an attachment to the committee’s report, the other for later use by election tellers in verifying the eligibility of voters. By use of the latter copy, counting procedure in an election can be expedited by dividing the tellers into subcommittee groups for each section of the register, according to the same pattern as in the case of the Credentials Committee members during registration. The delegates’ badges can also be correspondingly labeled or numbered to facilitate identification with the correct section.

59:21 Cases of contested seats in a delegation will seldom arise except in political conventions. In the rare event of a contest between two delegates or groups of delegates and serious doubt as to which is entitled to be seated, the committee should omit both from the list and report the fact of the contest to the convention as explained below. If, on the other hand, after hearing the facts, the committee thinks the contest is not justified, it should enter on the list only the names of the delegates whose claim it finds to be legitimate. The same rules apply to the more common case of delegates chosen by a local unit that is not entitled to representation or has chosen delegates in excess of its entitlement.

59:22 Adoption of Report. Before the Credentials Committee report is adopted, since the membership has not been established, the only motions that are in order are those related to its consideration or to the conduct of the meeting before its adoption, as well as those that are in order in the absence of a quorum (40:6–8). Even, for example, a motion relating to the validity of the holding of the convention is not in order at such a time. It is, therefore, essential that the committee establish and hold itself to a deadline for registrations to be included in its first report, which will leave it time to prepare that report. The opening ceremonies will afford some opportunity for this work, and, while it is in process, delegates can continue to register—but not to be included in the committee’s initial report. If the report is not ready in time, the convention may continue with other nonbusiness matters, such as speakers, or may stand at ease or take a recess.

59:23 The Credentials Committee report, which is read by the committee’s chairman, states in substance that, “Attached is the list of the names of the voting members of the convention and their alternates who have been registered up until… [indicating the hour to which the list is corrected].” This statement should be followed by whatever statistical summary is customary in the particular organization (frequently including a breakdown according to basis of voting membership as indicated in 59:14(3)), and always gives the total number of convention members entitled to vote and the number of registered alternates. Normally the list of delegates and alternates is not read unless a portion of it is read upon request, for information. If there is an unresolved contest between delegates, the particulars are stated, as well as the fact that the names of the contesting or contested delegates do not appear on the roll. The committee chairman concludes the report by saying, “On behalf of the committee, I move that the roll of delegates hereby submitted be the official roll of the voting members of the convention.” The report with the attached list of names is then handed to the chair or to the secretary.

59:24 Unless there is debate or proposed amendment, the chair, before taking the vote on the adoption of the report, asks, “Are there any questions on the report?” If seat(s) are contested, an amendment can be offered substantially in this form: “To amend by adding ‘provided that the name of George J. Morse be added to the roll of delegates as submitted, as a delegate from the state of Missouri.’” The name of the rival delegate can then be offered in a secondary amendment, for example, “to strike out ‘George J. Morse’ and insert ‘Frank Norton.’” Whether or not a contest is reported, it is in order to move such amendments or even to move to substitute an entirely different set of delegates for any delegation in the reported list, but no such amendment is permitted to include more names than those of a single challenged delegate or delegation all of whom are challenged on the same grounds, together with any claimants involved. On an amendment proposing changes in the list of delegates, none of the delegates involved in the case can vote. Those seated by the committee, though contested in a case not yet reached, can vote on all cases except their own. On the question of adopting the Credentials Committee’s report or on motions connected with its consideration, only those persons whose names are on the list of voting members reported by the committee (as this list stands after any amendment already approved by the convention) are entitled to vote.

59:25 Roll of Voting Members; Supplementary Reports. When the report of the Credentials Committee is adopted, it is thereby ratified as the official roll of voting members of the convention—subject to changes through later reports. A voting member who registers after the submission of the first report assumes his full status as soon as he has done so, if his status is not questioned; if it is, it must await a decision by the committee or the convention itself. Although the Credentials Committee normally makes a supplementary report only at the beginning of each day, it may be called upon to do so at other times, such as immediately before an important vote. If there has been no change in the roll of registered delegates since the last report, no motion or vote is required; but if there are changes, the committee chairman concludes his report by saying, “On behalf of the committee, I move that the revised roll of delegates hereby submitted be the official roll of voting members of the convention.” Although this motion might appear to be one to amend something previously adopted (35), it requires only a majority vote for its adoption, since it is always understood that the roll will be altered as delegates arrive late or leave early, and alternates may thereby be shifted in status.

59:26 The Credentials Committee’s master roll of currently registered voting members of the convention must be maintained at all times in such a way that their exact number can be promptly determined. Accuracy of the list of registrants is essential, since it may affect the outcome of elections or closely contested issues. If the bylaws or the convention’s standing rules do not prescribe a quorum (40)—which they should do—the quorum is a majority of the number of voting members who have actually registered at the convention as in attendance, irrespective of whether some may have departed.
Committee on Standing Rules

59:27 Responsibilities. The Committee on Standing Rules drafts and submits for consideration a group of rules known as “The Standing Rules of the Convention,” which, as adopted, will apply to that one convention only. These rules must in no way conflict with the bylaws of the society, but (in contrast to ordinary standing rules in a local society) they can involve modifications of rules contained in the parliamentary authority prescribed by the bylaws. The standing rules of a convention usually contain both “parliamentary” rules relating to the conduct of business, and nonparliamentary rules, so that in some ways they resemble a combination of special rules of order and ordinary standing rules (2). Since their effect expires at the close of the session that adopts them, however, they differ from either of the latter types of rules in certain respects.

59:28 The standing rules of successive conventions held by a society often become developed to a point where little change in the rules adopted by the preceding convention is necessary. On the other hand, the work of this committee may sometimes require extensive research into past proceedings of the organization. In any case, the parliamentarian should always be consulted regarding the convention’s standing rules, and he often prepares a first draft for submission to this committee.

59:29 A copy of the “Proposed Standing Rules of the Convention” that the committee is to recommend—usually printed in the official program—should be handed to each person when he registers. Until the proposed standing rules are adopted, the convention is governed by the rules in the organization’s parliamentary authority, such as those concerning the seating of delegates and alternates (see 58:16–17 and 59:2) and assignment of the floor (see especially 42:16).
59:30 Presentation and Adoption of Convention Standing Rules.
The report of the Committee on Standing Rules is presented to the convention immediately after the adoption of that of the Credentials Committee. As part of this report, the proposed rules are read in their entirety—unless the rules are not substantially changed from those adopted in the last few conventions and every delegate has been provided with a copy when registering at the convention or previously, in which case the committee chairman or other reporting member may omit their reading. The report concludes by offering a motion such as the following: “By direction of the Committee on Standing Rules, I move the adoption of the Standing Rules of the Convention as printed [or, “as just read”].” (For the procedure when the person presenting the report is not a voting member of the convention, see 59:12.)

59:31 The chair states the question by saying, “It is moved to adopt the Standing Rules of the Convention as printed [or, “as just read”],” but any voting member of the convention then has the right to have the proposed rules read by the chair or secretary if they were not read by the committee chairman or other reporting member.

59:32 After debate or amendment (if any), a single vote normally is taken on the complete body of rules. It should be understood, however, that although the rules may be organized to have the appearance of being a single document, they are in fact a group of separate main motions being offered by the committee under one enacting motion. Therefore, by the demand of a voting member of the convention, a separate vote can be required on any individual rule (see 10:25, 27:10), and the procedure of seriatim consideration can be applied only if there is no objection (see 28). If a demand is made for a separate vote—which is advisable only if a serious matter appears to be at stake—the remainder of the rules are acted on first, and then those separated out are acted on individually. If an additional rule is proposed during the consideration of the committee’s proposed rules (or later during the convention), it is similarly acted on separately after the committee’s proposals have been voted on.

59:33 In putting the question to a vote, the chair may initially omit reading the proposed rules. However, if they have not been read even once, any delegate then has the right to demand that they be read before the vote. Even if previously read, any delegate has the right at that time to demand the reading of any rule that has been amended since being read.

59:34 A group of proposed standing rules requires a two-thirds vote for its adoption whenever it includes any rule that would require a two-thirds vote for its adoption if voted on individually (see next paragraph below). Therefore, under the usual procedure of voting on the standing rules as a “package,” a two-thirds vote will normally be required for their adoption—because, if they are to fill the needs of the convention, they nearly always include provisions that can be imposed only by a two-thirds vote.

59:35 Vote Required for Adoption of an Individual Rule. If a standing rule of a convention is voted on individually, the vote necessary for its adoption is in some cases two thirds and in others a majority, depending on the nature of the rule:

1) Convention standing rules requiring a two-thirds vote for adoption (even individually) are, in principle, distinguished by the same characteristics as provisions which, in an ordinary local society or assembly, would need a two-thirds vote to be placed in effect for the duration of a meeting or session, or would require adoption as a special rule of order to continue in force from session to session (see 2). An example would be a rule limiting the time allowed for debate. Rules in this class are described by the term parliamentary standing rules in a convention as used in this book.

2) A standing rule is individually adoptable by a majority vote in a convention if it does not fall in class (1) above, and consequently could be adopted in a local assembly as an ordinary standing rule (see 2). Examples of such convention rules would be those relating to the wearing of badges or to the format in which written reports or resolutions shall be submitted.

59:36 Vote Required to Amend or Rescind a Convention Standing Rule. To amend or rescind a standing rule of a convention requires a two-thirds vote or the vote of a majority of all the delegates or other “voting members” of the convention who have been registered, except that a rule individually adoptable by a majority vote can be amended or rescinded by a majority vote after notice on at least the preceding day.

59:37 Suspension of a Convention Standing Rule. Any standing rule of a convention (except one prescribing the parliamentary authority) can be suspended for a particular specified purpose by a majority vote, even if the rule required a two-thirds vote for its adoption. Under such a suspension, however, the applicable rules in the parliamentary authority prescribed by the bylaws (or by a rule of the convention) come into force—as if the standing rule had not been adopted. To suspend a convention standing rule and also the general parliamentary rule normally applying to the same situation requires a two-thirds vote, just as to suspend the general rule when no standing rule is involved (25). No standing rule of a convention can be suspended for the remainder of the session, and no standing rule which has only a single application can be suspended, since this would be equivalent to rescinding the rule, and the case would have to be treated accordingly.

59:38 Sample Set of Convention Standing Rules. The standing rules of a convention must vary with its size, type, and responsibilities. While it is not possible to frame model rules which are universally applicable, the following sample set illustrates the nature of the standing rules adopted by many conventions.

STANDING RULES OF THE __________ CONVENTION OF __________

59:39 Rule 1. (a) The Credentials Committee, directly after the opening ceremonies of the first business meeting, shall report the number of delegates and alternates registered as present with proper credentials, and shall make a supplementary report after the opening exercises at the beginning of each day that business continues.

(b) A member registered as an alternate may, upon proper clearance by the Credentials Committee, be transferred from alternate to delegate at any time during the continuance of business meetings.

59:40 Rule 2. For admission to the assembly hall, to facilitate identification and seating, members, alternates, and others shall be required to wear the badge issued by the Credentials Committee upon registration.

59:41 Rule 3. A resolution offered by an individual member shall be in writing, signed by the maker and the seconder—each of whom shall be a voting member of the convention—and shall be sent directly to the desk of the Recording Secretary.

59:42 Rule 4. (a) All resolutions except those proposed by the Executive Board [or “Board of Directors,” “Board of Managers,” etc.] or by committees, and all recommendations made in reports of officers or committees of the convention that are not in the form of resolutions, shall be referred without debate to the Resolutions Committee; resolutions proposed by the Executive Board or by committees shall be presented by the Board or proposing committee directly to the convention.

(b) Each member who offers a resolution shall be given an opportunity to explain it to the Resolutions Committee if he so requests.

(c) The Resolutions Committee shall prepare suitable resolutions to carry into effect recommendations referred to it, and shall submit to the convention, with the Committee's own recommendation as to appropriate action, these and all other resolutions referred to the Committee, except questions which the Committee by a vote of two thirds of its members may decide not to report.6

(d) The convention by a majority vote may suspend this Rule 4 and may immediately consider a question, or may order the Resolutions Committee to report a question at a certain time, even if the Committee has voted not to report it.

59:43 Rule 5. No member shall speak in debate more than once on the same question on the same day, or longer than two minutes, without permission of the convention granted by a two-thirds vote without debate.

59:44 Rule 6. All reports and other material for the permanent record or printed proceedings shall be in typing and, immediately on presentation, shall be sent to the Recording Secretary.

59:45 Rule 7. Nominations for each office to be filled by the convention shall be limited to one nominating speech of three minutes and one seconding speech of one minute for each nominee.

59:46 Rule 8. Notices for announcement to the convention shall be in writing, signed by the person (or a proper representative of the persons) under whose authority the announcement is issued, and shall be sent to the desk of the Recording Secretary.

59:47 Rule 9.7 The rules contained in the current edition of Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised shall govern the convention in all cases to which they are applicable and in which they are not inconsistent with the bylaws of the Society [or “Federation,” “Association,” etc.] and these standing rules.
Program Committee

59:48 The Program Committee plans and submits the proposed schedule of meetings, proceedings, and special events of the convention. When the program is adopted by the voting body, with or without amendment, it becomes the order of business of the entire convention session (41). The program also commonly includes—interwoven throughout the convention timetable—a series of addresses, forums, workshops, exhibits, tours, and other activities designed for membership-training, motivational, or entertainment value.

59:49 Responsibilities. The nature of a convention Program Committee’s responsibilities is considerably more complex than for a committee of the same name in a local society that includes a “program” as a part of each meeting. The overall program must cover all aspects of the society’s work and commitments on the level at which the convention is held (district, state, national, etc.)—reviewing the period since the preceding convention and anticipating the course of the society until the next convention. In addition to enabling the convention to handle all business that it should consider within the time available, the program should be of such nature as to stimulate each delegate to an evaluation of the society’s policies, accomplishments, and opportunities, inasmuch as benefit from the convention to the general membership may depend largely on the impression that each local president or delegate transmits to the unit he represents.

59:50 The Program Committee usually begins work soon after the preceding convention closes, and its duties continue throughout the convention that it plans—so that it functions as virtually a standing committee of the organization. The Program Committee should work in close contact with the president and the parliamentarian.

59:51 Planning the Program. Although the program must come before the convention for adoption and can be amended by it, many details must be decided far ahead. Prior to the convention, the Program Committee must have the authority (sometimes with designated members of the executive committee or board as advisers, and often acting in cooperation with a Convention Arrangements Committee) to engage outside speakers or entertainers, to work out an order of business allotting appropriate amounts of time to each subject, and to make all necessary advance arrangements.

59:52 Some societies send a tentative skeleton program to the constituent units several weeks beforehand as part of a printed “Call to Convention.” The complete program that the committee expects to recommend should be printed at the latest practical time for handing to each person as he registers at the convention.

59:53 The order of business for the complete series of a convention’s business meetings normally includes, in expanded form, the elements of the one followed in ordinary meetings of the society’s constituent units (41). In the case of the convention, however, greater detail and precision are necessary for two principal reasons: (1) Adherence to a prearranged schedule is imperative if the convention is to complete its work—timing being an especially important factor if there are to be features carried by radio and television at particular hours, addresses by government officials, or appearances by professional artists. (2) Each member has the right to know at which meeting and at what approximate time a particular matter can be expected to come before the convention, so that he may avoid absence from the hall during important debates or votes.

Some organizations divide the printed convention program into two parts, the first of which gives the times and places of special events and—for each business meeting—only the hours of the call to order, adjournment, and any scheduled recesses. The second part, listing the items or classes of business set for each meeting, is then known as the agenda (41).

While it is not possible to set out a model program that would be suitable for all conventions, the following principles are commonly applicable:

1) Notice of the times of registration should be given early general distribution by mail or other means, and should also be printed in the convention program. Handing out—with the program—a schedule of preconvention meetings of the board and of committees is often advisable, although the persons directly concerned with these meetings may need to be separately informed at an earlier time.

2) When the invocation is offered, the national anthem is played or sung, and the Pledge of Allegiance is recited in opening ceremonies, they should always be in that order—that is, the invocation first and the pledge last.

3) If there is an address of welcome—often given by a local public official at the opening of the convention—it should, as a matter of courtesy, be followed by remarks of acknowledgment and appreciation by the presiding officer or his designee on behalf of the organization.

4) For each meeting, the program should specify the hour of opening and closing, and the program or the agenda should specify the order in which the subjects or classes of subjects assigned to that meeting are to come up. The extent to which such classes are subdivided should be guided by the particular conditions and probable timing problems of the individual convention. Sufficient time should be allotted for thorough consideration of each important policy question that is expected to come before the convention. For such an item of business, it is frequently advisable to set a particular hour—which automatically makes the matter a special order unless otherwise specified (see 41:58–59). Listed subjects for which no hour is specified are general orders for the meeting to which they are assigned.

5) Reports of officers are commonly presented in the order in which the officers are listed in the bylaws, the president reporting first, unless it is the desire or practice of the organization to vary from such an order. Action on the report of the auditors should immediately follow the treasurer’s report. Often reports of officers that are for information only and do not require action by the convention are printed and distributed in advance. In such a case it may not be necessary to have the report read; the chair can simply pause for any questions by delegates to the reporting officer, and the reporting officer can make additional comments on his report at that time. The report of the board, if any, usually should follow the reports of officers.

6) Reports of committees that are for information only and that do not require action by the convention should, as far as possible, be brought up in succession at the same point in the order of business. Time can frequently be saved by reproducing and distributing these reports in advance, in which case it may be unnecessary to read them aloud to the convention. The chair can then simply call the name of each committee in sequence, pausing for any questions. The chairman of any committee can be permitted to make additional comments upon his committee’s report at that time.
7) The report of a committee having a resolution or other motion to offer can be received at any appropriate time, but it should usually be before the report of the Resolutions Committee.

8) A time for announcements should immediately precede the adjournment of each meeting of the convention.

9) Beginning with the second day of the convention (unless a rule or resolution is adopted providing for the approval of the minutes of the entire convention by the board or a committee), the minutes of the preceding day’s meetings are read immediately after any opening ceremonies at the first meeting of each day. Authority to approve such minutes is then usually delegated to the board or to a special committee, by means of a standing rule of the convention or an adopted resolution introduced by the Resolutions Committee.

10) Business unfinished at the end of a day normally is taken up after the reading of the minutes (or after the opening of the meeting, if the minutes are not read) at the resumption of business the next day—provided that the program makes no special provision for unfinished business on that day and there is no conflict with a special order. If unfinished business is not listed as such in the program each day, the planned timing should nevertheless allow for it; a listed heading of “Unfinished Business” should then be provided near the end of the last business meeting, and at any point where it is advisable because special orders have been scheduled early in the day (see also 41).

11) Nominations and the election of officers should take place relatively early in the convention, if possible, so that there will be time to complete balloting if more than one ballot must be taken.

12) If there is to be a formal installation of officers, this ceremony is often made a part of a closing banquet meeting, at which any presentations of gavels, pins, awards, or the like are also made.

59:56 It is often advisable to schedule a meeting of the executive body or board of the association a day after the close of the convention, asking the board members and other necessary personnel to remain in the convention city for this purpose. If such a meeting is to be held, its time and place may be announced in the printed convention program.

59:57 Adoption of the Convention Program. The program is the president’s guide as to the order of business during the initial proceedings, even before it has been formally adopted by the convention. Directly after the adoption of the standing rules, the report of the Program Committee is presented—normally by the committee chairman—somewhat as follows: “Mr. President, a printed copy of the program as proposed by the Program Committee is in the hands of each registrant for the convention. By direction of the committee I move the adoption of the program as printed.” (If the chairman or other person presenting the report is not a voting member of the convention, he omits the motion for adoption. For procedure in such a case, see 59:12.)

59:58 If last-minute changes in the program have become necessary, the chairman can make his report by saying: “Mr. President, because of... [briefly indicating reasons], the Program Committee recommends the following modifications in its proposed program which has been printed and placed in the hands of each registrant for the convention:... [clearly stating each change, with reference to page and line in the printed program]. By direction of the Program Committee, I move that, with these changes, the printed program be adopted.” This motion is debatable and amendable. A majority vote adopts the program—even if it contains special orders. While the making of a special order requires a two-thirds vote under ordinary circumstances, the situation is different in the case of a convention program, where the special order is part of a complete order of business being adopted for the current session.

59:59 To change the program after its adoption requires a two-thirds vote or the vote of a majority of all the delegates or other “voting members” of the convention who have been registered—or unanimous consent, which can usually be obtained with no difficulty in cases where a departure from the program is justified. Thus, an affirmative vote to adopt the program cannot be reconsidered. (See 4:58–63; see also Program (41:36) and Taking Up Business out of Its Proper Order (41:37–39).) Changing the program to add additional meetings within the same session requires such a vote except that during the last meeting scheduled by the program an additional meeting may be set by majority vote through the use of the motion to Fix the Time to Which to Adjourn (22). Any proposed changes except those to which there is obviously no reasonable alternative are best referred to the Program Committee. The committee can recommend changes if and when needed while the convention is in progress, but neither the presiding officer nor the Program Committee is free to alter the program as adopted—which only the convention can do.

59:60 (For parliamentary rules applying at the expiration of the time allotted to a subject, and procedure at scheduled times of adjournment, see 18:8, 21:10–12, 21:14, and 41:65–70.)
Convention Arrangements Committee

59:61 The complex arrangements necessary to a convention generally require the coordination of many additional details that are outside the province of any of the other committees mentioned in this chapter. In the simplest case a Convention Arrangements Committee is appointed—usually by the board at the convention level. Most often the committee’s membership is largely made up of members of the constituent society or societies acting as convention hosts; it should, however, include persons who have had experience in similar work at prior conventions. In cases where there has been competition between cities for the convention site, it is often well to place on this committee local members who were instrumental in obtaining the selection of their city.

59:62 The Convention Arrangements Committee may be empowered to consult experts, who may include professional convention managers. Assistance frequently is obtainable also from staff members of hotels where conventions are held, and from convention bureaus in many cities.

59:63 Depending on the size and duration of the convention, duties ordinarily assigned to the Convention Arrangements Committee are sometimes delegated to subcommittees or even distributed among separate committees. At the outset, the convention headquarters must be selected and advance arrangements made concerning room accommodations in as many hotels or motor inns as may be necessary. The committee may work with the Credentials Committee in coordinating room reservations for delegates with their registration for the convention. While the Program Committee may arrange for all speakers and entertainment, details relating to the overnight and other accommodations for these guests are usually a responsibility of the Convention Arrangements Committee. Ensuring that dignitaries and honored guests are met at the airport or other point of arrival may also be one of the latter committee’s functions.

59:64 Printed or reproduced material assembled in cooperation with the Program Committee for distribution to the delegates in advance of the convention should include directions for getting to the convention by the various means of transportation available, and information about the locality, points of interest, restaurants, entertainment, tours arranged by the Program Committee, and parking facilities for those driving to the convention.

59:65 Careful attention should be given to seating arrangements within the hall, voting members always being located in a separate section if other persons are assigned seating space on the convention floor. Pages, messengers, ushers, and doorkeepers—who are essential to the good order of all but the smallest conventions—should be trained to perform their duties in a calm and courteous manner. During the convention, liaison should be maintained with the Program Committee to ensure, for example, proper seating on the platform, as the needs may change from meeting to meeting.

59:66 The staffing of an information desk throughout the convention may lie within the province of the Convention Arrangements Committee, together with additional functions in the areas of communications and public relations. If the meetings are to be covered by the press, the representatives of the various media must be kept informed of developments and provided with an area on the floor near the platform, or in some other point of vantage in the hall. It is often helpful to have facilities for typing and copying close at hand, as well as for the distribution of literature. In very large conventions it is wise to investigate existing telephone and other communication facilities and to provide for their augmentation if necessary.
Resolutions Committee

59:67  The Resolutions Committee—also sometimes called the Reference Committee or, in certain cases described below, the Platform Committee—has as its basic purpose the screening of all original main motions (10) that have not been screened by another committee and that come—or are to come—before the convention. It is usually not intended to require purely formal or incidental main motions to be submitted to the Resolutions Committee, or to refer to it resolutions reported to the convention by other committees (see also 51).

59:68 Variations in Rules Relating to the Resolutions Committee. The establishment of a Resolutions Committee in a convention represents a limitation on the ordinary right of members to propose any number of motions from the floor without notice—such limitation arising from the need for keeping within a schedule and disposing of a large amount of business within a short time. The degree of limitation imposed and the manner in which the committee functions vary considerably, depending on the organization, in particulars such as the following:

59:69 Variations in the time when a resolution can be introduced. In the simplest situation a resolution is offered from the floor of the convention in the way it would be in an ordinary meeting. Such an arrangement is outlined in Standing Rules 3 and 4(a) in 59:41–42. A place in the program or agenda should then be provided at each meeting, under a heading such as “New Business,” for the introduction of resolutions. Under this system, the proposer of the resolution says, “Mr. President, I move the adoption of [or “I offer”] the resolution which I have sent to the Secretary’s desk.” The secretary reads the resolution, announcing the names of the mover and the seconder, and the chair says, “Under the rules the resolution is referred to the Resolutions Committee.”

To save even this time in a convention, an arrangement can be made whereby resolutions are submitted to the recording secretary without being formally moved and read in open meeting, and the secretary then must promptly deliver them to the chairman of the Resolutions Committee. The convention can suspend such a rule at any time, however—by a majority vote if it is a standing rule of the convention, or by a two-thirds vote if it is a higher-ranking rule (2:21)—and can thus take up a resolution without sending it to the Resolutions Committee.

If many resolutions are customarily proposed by members, a permanent rule or provision in the bylaws can be adopted by the organization requiring all resolutions to be submitted to the committee, or to the executive secretary for delivery to the committee, a number of days, weeks, or even months in advance of the convention. This system can be arranged to allow time for sending copies of all resolutions considered by the Resolutions Committee to the constituent societies and their delegates in advance of the convention, thereby giving time for consultation and, possibly, instruction of delegates. In such cases it is advisable to provide that resolutions can also be introduced at the convention if permitted by a two-thirds vote in the individual case.

Variations in permitted origin of resolutions. In the ordinary case only the members of the convention—that is, the delegates—are allowed to introduce resolutions for consideration by the assembly, and other members of constituent societies (who are not convention members) are allowed to speak for the purpose of suggesting motions only with the consent of the convention. Such consent can be granted in an individual case, or a rule can be adopted specifying persons who, in addition to the delegates, can submit resolutions; the latter practice has particular value when resolutions are required to be submitted in advance of the convention meetings.

59:73 In some cases any member of a constituent society, whether he is a delegate or not, is permitted to offer a resolution. In other organizations a resolution is required to have the sponsorship of a constituent society itself. A number of organizations require even the resolutions offered by standing and special committees of the organization to be screened and reported by the Resolutions Committee. In some types of organizations the Resolutions Committee originates and drafts its own resolutions for submission to the assembly. In any society, when an officer or committee simply makes one or more recommendations, the Resolutions Committee is customarily assigned the task of putting the recommendation(s) in the form of resolution(s).

59:74 Variations in the power of the resolutions committee. In the simplest arrangement, the Resolutions Committee has only the power to put resolutions in proper form, eliminate duplication where similar resolutions are offered, and ensure that all resolutions relating to a specific subject will be offered in a logical sequence. In other cases the committee is given the authority to make substantive alterations in a resolution, but only with the sponsor’s consent; while in still others, by vote of the committee—sometimes a two-thirds vote—the substance of the resolution can be altered and the resolution can be reported to the assembly in the altered form as though the committee had originated it.

59:75 Except as the rules may provide otherwise, the Resolutions Committee is required to report all resolutions referred to it; but the committee can, if it wishes, report a resolution with “no recommendation.” If the committee is given the power “not to report” a resolution—thus withholding it from consideration by the convention—a requirement of an unusually high vote within the committee (such as a three-fourths vote or a vote of two-thirds of the committee’s members) should always be imposed; and the convention should always be given power to override such a decision of the Resolutions Committee and order the committee to report the resolution, by a majority vote (see Rule 4(d) in the sample standing rules of a convention, 59:42). In this connection, it should be noted that voting “not to report” a resolution, reporting it with “no recommendation,” and reporting it with the recommendation that it be rejected by the convention are each quite different.

 Platforms or Policy Statements. In political and certain other types of organizations, the Resolutions Committee is required to prepare and report a platform for adoption by the organization, setting forth its views, aims, and aspirations. Other associations occasionally require the committee to draft statements of policy or similar documents that take the form of a platform rather than of a resolution. In such a platform or statement, many of the principles applicable to drafting resolutions are followed.

 If there is a preamble, instead of beginning each paragraph with the word “Whereas,” a participle is used; thus, “Believing in the…, [etc.].” Each paragraph is terminated by a semicolon and, in the case of the next-to-the-last paragraph, the word “and.” The last paragraph of the preamble may be followed by the word “therefore.” Each new paragraph of the preamble begins with another participle. In the body of the paper, each paragraph, instead of opening with the enacting words “Resolved, That,” begins with a verb denoting an attitude or position—for example, “Affirms…,” “Assures…,” “Condemns…,” “Calls upon…,” and the like. As in a resolution, no paragraph should contain a period within its structure. The paragraphs of the body of the document can be linked by a semicolon and the word “and,” as in the preamble, or a semicolon only can be used. The first paragraph of the body of the statement is often somewhat general. The preamble and the body of the statement may be connected by words such as “Issues this statement of… ; and…. ” The full name of the organization can precede these words, or it can be placed before the preamble; for example, thus:

Believing… ;
Recalling… ; and Noting… ;
The Phoenix Improvement Association issues this statement of its basic governing principles; and Affirms… ;
Assures… ; and Condemns…

Or:

The Phoenix Improvement Association,
Believing… ; and Holding… ; therefore Issues this statement of its basic governing principles; and Affirms… ;
Assures… ; [and so on].

59:78 Courtesy Resolutions. In addition to its duties in regard to the resolutions which are referred to it and which usually relate to policy matters, the Resolutions Committee is often charged with the duty of drafting and presenting to the assembly any courtesy resolutions that may seem appropriate. Ordinarily, courtesy resolutions express the appreciation of the convention to those who arranged accommodations for its physical needs or rendered it service.

59:79 Meetings of the Committee. Ordinarily the Resolutions Committee should make known, through the program or announcements, the times and places it will meet. It is best to allow any sponsor of a resolution to appear before the committee to explain it and answer any questions about it; and interested delegates also may be allowed to attend and even participate in discussion. Many times such free discussion reduces friction that may have developed concerning a resolution, and the convention as a result goes more smoothly. After any open “hearings” of this type, the committee meets in executive session (9) to review each resolution and prepare its report. The parliamentarian may be asked to attend the committee’s meetings.

59:80 Report of the Resolutions Committee. In reporting, the Resolutions Committee follows the procedure of any committee reporting back a resolution referred to it, as described in 51. Even when resolutions are submitted to the committee before the opening of the convention, the report on each resolution is treated as if it had been moved and seconded in the assembly before being referred to the committee. It is never necessary for the Resolutions Committee chairman or reporting member to move the adoption of a resolution being reported—unless the committee itself originated it, as in the case of courtesy resolutions.

59:81 When the committee recommends amendments to a resolution, in cases where it is not empowered to incorporate them itself, its chairman reports as follows:
RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN: Mr. President, the Resolutions Committee recommends that the resolution relating to… [or “Resolution No. 6,” etc.] be amended by striking out the words “…” and inserting the words “…,” and that, as thus amended, the resolution be adopted. By direction of the Resolutions Committee, I move the adoption of the recommended amendment.

If the convention members do not have reproduced copies of the resolution, the chair reads it before stating the question on the amendment. He then proceeds:

CHAIR: The Resolutions Committee recommends the adoption of the resolution with the following amendment… [rereading the amendment]. The question is on the amendment.

59:82 In instances where it is advisable for a resolution of overriding importance to be considered as a special order rather than as a part of the main body of resolutions reported by the Resolutions Committee, this is arranged through liaison with the Program Committee. The chairman of the Resolutions Committee then reports the resolution at the time prescribed for it in the agenda. If desired, the committee’s report can include a preliminary motion establishing special rules for the consideration of the resolution, similar to the practice of the U.S. House of Representatives. The following is an example of such a rule:

Resolved, That at the time prescribed in the agenda the resolution relating to _________ be considered as a special order, the general debate to be limited to two hours and equally divided between, and controlled by, Mr. A, the leader for the affirmative, and Mr. B, the leader for the negative; that at the expiration of general debate the resolution shall be open to amendment, debate on said amendment(s) to be limited to two minutes for each member.

59:83 Under such a rule, the leaders for the two sides are recognized alternately by the presiding officer and can speak themselves or yield the floor to other member(s) for a portion of the time at their disposal. The leaders are usually the more ardent or persuasive advocates of the two positions, and frequently they speak first and save themselves enough time so that at the end they can close debate for their side. An alternative procedure is to assign a longer period of debate to Mr. A and Mr. B, and require other members to adhere to a shorter limit. Often it is helpful to require general debate to be conducted first before amendments are allowed, but this provision can be dispensed with.
§60. CONVENTIONS NOT OF A PERMANENT SOCIETY

60:1 A convention called only for a specific purpose not involving a permanent organization, or one called to form a state or a national society or a federation, is similar to a mass meeting as described in 53 in that when called to order it has no bylaws or officers. Because it has no bylaws, added difficulty may be encountered in determining who are the properly appointed delegates.

60:2 The group sponsoring the convention should appoint a Convention Arrangements Committee, as described above, to secure the hall and accommodations for the delegates, make the preliminary arrangements for the convention, and perform the other coordinating and arranging duties assigned to it.

60:3 Someone designated by the sponsoring group—sometimes the chairman of the Convention Arrangements Committee—calls the meeting to order and presides during any opening exercises and the election of a temporary chairman. The sponsoring group’s choice for temporary chairman and the person who is to nominate him should be agreed upon in advance. After the elected temporary chairman has taken the chair, a temporary secretary is elected. Next comes the appointment of the Credentials, Rules, and Program Committees, or the ratification of the prior selection of these committees. In a convention of this type, if these committees have not been appointed in advance, all committees should be appointed by the chair. Until the report of the Credentials Committee is adopted, no business other than its adoption or the other preliminary actions described in this paragraph may be considered, except that any motions related to the consideration of such business or to the conduct of the meeting before the report is adopted, as well as those that are in order in the absence of a quorum (40:6–8), are in order.

60:4 If the Credentials Committee and other organizing committees were not appointed in advance and are not, therefore, ready to report, the time they need to prepare their reports is usually spent in listening to talks, perhaps on various phases of the convention's object. Otherwise the reports of the organizing committees are received in the same manner as that described for organizing a convention of an established association. If a permanent organization is not contemplated, a permanent chairman and secretary can, but need not, be elected at this time, after which the convention proceeds with the business for which it was called together. The principal purpose in electing a temporary chairman first and a permanent chairman later in a convention of this kind is to enable the temporary chairman to preside over the convention while it acts upon any matters relating to contested seats (see 59:21, 59:24), so that the permanent chairman can be elected by the delegates on the permanent roll of the convention as it is finally determined after all such contests have been resolved.

60:5 If the convention is called to form a permanent organization, permanent officers are not elected until later (after the adoption of the bylaws), but a resolution should be adopted at this point in the proceedings expressing an intention to form such a permanent association, as in the case of forming a permanent local society (see 54). A set of bylaws should have been carefully drawn up before the meeting of the convention, either by a Bylaws Committee appointed by the organizing group, with the appointments being ratified by the convention, or by members of the sponsoring group who thereafter hand them to a Bylaws Committee appointed at the convention. In the latter case some of those who drafted the bylaws should be appointed to the committee to avoid delay in reporting them.

60:6 After adoption of the bylaws, a Nominating Committee, selected in a manner as close as possible to that prescribed in the bylaws, nominates candidates for office, and those elected to these permanent offices take up their duties immediately, unless other provision is made.
Footnotes to Chapter XIX

1. Some organizations include this information in a printed, general “Call to Convention.”
2. But see 60 for necessary variations in the case of conventions not of a permanent organization.
3. The reason why a parliamentary standing rule of a convention can be suspended by a majority vote even though it requires a two-thirds vote for its adoption is as follows: In a convention, parliamentary standing rules—which are in the nature of suspensions of the regular rules of order for the duration of the convention session—generally arise from a need to give the majority more power to transact business with minimum delay, even when the majority is not large enough to command a two-thirds vote. Since it is thus likely to reduce the protection of a minority greater than one third, a parliamentary standing rule of a convention requires a two-thirds vote for its adoption; but since the same rule tends to protect a majority of less than two thirds, such a majority should have the right to suspend the rules for a particular purpose and allow the regular rules of order to come into force.
4. See 59:10–11.
5. Regarding variations in the rules and practices of societies relating to the handling of resolutions at a convention, see 59:68–75.
7. A rule on “Parliamentary Authority” is included in the standing rules of a convention only if the bylaws of the organization do not prescribe the authority. If this rule is included, it cannot be suspended as such, although a particular rule stated in the parliamentary authority can be suspended by a two-thirds vote.
§61. DISCIPLINE OF MEMBERS AND GUESTS

61:1 In most societies it is understood that members are required to be of honorable character and reputation, and certain types of associations may have particular codes of ethics to enforce. Although ordinary societies seldom have occasion to discipline members, an organization or assembly has the ultimate right to make and enforce its own rules, and to require that its members refrain from conduct injurious to the organization or its purposes. No one should be allowed to remain a member if his retention will do this kind of harm.

61:2 Punishments that a society can impose generally fall under the headings of censure, fine (if authorized in the bylaws), suspension, or expulsion. The extreme penalty that an organization or society can impose on a member is expulsion.

61:3 If there is an article on discipline in the bylaws, it may specify a number of offenses outside meetings for which these penalties can be imposed on a member of the organization. Frequently, such an article provides for their imposition on any member found guilty of conduct described, for example, as “tending to injure the good name of the organization, disturb its well-being, or hamper it in its work.” In any society, behavior of this nature is a serious offense properly subject to disciplinary action, whether the bylaws make mention of it or not.

61:4 Formal disciplinary procedures should generally be regarded as a drastic step reserved for serious situations or those potentially so. When it appears that such measures may become necessary, proper and tactful handling of the case is of prime importance. It is usually in the best interests of the organization first to make every effort to obtain a satisfactory solution of the matter quietly and informally.

61:5 Cases of conduct subject to disciplinary action divide themselves into: offenses occurring in a meeting; and offenses by members outside a meeting.
Dealing with Offenses in a Meeting

61:6 Principles Governing Discipline at Meetings. A society has the right to determine who may be present at its meetings and to control its hall while meetings are in progress; but all members have the right to attend except in cases where the bylaws provide for the automatic suspension of members who fall in arrears in payment of their dues, or where the society has, by vote and as a penalty imposed for a specific offense, forbidden attendance.

61:7 Nonmembers, on the other hand—or a particular nonmember or group of nonmembers—can be excluded at any time from part or all of a meeting of a society, or from all of its meetings. Such exclusion can be effected by a ruling of the chair in cases of disorder, or by the adoption of a rule on the subject, or by an appropriate motion as the need arises—a motion of the latter nature being a question of privilege (see 9:25; 9:28–29; and 19).

61:8 All persons present at a meeting have an obligation to obey the legitimate orders of the presiding officer. Members, however, can appeal from the decision of the chair (24), move to suspend the rules (25), or move a reconsideration (37)—depending on the circumstances of the chair’s ruling. A member can make such an appeal or motion whether the order involved applies to him or not.

61:9 In dealing with any case of disorder in a meeting, the presiding officer should always maintain a calm, deliberate tone—although he may become increasingly firm if a situation demands it. Under no circumstances should the chair attempt to drown out a disorderly member—either by his own voice or the gavel—or permit himself to be drawn into a verbal duel. If unavoidable, however, proper disciplinary proceedings to cope with immediate necessity can be conducted while a disorderly member continues to speak.

61:10 Breaches of Order by Members in a Meeting. If a member commits only a slight breach of order—such as addressing another member instead of the chair in debate, or, in a single instance, failing to confine his remarks to the merits of the pending question—the chair simply raps lightly, points out the fault, and advises the member to avoid it. The member can then continue speaking if he commits no further breaches. More formal procedures can be used in the case of serious offenses, as follows:

61:11 Calling a member to order. If the offense is more serious than in the case above—as when a member repeatedly questions the motives of other members whom he mentions by name, or persists in speaking on completely irrelevant matters in debate—the chair normally should first warn the member; but with or without such a warning, the chair or any other member can “call the member to order.” If the chair does this, he says, “The member is out of order and will be seated.” Another member making the call rises and, without waiting to be recognized, says, “Mr. President, I call the member to order,” then resumes his seat. If the chair finds this point of order (23) well taken, he declares the offender out of order and directs him to be seated, just as above. If the offender had the floor, then (irrespective of who originated the proceeding) the chair clearly states the breach involved and puts the question to the assembly: “Shall the member be allowed to continue speaking?” This question is undebatable.

61:12 “Naming” an offender. In cases of obstinate or grave breach of order by a member, the chair can, after repeated warnings, “name” the offender, which amounts to preferring charges and should be resorted to only in extreme circumstances. Before taking such action, when it begins to appear that it may become necessary, the chair directs the secretary to take down objectionable or disorderly words used by the member. This direction by the chair, and the words taken down pursuant to it, are entered in the minutes only if the chair finds it necessary to name the offender.

61:13 Although the chair has no authority to impose a penalty or to order the offending member removed from the hall, the assembly has that power. It should be noted in this connection that in any case of an offense against the assembly occurring in a meeting, there is no need for a formal trial provided that any penalty is imposed promptly after the breach (cf. 23:5), since the witnesses are all present and make up the body that is to determine the penalty.

61:14 The declaration made by the chair in naming a member is addressed to the offender by name and in the second person, and is entered in the minutes. An example of such a declaration is as follows:

CHAIR: Mr. J! The chair has repeatedly directed you to refrain from offensive personal references when speaking in this meeting. Three times the chair has ordered you to be seated, and you have nevertheless attempted to continue speaking.

61:15 If the member obeys at this point, the matter can be dropped or not, as the assembly chooses. The case may be sufficiently resolved by an apology or a withdrawal of objectionable statements or remarks by the offender; but if not, any member can move to order a penalty, or the chair can first ask, “What penalty shall be imposed on the member?” A motion offered in a case of this kind can propose, for example, that the offender be required to make an apology, that he be censured, that he be required to leave the hall during the remainder of the meeting or until he is prepared to apologize, that his rights of membership be suspended for a time, or that he be expelled from the organization.

61:16 The offending member can be required to leave the hall during the consideration of his penalty, but he must be allowed to present his defense briefly first. A motion to require the member’s departure during consideration of the penalty—which may be assumed by the chair if he thinks it appropriate—is undebatable, is unamendable, and requires a majority vote.

61:17 If the member denies having said anything improper, the words recorded by the secretary can be read to him and, if necessary, the assembly can decide by vote whether he was heard to say them. On the demand of a single member—other than the named offender, who is not considered to be a voting member while his case is pending—the vote on imposing a penalty must be taken by ballot, unless the penalty proposed is only that the offender be required to leave the hall for all or part of the remainder of the meeting. Expulsion from membership requires a two-thirds vote.

61:18 If the assembly orders an offending member to leave the hall during a meeting as described above and he refuses to do so, the considerations stated below regarding the removal of offenders apply; but such a member exposes himself to the possibility of more severe disciplinary action by the society.

61:19 Protection from Annoyance by Nonmembers in a Meeting; Removal of an Offender from the Hall. Any nonmembers allowed in the hall during a meeting, as guests of the organization, have no rights with reference to the proceedings (61:6–8). An assembly has the right to protect itself from annoyance by nonmembers, and its full authority in this regard—as distinguished from cases involving disorderly members—can be exercised by the chair acting alone. The chair has the power to require nonmembers to leave the hall, or to order their removal, at any time during the meeting; and the nonmembers have no right of appeal from such an order of the presiding officer. However, such an order may be appealed by a member. That appeal is undebatable (see 24:3(5)(a)). At a mass meeting (53), any person who attempts to disrupt the proceedings in a manner obviously hostile to the announced purpose of the meeting can be treated as a nonmember under the provisions of this paragraph.

61:20 If a person—whether a member of the assembly or not—refuses to obey the order of proper authority to leave the hall during a meeting, the chair should take necessary measures to see that the order is enforced, but should be guided by a judicious appraisal of the situation. The chair can appoint a committee to escort the offender to the door, or the sergeant-at-arms—if there is one—can be asked to do this. If those who are assigned that task are unable to persuade the offender to leave, it is usually preferable that he be removed by police—who may, however, be reluctant to intervene unless representatives of the organization are prepared to press charges.

61:21 The sergeant-at-arms or the members of the appointed committee themselves may attempt to remove the offender from the hall, using the minimum force necessary. Such a step should generally be taken only as a last resort, since there may be adverse legal consequences; and a person who would refuse to leave upon legitimate request may be the type most likely to bring suit, even if with little justification. In cases where possibly serious annoyance by hostile persons is anticipated—in some mass meetings, for example—it may be advisable to arrange in advance for the presence of police or guards from a security service agency.
Offenses Elsewhere Than in a Meeting; Trials

61:22 If improper conduct by a member of a society occurs elsewhere than at a meeting, the members generally have no first-hand knowledge of the case. Therefore, if disciplinary action is to be taken, charges must be preferred and a formal trial held before the assembly of the society, or before a committee—standing or special—which is then required to report its findings and recommendations to the assembly for action. In addition, even when improper conduct occurs at a meeting, in order for disciplinary action to be taken other than promptly after the breach occurs, charges must be preferred and a formal trial held. However, the only way in which a member may be disciplined for words spoken in debate is through the procedure described in 61:10–18, which may be employed only promptly after the breach occurs. In some societies (depending on particular provisions of the bylaws, as explained in 62), the same steps must also be employed if an officer of the society is to be removed from office. The procedures governing all such cases are described in detail in 63.
§62. REMOVAL FROM OFFICE AND OTHER REMEDIES FOR DERELICTION OF DUTY IN OFFICE OR MISCONDUCT

62:1 The presiding officer and other officers have the duties set forth in this manual (see 47) and in the organization’s bylaws. This section covers procedures available if they neglect those duties, abuse their authority, or engage in other misconduct that calls into question their fitness for office. This section also covers removal from office at the pleasure of the assembly when the bylaws permit such removal.
Remedies for Abuse of Authority by the Chair in a Meeting

62:2 Making and Enforcing Points of Order and Appeals. In attempting to remedy any incorrect or abusive act by the chair at a meeting, the first step is for a member to raise a Point of Order as soon as the breach of the rules occurs.

62:3 For example, some important rules of parliamentary procedure are (a) that the chair must recognize any member who seeks the floor while entitled to it (see 42); (b) that after a member has properly made a motion that is not dilatory (see 39), the chair must either state the question on it, or else rule it out of order for a specified valid reason, require that the wording be clarified or be submitted in writing, or declare that it is not before the assembly for lack of a required second (see 4); and (c) that the chair cannot hurry through the proceedings so quickly as to deprive the members of their rights to debate and to introduce secondary motions (see 43:7).

62:4 So, if the chair ignores a member seeking the floor while entitled to it, ignores a properly made nondilatory motion, “gavels through” a motion in an improper attempt to cut off debate, or violates any other rule, any member may immediately raise a Point of Order.

62:5 To raise a Point of Order, a member rises and, without waiting to be recognized, immediately addresses the chair, saying, “I rise to a point of order,” or simply, “Point of order!” The chair must then ask the member to state the point; and after the member does so, the chair is obligated either to rule whether the point is “well taken”—briefly stating the reasons for that ruling—or to submit the question to the assembly (see 23).

62:6 Immediately after the chair makes a ruling, any member who disagrees with it may then move an Appeal (unless another Appeal is already pending or an appeal would be dilatory because there cannot possibly be two reasonable opinions on the question). The member does this by rising and, without waiting to be recognized, addressing the chair, saying, “I appeal from the decision of the chair.” If the Appeal is seconded, the chair must state the question on it, clearly explain the exact parliamentary question at issue, allow any permissible debate, and put the question to a vote, as shown in 24.

62:7 These procedures enable the majority to ensure enforcement of the rules unless the chair fails to respond to and resolve the Point of Order, fails to respond appropriately to any Appeal, or fails to act in accordance with the assembly’s decision on the Appeal (or on a Point of Order submitted by the chair to the assembly).

62:8 If the chair ignores a point of order that is not dilatory, the member can repeat the point of order a second and third time and if the chair still ignores it, the member, standing in his place, can immediately put the point of order to a vote without debate. The question may be put as, “Is the point of order that… well taken?” If the point of order was that the chair improperly ignored another motion, the member may, instead of repeating the point of order, repeat the original motion, and if it is seconded and the chair still ignores it, may, standing in his place, put the ignored motion to a vote without debate.

62:9 Likewise, if the chair ignores an appeal appropriately made and seconded, a member can repeat the appeal and if, despite its being seconded, the chair ignores it again, the member can repeat it a third time and if it is again seconded but still ignored by the chair, the member can immediately, standing in his place, put the appeal to a vote without debate.
The question may be put as: “Shall the decision of the chair be sustained?”
Removal of Presiding Officer from Chair for All or Part of a Session. If the chair fails to act in accordance with the assembly's decision on an appeal (or on a point of order submitted to a vote of the assembly) or otherwise culpably fails to perform the duties of the chair properly in a meeting, the assembly may employ measures temporarily to replace the chair with another presiding officer expected to act in accordance with the will of the assembly.

If the offending occupant of the chair is an appointed or elected chairman pro tem (see 47:11(2–3)), a motion can be made to “declare the chair vacant and proceed to elect a new chairman.” Such a motion is a question of privilege affecting the assembly (19) and is an incidental main motion requiring a majority vote for its adoption.4

If the chair is not an appointed or elected chairman pro tem, a motion to declare the chair vacant is not in order. However, a motion can be made to Suspend the Rules so as to take away from him the authority to preside during all or part of a given session.5 When such a motion is made and seconded, after stating the motion he must turn the chair over to another following the procedure described in 43:29, and the remedy for refusal or failure to do so is that the motion may be put to a vote by its maker.

Any one motion to Suspend the Rules that might limit the authority or duties of the presiding officer during a meeting can remain in effect, at most, for one session. (See 8:12, 8:16.) Therefore, in order to prevent the regular presiding officer from presiding during subsequent sessions, the motion to Suspend the Rules would have to be renewed and separately adopted at each of the sessions. Moreover, since Suspend the Rules applies only when “an assembly wishes to do something during a meeting that it cannot do without violating one or more of its regular rules” (25:1, emphasis added), the motion cannot be used to remove from the presiding officer (even temporarily) any administrative duties—that are related to the role of an executive officer that are distinct from the function of presiding over the assembly at its meetings. (Cf. 47:20.)

62:14 If the motion to suspend the rules is adopted by a two-thirds vote, then, unless the motion names a new occupant of the chair, the ranking vice-president (or, in the absence of the vice-president, an elected temporary presiding officer; 47:11(3), 47:13) has the duty of presiding through the end of the session (or any shorter period specified by the motion to suspend the rules).

62:15 A permanent removal of the presiding officer, and removal of authority to exercise administrative duties conferred by the bylaws, requires the procedure described below.
Removal from Office

62:16  Except as the bylaws may provide otherwise, any regularly elected officer of a permanent society can be removed from office by the society’s assembly as follows:

• If the bylaws provide that officers shall serve “for ___ years or until their successors are elected,” the officer in question can be removed from office by adoption of a motion to do so. The vote required for adoption of this incidental main motion is (a) a two-thirds vote, (b) a majority vote when previous notice (as defined in 10:44) has been given, or (c) a vote of a majority of the entire membership—any one of which will suffice. A motion to remove an officer from office is a question of privilege (19) affecting the organization of the assembly, and so also is the filling of any vacancy created by the adoption of such a motion.6

• If, however, the bylaws provide that officers shall serve only a fixed term, such as “for two years” (which is not a recommended wording; see 56:28), or if they provide that officers shall serve “for ___ years and until their successors are elected,” an officer can be removed from office only for cause—that is, neglect of duty in office or misconduct—in accordance with the procedures described in 63; that is, an investigating committee must be appointed, charges must be preferred, and a formal trial must be held.
§63. INVESTIGATION AND TRIAL

63:1 As explained in 61 and 62, the removal of an officer for cause, or the discipline of a member for improper conduct, may require that charges be preferred and that a formal trial be held. The full procedure for such cases is described in this section.
Rights of the Society and the Accused

63:2 A society has the right to investigate the character of its members and officers as may be necessary to the enforcement of its own standards. But neither the society nor any member has the right to make public any information obtained through such investigation; if it becomes common knowledge within the society, it may not be revealed to any persons outside the society. Consequently, a trial must always be held in executive session, as must the introduction and consideration of all resolutions leading up to the trial.

63:3 If (after trial) a member is expelled or an officer is removed from office, the society has the right to disclose that fact—circulating it only to the extent required for the protection of the society or, possibly, of other organizations. Neither the society nor any of its members has the right to make public the charge of which an officer or member has been found guilty, or to reveal any other details connected with the case. To make any of the facts public may constitute libel. A trial by the society cannot legally establish the guilt of the accused, as understood in a court of law; it can only establish his guilt as affecting the society’s judgment of his fitness for membership or office.

63:4 Ordinarily it is impossible for the society to obtain legal proof of facts in disciplinary cases. To get at the truth under the conditions of such a trial, hearsay evidence has to be admissible, and judgment as to the best interests of the society may have to be based on it. Witnesses are not sworn. The persons with first-hand knowledge may be nonmembers, who probably will decline to testify, and may be willing only to reveal the facts privately to a single member on condition that their names in no way be connected with the case. Even members may be reluctant to give formal testimony against the accused.
A member can be required to testify at a trial on pain of expulsion, but it is very seldom advisable to force such an issue.

63:5 A member or officer has the right that allegations against his good name shall not be made except by charges brought on reasonable ground. If thus accused, he has the right to due process—that is, to be informed of the charge and given time to prepare his defense, to appear and defend himself, and to be fairly treated.

63:6 If a member or officer is guilty of a serious offense and knows that other members are in possession of the facts, he may wish to submit his resignation. When the good of the society appears to demand the departure of an offender, it is usually best for all concerned to offer him the opportunity to resign quietly before charges are preferred. The society has no obligation to suggest or accept such a resignation at any stage of the case, however, even if it is submitted on the offender’s own initiative.
Steps in a Fair Disciplinary Process

63:7 Most ordinary societies should never have to hold a formal trial, and their bylaws need not be encumbered with clauses on discipline. For the protection both of the society and of its members and officers, however, the basic steps which, in any organization, make up the elements of fair disciplinary process should be understood. Any special procedures established should be built essentially around them, and the steps must be followed in the absence of such provisions. As set forth below, these are: (1) confidential investigation by a committee; (2) report of the committee, and preferral of charges if warranted; (3) formal notification of the accused; (4) trial; and (5) the assembly’s review of a trial committee’s findings (if the trial has been held in a committee instead of the assembly of the society).

63:8 Confidential Investigation by Committee. A committee whose members are selected for known integrity and good judgment conducts a confidential investigation (including a reasonable attempt to interview the accused) to determine whether to recommend that further action, including the preferring of charges if necessary, is warranted.

63:9 Accordingly, if the rules of the organization do not otherwise provide for the method of charge and trial, a member may, at a time when nonmembers are not present, offer a resolution to appoint an investigating committee. This resolution is to be in a form similar to the following:

Resolved, That a committee of... [perhaps “five”] be elected by ballot to investigate allegations of neglect of duty in office by our treasurer, J.M., which, if true, cast doubt on her fitness to continue in office, and that the committee be instructed, if it concludes that the allegations are well-founded, to report resolutions covering its recommendations.

63:10 To initiate disciplinary proceedings involving a member, a suitable resolution would be:

Resolved, That a committee of… [perhaps “five”] be appointed by the chair [or “be elected by ballot”] to investigate rumors regarding the conduct of our member Mr. N, which, if true, would tend to injure the good name of this organization, and that the committee be instructed, if it concludes the allegations are well-founded, to report resolutions covering its recommendations.

63:11 For the protection of parties who may be innocent, the first resolution should avoid details as much as possible. An individual member may not prefer charges, even if that member has proof of an officer’s or member’s wrongdoing. If a member introduces a resolution preferring charges unsupported by an investigating committee’s recommendation, the chair must rule the resolution out of order, informing the member that it would instead be in order to move the appointment of such a committee (by a resolution, as in the example above). A resolution is improper if it implies the truth of specific rumors or contains insinuations unfavorable to an officer or member, even one who is to be accused. It is out of order, for example, for a resolution to begin, “Whereas, It seems probable that the treasurer has engaged in graft,…” At the first mention of the word “graft” in such a case, the chair must instantly call to order the member attempting to move the resolution.

63:12 An investigating committee appointed as described above has no power to require the accused, or any other person, to appear before it, but it should quietly conduct a complete investigation, making an effort to learn all relevant facts. Information obtained in strict confidence may help the committee to form an opinion, but it may not be reported to the society or used in a trial—except as may be possible without bringing out the confidential particulars. Before any action is taken, fairness demands that the committee or some of its members make a reasonable attempt to meet with the accused for frank discussion and to hear his side of the story. It may be possible at this stage to point out to the accused that if he does not rectify the situation or resign, he probably will be brought to trial.

63:13 Report of the Investigating Committee; Preferral of Charges. If after investigation the committee’s opinion is favorable to the accused, or if it finds that the matter can be resolved satisfactorily without a trial, it reports that fact. But if the committee from its investigations finds substance to the allegations and cannot resolve the matter satisfactorily in any other way, it makes a report in writing—which is signed by every committee member who agrees—outlining the course of its investigation and recommending in the report the adoption of resolutions preferring charges, arranging for a trial, and, if desired, suspending the rights of the accused, as in the following example:

63:14 Resolved, That when this meeting adjourns, it adjourn to meet at 8 P.M. on Wednesday, November 15, 20__. [For variations depending on conditions, see the first paragraph following these resolutions, below.]

63:15 Resolved, That J.M. is hereby cited to appear at said adjourned meeting for trial, to show cause why she should not be removed from the office of treasurer on the following charge and specifications:

- Charge. Neglect of duty in office.
- Specification 1. In that J.M. has failed to account for at least $10,000 of the Society’s funds known to have been given into her custody.
- Specification 2. In that J.M. has repeatedly failed to provide the financial records of her treasurership for review by the auditing
Resolved, That from the time official notification of this resolution is delivered to J.M.’s address until disposition of the case, all of J.M.’s authority, rights, and duties pertaining to the office of treasurer are suspended.

Resolved, That members S and T act as managers for the Society at the trial. [See below.]

In a disciplinary proceeding against a member, an example of the second and third resolutions is:

Resolved, That Mr. N is hereby cited to appear at said adjourned meeting for trial, to show cause why he should not be expelled from the Society on the following charge and specifications:

Charge. Conduct tending to injure the good name of this organization.

Specification 1. In that Mr. N has so conducted himself as to establish among a number of his acquaintances a reputation for willfully originating false reports against innocent persons.

Specification 2. In that on or about the evening of August 12, 20__, in the Matterhorn Restaurant, Mr. N was seen by patrons to be the apparent provoker of a needless and violent disturbance, causing damage to the furnishings.

Resolved, That from the time official notification of this resolution is delivered to Mr. N’s address until disposition of the case, all of Mr. N’s rights as a member (except as relate to the trial) are suspended pending disposition of the case.

With reference to an appropriate date for which to set the trial, thirty days is a reasonable time to allow the accused to prepare his defense. When a trial is to be before the assembly of the society, it is generally a good policy to hold it at a meeting devoted exclusively to the matter, such as an adjourned meeting as in the example above. To devote a meeting to the trial when there is to be another regular meeting between the date of adoption of these resolutions and the date desired for the trial, the first resolution would establish a special meeting instead of an adjourned meeting (see 9). If believed advisable—and particularly when the trial is likely to be delicate, involve potential scandal, or be long and troublesome, or when the assembly of the organization is large—the resolutions reported by the investigating committee, instead of providing for trial before the entire assembly, can be worded so as to establish a committee to hear the trial and report its findings and recommendations to the assembly for action. In such a case, the first two of the resolutions above would be worded as follows:

Resolved, That a trial committee consisting of Mr. H as chairman and members A, B, C, D, E, and F be appointed to try the case of J.M. and report its findings and recommendations. [A special committee appointed to hear a trial must be composed of persons different from those on the preliminary investigating committee. This resolution can either be offered with the names of the members of the proposed trial committee specified as in the example, or it can contain a blank so as to leave the manner of their selection to the assembly.]

63:23
Resolved, That J.M. is hereby cited to appear before the said trial committee at the Society hall at 8 P.M. on Wednesday, November 15, 20__, to show cause why she should not be removed from the office of treasurer on the following charge and specifications:… [setting them forth, as above].

The remaining resolutions would be the same whether the trial is to be before the assembly or before a special committee (see above).

A charge sets forth an offense—that is, a particular kind of act or conduct that entails liability to penalty under the governing rules—of which the accused is alleged to be guilty. A specification states what the accused is alleged to have done which, if true, constitutes an instance of the offense indicated in the charge. An accused officer or member must be found guilty of a charge before a penalty can be imposed. If the bylaws of the society provide for the imposition of penalties for offenses defined in the bylaws or an adopted code of conduct or similar set of rules, a charge may consist of such a defined offense. If such particular offenses are not defined or are not applicable, a member may be charged with “conduct tending to injure the good name of the organization, disturb its well-being, or hamper it in its work,” or the like, and an officer may be charged with misconduct of the type just mentioned or with “misconduct in office,” “neglect of duty in office,” or “conduct that renders him [or “her”] unfit for office.”

63:25 Each separate charge contained in the resolutions must be accompanied by at least one specification, unless the investigating committee and the accused agree in preferring that this information not be disclosed outside the trial. It is best if each specification is carefully worded so as to make no broader allegation than is believed sufficient to establish the validity of the charge if the specification is found to be true.

63:26 A resolution preferring charges may (although it need not) be accompanied by one suspending all or some specified portion of the accused’s authority, rights, and duties as an officer or rights as a member (except those rights that relate to the trial) pending disposition of the case, effective from the time official notification of the resolution is delivered to the accused’s address.

63:27 The “managers” at the trial—referred to in the fourth resolution of the complete set shown above—have the task of presenting the evidence against the accused, and must be members of the society. Their duty, however, is not to act as prosecutors—in the sense of making every effort to secure conviction—but rather to strive that the trial will get at the truth and that, in the light of all facts brought out, the outcome will be just.

63:28 Formal Notification of the Officer or Member. If the society adopts resolutions ordering trial before the assembly or a committee, the secretary immediately sends to the accused, by a method providing confirmation of delivery to his address (such as registered mail with delivery confirmation), a letter notifying him of the date, hour, and place of the trial, containing an exact copy of the charge(s) and specifications with the date of their adoption, and directing him to appear as cited—even if the accused officer or member was present when the resolutions were adopted. The secretary’s letter of notification can reproduce the resolutions in full and can be worded as follows:

Dear Mr. N:

Your attention is called to the fact that the… Society, at its meeting on October 14, 20__, adopted the following resolutions:

… [Text of resolutions].

Kindly be present at the Society hall at the time indicated above.

Sincerely,

John Clark, Secretary

63:29 It is the duty of the secretary to have at hand at the trial a photocopy, printout, or other direct reproduction of the letter of notification with the delivery confirmation attached, as proof that it was delivered to the accused’s address.

63:30 Trial Procedure. The trial is a formal hearing on the validity of the charges. At the trial, the evidence against the accused officer or member is presented by the managers for the society, and the officer or member has the right to be represented by counsel and to speak and produce witnesses in his own defense. If the charges are found to be true, a penalty may be imposed or recommended; but if the charges are not substantiated, the officer or member is exonerated and any authority, rights, duties, and privileges of office or membership that had been suspended are automatically restored. The managers, as previously stated, must be members of the society. Defense counsel can be attorney(s) or not, but must be member(s) of the society unless the trial body (that is, the assembly or the trial committee as the case may be) by vote agrees to permit attorney(s) who are not member(s) to act in this capacity. Nonmembers who consent to testify can be brought in as witnesses at the trial, but such a witness is allowed in the room only while testifying.

63:31 If the accused fails to appear for trial at the appointed time as directed, the trial proceeds without him.

63:32 At any time before the commencement of the trial with the first of the “preliminary steps” described below, the assembly may, by majority vote, adopt a resolution to govern the trial specifying details not inconsistent with the procedures described here. The resolution may include an agenda that establishes times for portions of the trial, such as time limits for opening and closing statements. If time limits are imposed, they must allow the defense at least equal time for each element of the trial as that allowed the managers, and this rule may not be suspended without the consent of the defense.

63:33 At the trial, in calling the meeting to order, the chair should call attention to the fact that the meeting is in executive session (9), and to the attendant obligation of secrecy. Preliminary steps then include the secretary’s reading from the minutes the resolutions adopted by the society relating to the trial, the chair’s verification—by inquiring of the secretary—that the accused was furnished with a copy of the charges, the chair's announcement of the names of the managers for the society, and the chair's inquiry of the accused as to whether he has counsel. The trial then proceeds as follows:

a) The chair directs the secretary to read the charge and specifications.
b) The chair asks the accused how he pleads—guilty or not guilty—first to each of the specifications in order, and then to the charge.
c) If a plea of guilty is entered to the charge, there need be no trial, and the meeting can proceed directly to the determination of the penalty after hearing a brief statement of the facts.
d) If the plea to the charge is not guilty, the trial proceeds in the following order, the chair first explaining all the steps, then calling for each of them in sequence: (1) opening statements by both sides—the managers first; (2) testimony of witnesses produced by the managers for the society; (3) testimony of defense witnesses; (4) rebuttal witnesses on behalf of the society, and then on behalf of the defense, if any; and (5) closing arguments by both sides. Up until the completion of the closing arguments, no one is entitled to the floor except the managers and the defense; and they must address the chair except when questioning witnesses. Cross-examination, re-direct-examination, and re-cross-examination of witnesses is permitted, and witnesses can be recalled for further testimony as the occasion may dictate.

From the first of the “preliminary steps” described above up until the completion of the closing arguments:

i) Subject to the relevant rules and the provisions in any resolution governing the trial, the presiding officer, similarly to a judge at a trial, directs the proceedings and rules on all questions of evidence and any objections or requests by the managers or the defense, the merits of which may first be argued by the managers and the defense. From any such direction or ruling, a member of the assembly may take an undebatable appeal, or the presiding officer may in the first instance submit any such question to a vote, without debate, by the assembly. Any motion to alter a resolution previously adopted to govern the trial, which may be proposed only by the managers or defense, or a proposal by the chair to do the same, is submitted without debate to a vote by the assembly; its adoption requires the vote necessary to Amend Something Previously Adopted.

ii) If a member of the assembly who is not a manager or with the defense wishes a question to be put to a witness, a manager, or the defense, the question must be delivered in writing to the presiding officer, who at an appropriate point puts it, unless he rules it not in order of his own accord or upon an objection by the managers or the defense, which ruling, like any other in the trial, is subject to an undebatable appeal.

iii) The only motions in order are the five privileged motions and those motions that relate to the conduct of the meeting or to the trial itself. Any member who is not a manager or with the defense may offer such a motion, subject to the limitation in (i) above, only in writing delivered to the presiding officer, who at an appropriate point reads the motion aloud, inquires whether there is a second (if required), and either rules upon it or puts the motion to a vote without debate.

e) When the closing arguments have been completed, the accused must leave the room. If the trial is before the assembly rather than a trial committee, the managers, defense counsel (if members of the society), and member witnesses for both sides remain, take part in discussion, and vote as any other members. The chair then states the question on the finding as to the guilt of the accused, as follows: “The question before the assembly [or “the committee”] is: Is Mr. N guilty of the charge and specifications preferred against him?” Each of the specifications, and then the charge, is read, opened to debate, and voted on separately—although the several votes can be delayed to be taken on a single ballot.

The specifications or the charge can be amended to conform to facts brought out in the trial—but not in such a way as to find the accused guilty of a charge not wholly included within charge(s) for which he has been tried.

If the accused is found guilty of none of the specifications relating to a charge, he is automatically found not guilty of the charge, and no vote is taken on it (or, if the vote on the charge was already taken on the same ballot as the vote on the specifications, the vote on the charge is ignored). If the accused is found guilty of one or more of the specifications but not of the charge, and if a lower degree or level of the offense charged is defined in the organization’s bylaws, adopted code of conduct, or similar set of rules, then such a lesser charge may be moved and voted on.

If the accused is found guilty, the chair announces that the next item of business is the determination of the penalty. One of the managers for the society usually makes a motion for a penalty the managers feel appropriate, although any member may move that a specific penalty be imposed; this motion is debatable and amendable. On the demand of a single member both the question of guilt and the question of the penalty must be voted on by ballot.

The usual possible penalties for an officer are censure or removal from office, although in special circumstances others may be appropriate (for example, to repay into the society’s treasury funds that the officer has been found guilty of misappropriating, perhaps with an added fine). For all of these, including removal from office, a majority vote is required. Penalties appropriate in disciplinary proceedings against members are discussed in 61:2. For expulsion, a two-thirds vote is required.

f) After voting is completed, the accused is called back into the hall and advised of the result.

63:34 A member who votes for a finding of guilt at a trial should be morally convinced, on the basis of the evidence he has heard, that the accused is guilty.

63:35 Assembly’s Review of a Trial Committee’s Findings. If the trial has been held before a trial committee instead of the assembly of the society, this committee reports to the assembly in executive session (9) the results of its trial of the case, with resolutions—in cases where its finding is one of guilty—covering the penalty it recommends that the society impose. The report is prepared in writing and includes, to the extent possible without disclosing confidential information which should be kept within the committee, a summary of the basis for the committee’s finding.

63:36 Unless the report exonerates the accused, he is then permitted—personally, through counsel, or both, as he prefers—to make a statement of the case, after which the committee is given the opportunity to present a statement in rebuttal. The accused—and defense counsel if not member(s)—then leave the room, and the assembly acts upon the resolutions submitted by the committee. The members of the committee remain and vote on the case the same as other members of the society.

63:37 Under this procedure, the assembly can decline to impose any penalty, notwithstanding the trial committee’s recommendation; or it can reduce the recommended penalty; but it cannot increase the penalty. The assembly cannot impose a penalty if the trial committee has found the accused not guilty.
Committee on Discipline

63:38 In some professional societies and other organizations where particular aspects of discipline are of special importance, the handling of such matters is simplified by providing in the bylaws for a standing Committee on Discipline (see 50, 56). Its prescribed duties are normally to be alert to disciplinary problems, to investigate them, to introduce all necessary resolutions, and—in event of a trial—to manage the case for the society.

63:39 This committee may also have the duty of hearing the actual trial, in which case it should be large enough that a subcommittee can perform the confidential investigation as described in 63:8–12. Under the latter practice, the full Committee on Discipline adopts the charge and specifications, and the chairman of the committee sends the citation to the accused and presides at the trial, which is conducted just as it would be if held before the assembly. It is generally best not to empower the committee to impose a penalty, however, but to require it to report its recommended disciplinary measures to the society for action, just as in the case of a special committee to hear a trial.

63:40 In organizations where disciplinary matters may arise with some frequency, the system of having a Committee on Discipline has the advantages of not unduly inconveniencing the society, and of promoting the avoidance of scandal and the settlement of disciplinary problems without an actual trial.
Footnotes to Chapter XX

1. It is also possible to adopt a motion of censure without formal disciplinary procedures.

2. See, however, Remedies for Abuse of Authority by the Chair in a Meeting, 62:2ff.

3. An appeal is not allowed from the chair's ruling on a question about which there cannot possibly be two reasonable opinions (24:3(2)(b)) and is not in order in certain other circumstances (24:3(2)(a), 24:5–8), but in such cases the chair must announce that the appeal is not in order for the relevant reason, not simply ignore the appeal (unless the appeal is dilatory as explained in 39:1–4).

4. Once such a motion is made and seconded, the chair must state it, and then, since it refers to the presiding officer in a capacity not shared in common with other members, the chair must be turned over to the secretary or secretary pro tem. The new occupant of the chair then presides during consideration of the motion to declare the chair vacant and proceed to elect a new chairman. The new occupant continues to preside until the result of the vote on that motion is announced and, if it is adopted, until the election of the new chairman is completed. If the presiding officer refuses or fails to turn the chair over as required, and ignores a point of order on the issue (or ignores, or does not abide by the decision on, an appeal of a ruling on the point of order) the motion to declare the chair vacant may be put to a vote by its maker as explained in 62:8–9. In such a case, the motion is undebatable.

5. This is true even if the bylaws contain a provision to the effect that the president shall preside at all meetings, since such a provision is clearly in the nature of a rule of order, which may be suspended even if in the bylaws. See 2:21.

6. The assembly normally cannot proceed to fill the vacancy created by removal of an officer immediately, since notice is a requirement (see 32:7). If the president is removed from office, the vice-president thereby succeeds to the presidency, creating a vacancy in the vice-presidency which requires notice to fill. If it is desired to fill a vacancy that may be created by removal, previous notice may be given in advance of the meeting at which removal is contemplated that, should removal of the officer occur, the resulting vacancy may be filled at that meeting.
7. It is possible for a disciplinary proceeding to affect an individual’s status both as an officer and as a member, and a resolution preferring charges (see 63:13–63:20) may combine notice to show cause both why the accused should not be removed from office and why he should not be expelled from membership. If the bylaws make membership a required qualification for office (see 47:2), then expulsion from membership necessarily results in removal from office.

8. If the investigating committee submits a report that does not recommend preferral of charges, it is within the power of the assembly nevertheless to adopt a resolution that does prefer charges. It is also possible for the assembly to adopt instructions to the committee specifying when it is to report, or even to adopt a motion to Discharge a Committee (36) and thereafter to consider a resolution preferring charges; but in order to provide due process to the accused, any such instructions must allow the investigating committee a reasonable and adequate time to investigate and prepare a report, and the committee may be discharged only if it has had such time yet has failed to complete its report.

9. The assembly of a society may call a special meeting for purposes of conducting a trial and determining a punishment, even if the bylaws fail to provide for special meetings or the designation in the bylaws of those who can call special meetings does not include the assembly.

10. The assembly may vary the procedures described here through adoption of special rules of order for disciplinary proceedings either by previous notice and a two-thirds vote or by a vote of a majority of the entire membership.

11. However, any member may address the chair to appeal a ruling.

I. CHART FOR DETERMINING WHEN EACH SUBSIDIARY OR PRIVILEGED MOTION IS IN ORDER

In the chart on the two following pages, the privileged, subsidiary, and main motions are listed in order of rank, the motion at the top taking precedence over all the others, and each of the remaining ones taking precedence over all those below it. A main motion is in order only when no other motion is pending.

When a given one of the motions listed is immediately pending, then: (a) any other motion appearing above it in the list is in order, unless a condition stated opposite the other motion causes that motion to be out of order; and (b) motions listed below the given motion which are not already pending are out of order (except for the application of Amend or the Previous Question to certain motions ranking above them as noted in the next paragraph; see also Standard Characteristic 2, 12:7(2) and 16:5(2)).

With respect to arrowed lines in the chart, (___) indicates applicability of all of the subsidiary motions to the main motion; (_____), applicability of Amend to certain other motions in the order of precedence; (_______), applicability of Limit or Extend Limits of Debate to debatable motions in the order of precedence; and (_______), applicability of the Previous Question to the motions that are debatable or amendable.

SAMPLE RULES FOR ELECTRONIC MEETINGS

INTRODUCTION

As noted in the main text of this book, there is an increasing preference among some organizations to transact business at “electronic meetings,” in which some or all of the members communicate through electronic means such as the Internet or by telephone. Regarding the proper authorization of such meetings, and their limitations, see Electronic Meetings, 9:30–36, wherein it is stated that when electronic meetings are authorized—which, in the case of a board or other assembly, always requires a bylaw provision—additional rules should be adopted to govern their conduct. Depending on the nature of the rules and the specific provisions of the bylaws, such additional rules may be placed in the bylaws, adopted as special rules of order or standing rules, or contained in instructions from a superior body.

The additional rules appropriate to a particular organization’s electronic meetings may depend on many factors, such as the number of members in the organization, the nature and complexity of the business to be transacted, the organization’s need for confidentiality in its proceedings, and the funds available. Four sets of sample rules for electronic meetings designed to meet various needs are provided here, along with bylaw provisions sufficient to authorize such meetings. These rules should, of course, be adapted as necessary for the particular circumstances of each group and the technology the organization finds most useful. It is therefore advisable to review all four sets of rules, as some particular rules from one set may prove appropriate for adaptation together with some or all of the rules from another. It is also worth noting that although the rules below are written on the assumption they would be used by a board, electronic meetings could be authorized for another type of assembly or for a committee, and the sample rules could be adapted accordingly.

Consider an organization governed by bylaws whose relevant provisions are patterned directly on the Sample Bylaws in this book (56:58–67). Each of the four sets of sample rules below shows how the organization might amend Article VI of the bylaws to authorize the executive board to conduct business by a particular type of electronic meeting. In each case, the sample bylaw provisions are followed by a number of additional rules that may be helpful in governing the conduct of that type of meeting.

The sample rules in Scenarios A, B, C, and D below are designed for allowing the board to make use of the following types of electronic communication to conduct meetings, respectively:

A. Full-featured Internet, or combination Internet/telephone, meeting services that integrate audio (and optionally video), text, and voting capabilities.
B. Telephone meetings, with Internet services for conducting secret votes and sharing documents.
C. A speakerphone in the meeting room to allow members who are not physically present to participate by telephone.
D. Telephone meetings without Internet support (and without any central meeting room).

For Scenarios A and B, it is assumed that electronic meetings will be the usual method for conducting business, with in-person meetings held only when ordered by the board or all of its members. In Scenario C, it is assumed that a physical meeting space is designated for every meeting, but individual board members may participate by telephone. In Scenario D, in-person meetings are assumed as the norm, but telephone meetings may be ordered as needed.
SCENARIO A: USE OF FULL-FEATURED INTERNET MEETING SERVICES

In this scenario, the board makes use of Internet meeting services with integrated audio (and optionally video), text, and voting capabilities as the usual meeting method, with in-person meetings when ordered by the board or all of its members.

Internet meeting services adapted to the needs of deliberative assemblies vary somewhat in the names given to their features and in how they are set up and arranged. Typically, a full-featured Internet meeting is set up as follows:

Each participant, using his or her own computer or other device, can view the current list of all participants—with an indication of which member has the floor or which members are seeking recognition by the chair—and can seek recognition, submit motions in writing, view the text of pending motions, vote, and view the results of a vote. The sample rules given below require that anonymous voting be supported (in other words, that a member who is properly logged in to a meeting can cast an “electronic ballot” that does not identify that member’s vote as belonging to him or her), and they also assume that non-anonymous votes can be taken, as well.

Audio transmissions can be integrated directly via the Internet, so that participants listen and speak through microphones and speakers or headsets at their computers or other devices. Alternatively, there might be a conference call, with access codes for the participants, that is dialed into by ordinary telephone but is also linked to the Internet meeting interface, so that participants speak and listen by telephone, but use the Internet service (which remains aware of the identity of each caller) for all other features. If the participants have webcams for transmitting live video, a portion of the screen might show their faces, or else (perhaps depending on the total number of participants) just those of the chair and/or the person speaking in debate or presenting a report.

The organizers of the meeting also have access to a control panel for use by the chair, the Recording Secretary, and their assistants, which enables them to perform their duties during the meeting, such as ensuring that the text of the pending question is properly displayed, assigning the floor to a member, opening and closing the polls for taking a vote, controlling the camera view, etc.

Assuming an organization’s bylaws are patterned directly on the Sample Bylaws in this book, the organization can authorize the board to meet by use of an Internet meeting service with features like those described above by adding the following sections to Article VI (56:64):
Sample Bylaw Provisions for Scenario A

Section 4. Meetings Held Electronically. Except as otherwise provided in these bylaws, meetings of the Board shall be conducted through use of Internet meeting services designated by the President that support anonymous voting and support visible displays identifying those participating, identifying those seeking recognition to speak, showing (or permitting the retrieval of) the text of pending motions, and showing the results of votes. These electronic meetings of the Board shall be subject to all rules adopted by the Board, or by the Society, to govern them, which may include any reasonable limitations on, and requirements for, Board members’ participation. Any such rules adopted by the Board shall supersede any conflicting rules in the parliamentary authority, but may not otherwise conflict with or alter any rule or decision of the Society. An anonymous vote conducted through the designated Internet meeting service shall be deemed a ballot vote, fulfilling any requirement in the bylaws or rules that a vote be conducted by ballot.

Section 5. Meetings Held in Person. Some particular meeting or meetings of the Board shall be held in person either (a) when the President or First Vice-President has obtained written consent for this from every Board member, or (b) when ordered by the Board, by a two-thirds vote with previous notice of a motion to do so having been given.1

The board may then find it helpful to adopt rules such as the following:
Sample Rules for Electronic Meetings for Scenario A

1. Login information. The Corresponding Secretary shall send by e-mail to every member of the Board, at least [time] before each meeting, the time of the meeting, the URL and codes necessary to connect to the Internet meeting service, and, as an alternative and backup to the audio connection included within the Internet service, the phone number and access code(s) the member needs to participate aurally by telephone. The Corresponding Secretary shall also include a copy of, or a link to, these rules.

2. Login time. The Recording Secretary shall schedule Internet meeting service availability to begin at least 15 minutes before the start of each meeting.

3. Signing in and out. Members shall identify themselves as required to sign in to the Internet meeting service, and shall maintain Internet and audio access throughout the meeting whenever present, but shall sign out upon any departure before adjournment.

4. Quorum calls. The presence of a quorum shall be established by audible roll call at the beginning of the meeting. Thereafter, the continued presence of a quorum shall be determined by the online list of participating members, unless any member demands a quorum count by audible roll call. Such a demand may be made following any vote for which the announced totals add to less than a quorum.

5. Technical requirements and malfunctions. Each member is responsible for his or her audio and Internet connections; no action shall be invalidated on the grounds that the loss of, or poor quality of, a member’s individual connection prevented participation in the meeting.

6. Forced disconnections. The chair may cause or direct the disconnection or muting of a member’s connection if it is causing undue interference with the meeting. The chair’s decision to do so, which is subject to an undebatable appeal that can be made by any member, shall be announced during the meeting and recorded in the minutes.

7. Assignment of the floor. To seek recognition by the chair, a member shall… [specifying the exact method appropriate to the Internet meeting service being used]. Upon assigning the floor to a member, the chair shall clear the online queue of members who had been seeking recognition. To claim preference in recognition, another member who had been seeking recognition may promptly seek recognition again, and the chair shall recognize the member for the limited purpose of determining whether that member is entitled to preference in recognition.

8. Interrupting a member. A member who intends to make a motion or request that under the rules may interrupt a speaker shall use [the designated feature] for so indicating, and shall thereafter wait a reasonable time for the chair’s instructions before attempting to interrupt the speaker by voice.

9. Motions submitted in writing. A member intending to make a main motion, to offer an amendment, or to propose instructions to a committee, shall, before or after being recognized, post the motion in writing to the online area designated by the Recording Secretary for this purpose, preceded by the member’s name and a number corresponding to how many written motions the member has so far posted during the meeting (e.g., “SMITH 3:”; “FRANCES JONES 2:"). Use of the online area designated by the Recording Secretary for this purpose shall be restricted to posting the text of intended motions.

10. Display of motions. The Recording Secretary shall designate an online area exclusively for the display of the immediately pending question and other relevant pending questions (such as the main motion, or the pertinent part of the main motion, when an amendment to it is immediately pending); and, to the extent feasible, the Recording Secretary, or any assistants appointed by him or her for this purpose, shall cause such questions, or any other documents that are currently before the meeting for action or information, to be displayed therein until disposed of.

11. Voting. Votes shall be taken by the anonymous voting feature of the Internet meeting service, unless a different method is ordered by the Board or required by the rules. When required or ordered, other permissible methods of voting are by electronic roll call or by audible roll call. The chair’s announcement of the voting result shall include the number of members voting on each side of the question and the number, if any, who explicitly respond to acknowledge their presence without casting a vote. Business may also be conducted by unanimous consent.

12. Video display. [For groups using video, but in which the number of participants is too large for all to be displayed simultaneously:] The chair, the Recording Secretary, or their assistants shall cause a video of the chair to be displayed throughout the meeting, and shall also cause display of the video of the member currently recognized to speak or report.
SCENARIO B: TELECONFERENCE WITH INTERNET VOTING AND DOCUMENT SHARING

Assuming an organization’s bylaws are patterned directly on the Sample Bylaws in this book, the organization can authorize the board to meet by teleconference, using Internet services for conducting secret votes and sharing documents, by adding the following section to Article VI (56:64):
Sample Bylaw Provisions for Scenario B

Section 4. Meetings Held Electronically. Meetings of the Board shall be conducted by telephone, except that some particular meeting or meetings shall be held in person either (a) when the President or First Vice-President has obtained written consent for this from every Board member, or (b) when ordered by the Board, by a two-thirds vote with previous notice of a motion to do so having been given. Telephone meetings of the Board shall be subject to all rules adopted by the Board, or by the Society, to govern such meetings, which may include any reasonable limitations on, and requirements for, Board members’ participation, and which shall specify how motions may be submitted in writing via the Internet. Any such rules adopted by the Board shall supersede any conflicting rules in the parliamentary authority, but may not otherwise conflict with or alter any rule or decision of the Society. At telephone meetings, any ballot votes required under the rules or ordered by the Board shall be conducted electronically, using an Internet service that supports anonymous voting.

The board may then find it helpful to adopt rules such as the following to govern the conduct of telephone meetings. Note that the requirement in Rules 1 and 2 of a unique access code for each member provides greater assurance that only members and others specifically invited can participate than do the sample rules given for Scenarios C and D. (Cf. 9:36.)
Sample Rules for Electronic Meetings for Scenario B

1. Login information. The Corresponding Secretary shall send by e-mail to every member of the Board, at least [time] before each meeting, the time of the meeting, the phone number and unique access code that that member needs to connect to the telephone conference call, and the URLs and login information for the online survey tool and file-hosting service. The Corresponding Secretary shall also include a copy of, or a link to, these rules.

2. Call-in time. The Recording Secretary shall schedule a telephone conference call, using a free service that provides each user a unique access code, to begin 15 minutes before the start of each meeting. The Recording Secretary shall also establish accounts with a free online survey tool that supports anonymous surveys, and with a free file-hosting service.

3. Technical requirements. For the purposes of electronic ballot voting and file sharing, members shall maintain Internet access during the meeting.

4. Arrival announcements. Members shall announce themselves at the first opportunity after joining the telephone conference call, but may not interrupt a speaker to do so.

5. Departure announcements. Members who leave the telephone conference call before adjournment shall announce their departure, but may not interrupt a speaker to do so.

6. Quorum calls. The presence of a quorum shall be established by roll call at the beginning of the meeting and on the demand of any member. Such a demand may be made following the departure of any member, or following the taking of any vote for which the announced totals add to less than a quorum.

7. Obtaining the floor. To seek recognition by the chair, a member shall address the chair and state his or her own name.

8. Motions submitted in writing. Members may submit motions to the chair in writing by uploading them to the file-hosting service and notifying the chair of the URL or download link needed to access the file.

9. Voting. All votes shall be taken by roll call, unless required under the rules or ordered by the Board to be taken by ballot. When a vote is taken by roll call, only the number of votes on each side and the number of members present but not voting shall be entered in the minutes, unless the Board orders a fully recorded roll-call vote. Ballot votes shall be taken electronically, as follows: The Recording Secretary shall post the question using the online survey tool, and the chair shall then alert the members that the polls are open, providing any additional information that members need to cast their votes online. The polls shall be closed not less than two minutes after they have been opened by the chair. Business may also be conducted by unanimous consent.

10. Technical malfunctions. Each member is responsible for his or her connection to the telephone conference call and to the Internet; no action shall be invalidated on the grounds that the loss of, or poor quality of, a member’s individual connection prevented participation in the meeting.

11. Forced disconnections. The chair may order the Recording Secretary to disconnect or mute a member’s connection if it is causing undue interference with the telephone conference call. The chair’s decision to do so, which is subject to an undebatable appeal that can be made by any member, shall be announced during the meeting and recorded in the minutes.
SCENARIO C: SOME MEMBERS PARTICIPATE BY SPEAKERPHONE IN OTHERWISE FACE-TO-FACE MEETING

An organization may wish to permit its board to hold meetings in which some members are physically present while others participate by telephone.

Assume an organization’s bylaws are patterned directly on the Sample Bylaws in this book, and assume that no rule of the organization requires votes of the executive board to be taken by ballot. By adding the following provision to Section 3 of Article VI of the bylaws (56:64), the organization can grant board members the right to participate in meetings by telephone, subject to rules adopted by the board:
Sample Bylaw Provisions for Scenario C

Board meetings shall be held at a central location, but Board members who are not present in person shall have the right to participate by telephone, subject to any limitations established in rules adopted by the Board to govern such participation.

The board may then find it helpful to adopt rules such as the following:
Sample Rules for Electronic Meetings for Scenario C

1. Login information. The Corresponding Secretary shall send by e-mail to every member of the Board, at least [time] before each meeting, the time and location of the meeting and the phone number and any access code needed to connect to the telephone conference call. The Corresponding Secretary shall also include a copy of, or a link to, these rules.

2. Call-in time. The Recording Secretary shall schedule a telephone conference call, using equipment provided by the Society or a free service, to begin 15 minutes before the start of each meeting.

3. Meeting-room equipment. The society shall provide a speakerphone at each meeting, which the Recording Secretary shall connect to the telephone conference call at least 5 minutes before the start of the meeting.

4. Location of chairman. The chair of the meeting must be present in the meeting room.

5. Arrival announcements. Members who participate in the meeting by phone shall announce themselves at the first opportunity after joining the telephone conference call, but may not interrupt a speaker to do so.

6. Departure announcements. Members who leave the telephone conference call or the meeting room before adjournment shall announce their departure, but may not interrupt a speaker to do so.

7. Quorum calls. The presence of a quorum shall be established by roll call at the beginning of the meeting and on the demand of any member. Such a demand may be made following the departure of any member or following the taking of any vote for which the announced totals add to less than a quorum.

8. Obtaining the floor. To seek recognition by the chair, a member shall address the chair and state his or her own name.

9. Motions submitted in writing. Members who participate in the meeting by phone may not submit motions in writing during the meeting, but are entitled to make motions orally. Members may, however, submit motions in writing by sending them at least [time] before the meeting to the Corresponding Secretary, who shall send any such presubmitted motions by e-mail to all members in advance of the meeting and shall provide copies to the members present in person at the meeting.

10. Voting methods. All votes shall be taken by roll call. Unless the Board orders a fully recorded roll-call vote, only the number of votes on each side and the number of members present but not voting (including members participating by phone) shall be entered in the minutes. Business may also be conducted by unanimous consent.

11. Loss of meeting-room connection. Any business transacted while the meeting-room speakerphone is disconnected from the telephone conference call is null and void, except that the members present in the meeting room at such a time may take those actions that are in order in the absence of a quorum.

12. Other technical malfunctions and requirements. Each member is responsible for his or her connection to the telephone conference call; no action shall be invalidated on the grounds that the loss of, or poor quality of, a member’s individual connection prevented participation in the meeting.
13. Forced disconnections. The chair may order the Recording Secretary to disconnect or mute a member’s connection if it is causing undue interference with the telephone conference call. The chair’s decision to do so, which is subject to an undebatable appeal that can be made by any member, shall be announced during the meeting and recorded in the minutes.
SCENARIO D: TELEPHONE MEETING WITHOUT INTERNET SUPPORT

Assume an organization’s bylaws are patterned directly on the Sample Bylaws in this book, and assume that no rule of the organization requires votes of the board to be taken by ballot. By adding the following section to Article VI of the bylaws (56:64), the organization can authorize the board to meet by telephone conference call when desired, without using Internet services.
Sample Bylaw Provisions for Scenario D

Section 4. Meetings Held Electronically. Meetings of the Board may be conducted by telephone (a) when the President or First Vice-President has obtained written consent for this from a majority of the Board members; (b) when so directed by the Board; or (c) in the case of special meetings, when so directed by those calling the special meeting. Telephone meetings of the Board shall be subject to all rules adopted by the Board, or by the Society, to govern such meetings, which may include any reasonable limitations on, and requirements for, Board members’ participation. Any such rules adopted by the Board shall supersede any conflicting rules in the parliamentary authority, but may not otherwise conflict with or alter any rule or decision of the Society.

The board may then find it helpful to adopt rules such as the following to govern the conduct of telephone meetings:
Sample Rules for Electronic Meetings for Scenario D

1. Connection information. The Corresponding Secretary shall send by e-mail to every member of the Board, at least [time] before each meeting, the time of the meeting and the phone number and access code needed to connect to the telephone conference call.

2. Call-in time. The Recording Secretary shall schedule a telephone conference call, using a free service, to begin 15 minutes before the start of each telephone meeting.

3. Arrival announcements. Members shall announce themselves at the first opportunity after joining the telephone conference call, but may not interrupt a speaker to do so.

4. Departure announcements. Members who leave the telephone conference call before adjournment shall announce their departure, but may not interrupt a speaker to do so.

5. Quorum calls. The presence of a quorum shall be established by roll call at the beginning of the meeting and on the demand of any member. Such a demand may be made following the departure of any member, or following the taking of any vote for which the announced totals add to less than a quorum.

6. Obtaining the floor. To seek recognition by the chair, a member shall address the chair and state his or her own name.

7. Motions submitted in writing. Members may not submit motions in writing during the meeting, but are entitled to make motions orally. Members may, however, submit motions in writing by sending them at least [time] before the meeting to the Corresponding Secretary, who shall send any such pre-submitted motions by e-mail to all members in advance of the meeting.

8. Voting methods. All votes shall be taken by roll call. Unless the Board orders a fully recorded roll-call vote, only the number of votes on each side and the number of members present but not voting shall be entered in the minutes. Business may also be conducted by unanimous consent.

9. Technical malfunctions and requirements. Each member is responsible for his or her connection to the telephone conference call; no action shall be invalidated on the grounds that the loss of, or poor quality of, a member’s individual connection prevented participation in the meeting.

10. Forced disconnections. The chair may order the Recording Secretary to disconnect or mute a member’s connection if it is causing undue interference with the telephone conference call. The chair’s decision to do so, which is subject to an undebatable appeal that can be made by any member, shall be announced during the meeting and recorded in the minutes.

3. In practice, motion is usually made by the reporting member of a committee, in which case it does not require a second.

4. Debate on motion must be confined to its merits only, and cannot go into the main question except as necessary for debate of the immediately pending question.

5. A negative vote on this motion can be reconsidered only until such time as progress in business or debate has made it essentially a new question.

6. B if committee is discharged from consideration of question that was pending at time of referral and was referred by subsidiary motion to Commit; M/B if subject was referred by a main motion (see 36:10–11).

7. See 57:15. This motion can be made as a main motion, as an amendment to enacting words, or as an incidental motion, and the same rules apply.

8. See, however, 37:9(2) and 37:30ff.

9. A negative vote on this motion can be reconsidered only until such time as either (a) progress in business or debate has made it essentially a new question, or (b) something urgent has arisen that was not known when the assembly rejected the motion.

10. The vote on a motion ordering that the polls be closed or reopened at a specified time can be reconsidered at any time before the order has been carried out.

GENERAL HENRY M. ROBERT, who gave his name to the book that has brought order to millions of meetings, was a sparely built but gregarious and determined U.S. Army engineer officer of Huguenot descent born May 2, 1837. Led to the study of parliamentary law over a number of years by experiences in civic and church organizations, he published the first edition of Robert’s Rules of Order on February 19, 1876. After his retirement from the army in 1901, he practiced consulting engineering and devoted the last decade of his life to writing on parliamentary procedure. He died on May 11, 1923.

SARAH CORBIN ROBERT (1886–1972) was the daughter-in-law of the original author and the trustee of Robert’s Rules of Order Revised, and she headed the authorship team that produced the most extensive general revision of the work, the 1970 edition of Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised.

HENRY M. ROBERT III (1920–2019), a grandson of General Robert, began his association with Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised when he assisted his mother, Sarah Corbin Robert, in writing the 1970 edition and participated in writing six editions, culminating in this 12th edition. He held degrees in the Great Books Program of St. John’s College in Annapolis and in physics (Laval University, Quebec). He served as parliamentarian of the National Association of Parliamentarians and multiple other national and international organizations.

He served as president of the National Association of Parliamentarians from 1979 to 1981 and also served as its parliamentarian. He

DANIEL H. HONEMANN, a Maryland attorney, now retired, was a partner in the law firm of Whiteford, Taylor & Preston, LLP. He is a graduate of McDaniel College and received his law degree from the University of Maryland School of Law. Mr. Honemann also participated in writing the 9th, 10th, and 11th editions.

THOMAS J. BALCH is a practicing parliamentarian who formerly acted as a Washington, D.C.–based lobbyist and legislative analyst. He has served as parliamentarian of the National Association of Parliamentarians and as president of the American College of Parliamentary Lawyers. An attorney licensed to practice in Illinois, he is a graduate of Williams College and the New York University School of Law. He also participated in writing the 10th and 11th editions.

DANIEL E. SEABOLD is a mathematics professor at Hofstra University specializing in logic and set theory. He is a graduate of McDaniel College and received his doctorate in mathematics from the University of California at Berkeley. He also participated in writing the 11th edition.

SHMUELM G. GERBER, a professional parliamentarian and copyeditor, received his bachelor’s degree in computer science from the College of Staten Island (City University of New York). He also participated in writing the 11th edition.
